Happiness and Unhappiness.

At the Christmas-tree festivities at Concord church, on Christmas eve, Mr. W. B. Brown delivered the following address, which is published in accordance with a resolution adopted by the citizens there assembled. Mr. Brown said:

When we look around us and see such a vast multitude of beautiful objects as God in his wisdom saw fit to create, it causes the mind—at least the mind of the thinker—to wonder how it can be that any one situated as we are, surrounded by everything lovely, grand and magnificent, could be otherwise than happy. And perhaps, of the almost innumerable varieties and quantities of subjects about which to write, there has been as little written or said on any other subject as on the one, "How to be happy."

But did you ever in your silent meditations reverse your thoughts of happiness and try to see for a few moments if there is any way possible that you could devise "how to be happy?" All the way through the cyclone of lives, from early childhood to the time when the oldest must bid adieu to mortality, there are continually transpiring scenes which, judging from their actions, sayings and misery, they must have some almost infallible guide to lead them on their way down to the surging billows of the sea of unhappiness.

Go if you will to the home circle and observe the indifference of actions toward one another, where love should be the golden rule of feeling. Members of the home circle, whether old or young, did you ever wonder how you might bring unhappiness into your homes? If you have not, try carelessness, indifference, be unconcerned, and if you do not succeed, then resolve that unhappiness must forever be banished from your land.

Young gentleman, or lady, did you ever imagine that on account of good standing in the circle of fashion, on account of having a high standing in society, so far as morals, virtue, good name and splendid influence you have over your companions, or on account of any literary acquirements, or did you ever imagine that on account of your situation in the way of wealth, with all the pleasures and conveniences which it affords, that some were jealous of your possessions, and in all ways possible maltreat you, by slurring you and saying all manner of evil about you falsely, simply because they are not situated as well as you are? Those who belong to this class are on a sure road to unhappiness. Young student, did you ever come to the conclusion that your teacher did not use you with the same degree of allowance that he did your fellow-schoolmates? Did you ever decide that you were not as highly favored by your Creator with mental faculties, or not as talented as others? that you might as well give up, for it was never intended for your mind to be highly developed, and that you will grow to be what you were intended to be? If you have ever been over this road, then you surely know another way to unhappiness.

Youths, did you ever venture so far away from the commands of your parents as to lose respect for their entreaties, and press onward in bad company down the road to ruin until you could say, "I don't care?" Then you have found another bitter cup of misery.

If we turn the wheel of life around until we come to the discontented, we see some of the most unhappy mortals that ever trod upon God's footstool. If fortune has not, in the respect of health, friends and knowledge, smiled so propiciously upon you as it has upon some of thy fellow beings, then:

Grumble! oh grumble at all in your way,
Grumble, and you will receive your pay.
A pay almost immeasureless
Dealt out in unhappiness.

Again, place millions of dollars with the disrespect of honorable people in one road of life, and in another place the respect of all good people with all the greatest depths of poverty, and for me I will choose the latter; yea verily, by a thousand preferences.

There are those who seem as if all the powers imaginable were brought to bear against their happiness, yet happy they would be. To be happy, requires to a certain extent, a feeling of "I don't care" in some respects, but not in all—a few of which are these:

1st. Not to care for the possessions of thy neighbor in whatsoever way he may be endowed, or in other words, what is your neighbor's do not covet.

2nd. Say I don't care when bright and promising prospects have caused you to build castles in the air, only to be dashed to the ground when thy faith hath it almost within your grasp.

3rd. When in a contest for position in your school room or any other place, and you have been fairly defeated, then bring to bear your manhood and with all the boldness in your power say: "I don't care?"

4th. When misplaced confidence has led you astray and you have found your mistake, then do not pine in sadness but say—"I don't care?"

5th. If you have been so unfortunate as to secure unjust compliments from some slanderous tongue, which honorable people of society do not believe, then if you can say truthfully, "I don't care," you surely are happy.

If there is anything true, this surely is: "Life is what we make it." This being the case, then let us make ours a happy one, for we surely have it in our power. Look at the happiest man among mortals. How did he inherit it? Wealth can purchase but little of it, friends are only aids toward it, and health is naught but a product of it. Then let us who are young aim at a high standard, for we surely will make a higher mark even if we do not come up to the standard, by taking a higher aim than we would by aiming at something low. Then when we depart this life, let us not only leave "footprints on the sand of time," but let us leave our names in stone that cannot soon be erased.

What it Means.

[State Sentinel.]

Don Cameron's election to the chairmanship of the republican national committee simply means that the unscrupulous, desperate element of the republican party is on hand for the race to the White House. The rest of the party can climb inside or into the boot, but top seats are reserved for the same desperate gang which ran the Hayes campaign and formed the corrupt rings around Grant and his two administrations.

Don Cameron fulfils all the conditions required for the chairmanship of the radical committee. The conditions are only two—unscrupulousness and plenty of money. He has them both, and that is the reason why he was selected last week in Washington City, to the exclusion of such men as Mr. Frye, of Maine.

Don Cameron means loaded dice in politics, aces in boot-legs and other leading cards hid away to be played at that stage of the game when all other means have failed.

The republican central committee of Indiana knew just what they were about a few weeks ago when they officially recommended Don Cameron for the position of national chairman. He is pre-eminently the man for the place. We congratulate the political instinct of the radical leaders which led them unerringly to Don Cameron as the hunter's hound leads to the retreat of the hunted game.

Don Cameron's appointment means something more. It means Grant, and Grant means—the Empire. Neither Blaine nor Sherman stand the slightest show for the nomination. It has not been contradicted that Cameron met in Philadelphia last week some of the desperate and unscrupulous members of the old gang which hung around Grant. The radical presidential programme was made up then and there. Grant was determined on, and he will be forced upon the Chicago convention without any doubt.

Perhaps the people of the United States will stand idly by and allow a ring of unscrupulous radical politicians of the old Jacobin stripe, strap them to Grant's triumphal chariot as it rolls through the country, and over its traditions and sacred memories. We do not believe it, however. They surely will awaken in time, and whirl the desperate set out of place and power. If not, as old Bob Toombs, of Georgia, says "After Grant then the empire."

A Crowned Flunky.

Alfonso, the sap-headed young king of Spain, married his second wife one day recently. The most notable statement about the bride is that she has forty pairs of boots, and it is reasonable to suppose that if the twain get into a kicking match, poor little Alfonso will stand a poor chance. Our people take little interest in the weddings of crowned heads, though the flunkies over the water go into spasms over such events. As republicans we cannot rejoice to see prospects for an increase in the baneful tribe of kings and princes. On the contrary, the sooner the whole breed is snuffed out or perishes from its effeminacy, the better the genuine sovereigns of this country will be pleased. If old Spain would throw aside her costly, corrupt and stagnant system of monarchical rule, and quit taxing the people to death to support worthless princes and princesses in idleness and debauchery, she might again rise to be a power in the world. As it is she receives and deserves nothing but the contempt of mankind.

The Third Term Scheme.

[New York Sun.]

It has been in the power of General Grant, at any time within the last four years, to settle by a few plain words all dispute about the third term scheme. If he did not desire or intend to be a candidate again for president, he had only to say so. But while he has allowed some of his shrewd managers to make a qualified denial of any such ambition, he has taken especial pains to utter no word himself which would in any way be embarrassing in his future course.

On the contrary, the third-term movement dates back to the close of Grant's second term, when the rings and plunderers that stood behind it were driven into disgrace and defeat. Even then they did not abandon the game, but set on foot the scheme of a tour around the world, to be followed on the return of their chieftain by organized ovations, all forming part of a preconcerted plan to storm the convention next year, and to procure the nomination upon the pretence of a great popular demand.

When it became evident, in 1875, that the general disgust with his corrupt administration would lead to the certain and crushing defeat of Grant if he contested the nomination at Cincinnati, he wrote a remarkable letter to Gen. Harry White, president of the Pennsylvania republican convention, in which he sought to make a virtue of necessity by withdrawing his name from the list of candidates.

But this enforced withdrawal was not inspired by any respect for the traditions of the presidency, or for the unwritten law against more than two terms prescribed by the example of Washington and of all his successors. Quite the reverse, for Grant seized upon that occasion to announce distinctly that a third term was in no sense forbidden, and that it might be a great blessing. Here are his words:

"Now for the third term. The question of the number of terms allowed to any one executive can only come up fairly in the shape of a proposition to amend the constitution, a shape in which all political parties can participate, fixing the length of time, or the number of terms for which any one person shall be eligible for the office of president. Until such an amendment is adopted, the people cannot be restricted in their choice by resolution further than they are now restricted as to age, nativity, etc. IT MAY HAPPEN IN THE FUTURE HISTORY OF THE COUNTRY THAT TO CHANGE AN EXECUTIVE BECAUSE HE HAS BEEN EIGHT YEARS IN OFFICE WILL PROVE UNFORTUNATE, IF NOT DISASTROUS."

This was the sentiment of Grant more than four years ago, before he had communed with royalty abroad, and become a devoted admirer of Bismarck's system of government, based upon a standing army of half a million. He has come home confirmed in the belief that a strong government is necessary for a law abiding people, and that the models of the old world are well adapted to our condition and progress.

Gen. Grant is the only man who ever had the disposition to say that an election to the presidency was a sacrifice. He says in this letter of May 29, 1875, to Gen. Harry White, referring to his first nomination: "I was made to believe that the public good called me to make the sacrifice." Again, in the same letter, he says: "But it must be remembered that all the sacrifice, except that of comfort, has been made in accepting the first term."

Who induced him to give up the life position of general of the army, which, he says, he liked and desired to retain? He had full and exclusive control of the place, and nothing but the love of power and inclination to use it as he did after his election induced him to seek the presidency. It is no secret now that he was willing to accept a nomination from either party, and that, having voted for Buchanan in 1856, he was more inclined to the democrats than to the republicans. But for the majorities in congress and the money power he would have been a bourbon today. He intrigued for the original nomination, just as he is intriguing now for a third term.

Danger of Boxing the Ears.

A medical writer in the London Telegraph says: Severe ear troubles, and not unfrequently death, have resulted from this, with many teachers, a favorite form of punishment. The tympanum may in many healthy children be easily ruptured by a very slight concussion, and in cases which have recently undermine the [illegible] of scarlet fever or measles, [illegible] mouths or [illegible] [illegible] ulceration [illegible] injuries may alone result to the [illegible] organ, and I have only to-day seen, at the Central Throat and Ear hospital, the case of a boy with an abscess in the ear passage, who had suffered incessant pain for three months, after having been struck by his teacher. These cases might be multiplied indefinitely, and an occasional inquest adds point to the tale.

Mrs. Sol. Barney at Bryan.

Last week while Mrs. Sol. Barney was here for the purpose of identifying the parties who were in jail as the burglars whom she had encountered, and one of whom she had shot at her home in Spencerville, Ind., a few days before, some of our business men conceived the idea of making her a present of a revolver as a testimonial of their appreciation of her coolness and courage, under circumstances that would try the stoutest heart. A fund was raised, a revolver of excellent quality and fine [illegible] was purchased, and at the depot, just before she took the cars for home, was presented to her by the donors, represented by F. G. Fay, who made a few remarks appropriate to the occasion. Mrs. Barney responded substantially as follows: "I thank you and through you the people of Bryan, for their friendly interest. This present will ever be treasured as a memento of your kindness and friendship. Believing, as I do, in the candor and sincerity of those who show me this honor, I accept their present in the spirit in which it is made, and, although I hope never to have occasion to use it, yet, in whatever circumstances I may be placed, I hope to discharge my duty in such manner as not to forfeit the confidence of which I accept this as a token."—Bryan Press.

How Fort Sumter Looks to-day.

[Charleston letter.]

Strolling out after breakfast I made my way to the battery, a pretty little park fronting the Ashley riverside of Charleston harbor, and where gathered the "fair women and brave men of 1861 to witness the bombardment of Fort Sumter. Standing on the broad sea wall which protects the battery from the tides, grim old Sumter can still be seen in its ruins, a monument of more historic interest than any other in our country. It is now used as the adjunct of a light house.

Some few guns are still on its battered walls, but are not kept in condition for service. Sullivan's island, just north of it, on which Fort Moultrie stood, and from which point the rebel batteries poured their destructive fire on Sumter, has been transformed into a village for the residence of Charleston aristocracy, a ferry plying between the city and the island for their convenience. Fort Johnson stands on James' island, south of and opposite to Sumter. A few troops are stationed here. Castle Pinckney [illegible] the appearance of a [illegible] [illegible]. There [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] remaining.

The invention of the [illegible] and [illegible] Family Sewing Machine [illegible] the most [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] extremely low price [illegible] it is very difficult to conceive of [illegible] for domestic use of more or such equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work, [illegible] smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, [illegible] [illegible] and delightful [illegible] of operation, that at [illegible] commends [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] parts are [illegible] strong and durable, and will [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the stitch is the finest of all [illegible] machines made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on [illegible] material down to the finest, so [illegible] as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made. It has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Mrs. Catherine Zell, a married woman of Carlisle, Pa., has just been sentenced to be hanged for the poisoning of Mrs. Mary Kiehl last May. The condemned woman avows her innocence....During the performance in the Park Theater, at New York, a few evenings ago, fire was discovered under the vestibule. The alarm was given, followed by a frantic rush to the doors, but the flames were soon extinguished, and the alarm of the people subsided. Nobody was seriously injured, although at one time there was imminent danger that many would be trampled to death.

A few days ago Stone's shoddy mill at Bennington, Vt., was destroyed by fire, and the proprietor and one of his workmen had to rush through the flames to get out of the mill. Stone was so severely burned that he died soon afterward. The others were badly burned. When Mrs. Stone was informed of the death of her husband she became frantic with grief, and has since become a raving maniac.... Edison will give a public exhibition of his new electric light, at Menlo Park, on New Year's day....Mr. Beecher, in a recent lecture, described the American Bible Society version of the King James Bible as full of errors....Two brick houses fell at Wilmington, Del., and two men were killed, several others being injured.

The first regular train has just passed over the Boston, Hoosac Tunnel and Western railroad....The total value of exports of domestic provisions and tallow for November, $8,900,000; same month in 1878, $6,600,482.

West, Bradley & Cory's corset and suspender factory, in New York, burned the other night. The loss amounted to about $300,000....At Mount Holly, N. J., the dwelling of Matthew Gleason, a laboring man, has been totally destroyed by fire, his three little children perishing in the flames.

THE WEST.

A fire in Bismarck, Dak., which started in a restaurant on main street, burned twelve stores and buildings adjoining the Sherman House, which was saved with difficulty. Loss, $50,000. Insurance small.

Pleuro pneumonia has broken out among the cattle of New Hampshire....Two convicts, manacled together, jumped from a train that was taking them, forty miles per hour, from Newark to Trenton, and were so badly injured that they will probably die.

A schooner, supposed to be the Mary D. Pomeroy, from Crescent City to San Francisco, has been sighted bottom up off Point Reyes. There were on board eight officers and seamen and twelve passengers, all of whom are supposed to be lost....Gen. Adams, of the Ute Indian Commission, has arrived at Denver. He thinks the twelve selected Indians will be delivered, when they will be taken to Fort Leavenworth and tried, and the ones found guilty will be hung.... The Wisconsin State Board of Charities find the charges of cruelty and improper dieting, in the Milwaukee House of Correction, sustained, and recommend a change in the management of the institution.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence are passing the holidays in Chicago, bringing their "Mighty Dollar" with them, and carrying away a great many of the currency dollars of the people of the Garden City. At McVicker's, this week, they produce their old standby, "The Mighty Dollar," and for next week a new play by the same author, called "A Million," is underlined. Mr. Florence's Bardwell Slote is recognized as one of the most successful impersonations of American comedy, while Mrs. Gilfory of Mrs. Florence is a modern Mrs. Malaprop. They are supported by a selected stock company of their own.

The destruction by fire of some of Best's brewery buildings in Milwaukee entailed a loss estimated at $225,000, with an insurance of $208,000....William McKee, senior proprietor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, is dead....Ouray informs Gen. Hatch that the guilty Utes have at last concluded to surrender, with the exception of Jack. Jack is implacable, and thinks of joining Sitting Bull.

A generous Iowa lady—Mrs. Cordelia Miller, of Waterloo—has made a donation of $30,000 to the Garrett Biblical Institute, at Evanston, Ill.....The holiday trade of Chicago was very heavy indeed.

THE SOUTH

Houston, Texas, is without money and credit, and heavily in debt. All the city officers have resigned, and the prisoners in the jail are unguarded. The liabilities of the municipality amount to about $2,000,000.

John Hailman, John Davis and John Roberts undertook to cross the Kentucky river, near Owenton, Ky., in a small flat-boat, and were run down by a ferry-boat and all drowned....The Republicans of New Orleans have formed a stock company for the purpose of publishing a daily paper. Ex-Gov. Michael Hahn will be the editor.

He is to raise funds for the movement in this country.

The particulars are at hand of a terrible catastrophe which occurred on the 2d of December to the steamship Borussia, which left Corunna for New Orleans on the 24th of November with 180 passengers and a crew numbering fifty-four men. The continuation of a terrific storm, and the evident danger that the ship would founder and go to the bottom, produced a panic among the passengers and crew, and the latter proceeded to lower the boats preparatory to abandoning the vessel. In this they acted without the orders of the Captain and other officers, several of whom, together with the greater part of the passengers, remained on board and went down with the ship. A few of the passengers were allowed by the crew to go in the boats, but none of them were saved, as all but one boat were swamped and their occupants drowned, and only six of the crew and three officers, who were picked up three days after leaving the Borussia, have survived to tell the story of the fearful disaster.... WASHINGTON.

The House Committee on Education and Labor have agreed upon the bill introduced by Representative Goode at the last session, and ordered a favorable report to be made to the House. The bill provides that the net proceeds of the sale of public lands shall be forever consecrated and set apart for the education of the people.

An old pioneer has passed away—Charles H. Oakes, of St. Paul, Minn., aged 77 years. He came from his Vermont birthplace in 1821, and from July to December of that year was sutler's clerk at Fort Dearborn, where Chicago now stands. He was present when Gen. Cass received from the Pottawatomies the cession of their lands in Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin.

A Washington correspondent says there is a very determined opposition there to the reappointment of Emory as Governor of Utah, his commission being about to expire. This opposition proceeds from the radical anti-Mormon element, which proposes to wage vigorous war this winter against polygamy.

In the Supreme Court of the United States Senator Edmunds has made a motion to advance the case of Juilliard vs Green, which was entered for the purpose of testing the validity of the act of Congress forbidding the further retirement of legal-tender notes and requiring them to be reissued and kept in circulation.

POLITICAL.

The National Democratic Committee will meet at Washington on the 23d of February....An effort to obtain the present drift of Republican sentiment in Ohio with reference to the Presidency—reports a Cincinnati paper—discloses the fact that Gen. Grant is losing strength as a popular candidate. One hundred Republicans, interviewed in a representative county in the central part of the State, showed the following preferences: For Sherman, 63; for Grant, 25; for Blaine, 8; scattering, 4. A canvass of the same county at the close of the extra session would have shown a preponderance of opinion in favor of Grant. There is, nevertheless, a feeling among Republicans that the candidacy of Grant is inevitable.

A conference of the State Central Committee and Democratic editors of Illinois was held at Chicago last week. The question of establishing a first-class Democratic daily newspaper in Chicago was discussed and referred to the Central Committee. A resolution condemning the action of the Governor and Council of Maine for their action in going behind the face of the returns was discussed at length, but the conference adjourned without reaching a vote. It was resolved to fix the headquarters of the State Executive Committee at Springfield. At a separate meeting of Democratic editors, an organization was formed, to be known as the Democratic Press Association of Illinois, to be composed of all the Democratic editors, publishers and proprietors in the State. W. T. Dowdall, of the Peoria Democrat, was chosen President, and W. H. Snyder, of the Champaign Times, Secretary.

An Augusta (Me.) dispatch reports an indignation meeting of Republicans in that city. Delegations from various parts of the State were present. Ex-Gov. Connor presided. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the action of the Governor and Council, and Senator Blaine then made an address, reviewing the situation in detail.

A very large indignation meeting was held at Bangor, Me., Dec. 19, to express the feeling of the Republicans at the action of the Governor and Council in the matter of the canvass for members of the Legislature, at which Senator Hamlin made an outspoken speech denouncing the proceedings of the canvassers. The following course for the Republicans to pursue is reported to have been recommended by prominent politicians at Washington: "To exhaust every legal means to prevent those persons who have illegally been declared members of the Legislature from taking their seats in that body, and, in case the courts furnish no remedy, proceed to the Capitol and take possession of the chambers, leaving the Fusionists to meet elsewhere, if they choose. The matter would then come under the notice of the National Government, and the Administration could decide which of the State Governments was entitled to recognition."

FOREIGN.

It is said that the reason the Russian police have so little success in discovering the Nihilists is that the evil is hidden where the police do not venture to look. The conspirators are to be found in the drawing rooms of the rich and noble, hence a police in the employ of a court within whose very circle these people carry on their games is powerless against the Nihilists....The discovery, by the British, of Yakoob Khan's buried treasure, at Cabul, tends to throw some light upon the inwardness of the situation in Afghanistan. The hidden treasure consisted of Russian gold, which goes to confirm the suspicions of the British, and discloses from whence came the sinews of war which have enabled the natives to repulse the forces of England at every point....A fruitless attempt has been made at Moscow on the life of Prince Dolgorouki, Governor of Moscow, by the explosion of a petard....A St. Petersburg dispatch reports that the Czar has appointed an Imperial Commission to inquire into the matter of administrative reforms.... CONGRESSIONAL SUMMARY.

A communication was laid before the Senate from the Secretary of the Treasury, on the 18th, concerning the effect upon the revenue of the repeal of the duty on tea and coffee in 1872. A resolution was adopted for an attachment for the persons of witnesses who refused to testify before the Election Committee in the Ingalls case. Petitions were presented for a monument in memory of the battle of Yorktown, and for the appointment of a labor commission. The resolution instructing the Agricultural Committees of both houses to consider the subject of agriculture, and report what ought to be done by the Government to protect the agricultural interests, was adopted. The Pension Appropriation bill was passed. A discussion then occurred upon Mr. Voorhees' resolution to investigate the negro exodus, with Mr. Windom's amendment. After a four hours' debate, Mr. Windom's amendment was voted down and the resolution adopted, by a vote of 27 to 12. Bills introduced: By Mr. Coke, to ascertain losses by Indian depredations; by Mr. Hereford, to continue the Court of Alabama Claims and for the distribution of the money of the Geneva award; by Mr. Logan (by request), to declare the legal effect of the permits granted by the President of the United States to purchase of the products of the insurrectionary States....In the House, Mr. Weaver denied the truth of an article in the New York Tribune alleging him to have been the author of petitions praying that soldiers be paid the difference between the value of gold and greenbacks at the time of their payment. A resolution was adopted authorizing the Committee on Mississippi Levees to make a personal examination of the river. Bills were introduced: To create permanently a deep, wide and straight channel through Sandy Hook, in New York harbor, for the purpose of forming an improved commercial outlet; by Mr. Gibson, to authorize national banks to loan money on real estate, and taking tax off bank circulation; by Mr. Ackley, regulating inter-State traffic. Mr. Townshend, of Illinois, introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to the number of licensed dealers in leaf tobacco, and the amount of internal revenue collected from them during the present fiscal year, which was adopted. Several committee reports upon a number of bills relating to agriculture were referred. The remainder of the day was passed in committee of the whole upon the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Ute Indians for the relinquishment of their reservation in Colorado, and their removal and settlement elsewhere, without reaching a conclusion.

A very short session of the Senate was held on the 19th inst., no quorum being present. The Vice President appointed Messrs. Voorhees, Vance, Pendleton, Windom and Blair a committee to investigate the causes of the negro emigration from Southern to Northern States, and the Senate then adjourned to Jan. 6, 1880. The Secretary of War transmitted to the House a communication from Maj. Houston, of the Engineer Corps, recommending an appropriation of $110,000 for the improvement of Waukegan (Ill.) harbor. Mr. Blackburne, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a report on the revision of the rules. The consideration of the report is made the special order for the 8th of January. The Speaker appointed the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal: King (Chairman), Singleton, Whitthorne, Martin, O. Turner, Nichols, Hutchins, Page, Camper, Frye and Haskell. Committee on the Yorktown Celebration: Messrs. Goode, Hall, Loring, Aldrich, Hawley, Muller, Brigham, Dick, Martin, Talbot, Davis (N. C.), Richardson (S. C.) and Persons. The Speaker made the following committee appointments: Hutchings, Committee on Education and Labor and Expenditures in the Treasury Department, in place of Morrison, resigned; Berry, Committees on Public Lands and Mines and Mining; Davis (Cal.), Committee on Coinage and Expenditures in the Navy Department, in place of Neal (Ohio); Pacheco, Committee on Private Land Claims and Public Expenditures; Thompson (Iowa), Committee on Mines and Mining and Enrolled Bills. Page, Committee on Education and Labor and Expenditures in the Department of Justice; Dunn, Committee on Public Lands, in place of Steele; Steele, Committee on Counting the Electoral Vote, in place of Dunn; [illegible], Committee on Mines and Mining. Mr. Kenna, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill known as the "Steamboat bill," which was made the special order for the second Tuesday in February. Adjourned to Jan. 6.

How Animals Play and Enjoy Themselves.

Small birds chase each other about in play, but perhaps the conduct of the crane and the trumpeter is most extraordinary. The latter stands on one leg, hops about in the most eccentric manner, and throws somersaults. The Americans call it the mad bird, on account of these singularities. Water birds, such as ducks and geese, dive after each other, and clear the surface of the water with outstretched neck and flapping wings, throwing abundant spray around. Deer often engage in sham battle, or trial of strength, by twisting their horns together and pushing for the mastery.

All animals pretending violence in their play stop short of exercising it; the dog takes the greatest precaution not to injure by his bite, and the orang-outang, in wrestling with his keeper, pretends to throw him and makes feints of biting him. Some animals carry out in their play the semblance of catching their prey. Young cats, for instance, leap after every small and moving object, even to the leaves strewed by the autumn wind. They crouch and steal forward, ready for the spring, the body quivering and the tail vibrating with emotion; they bound on the moving leaf and again spring forward to another. Benger saw young jaguars and cougars playing with round substances, like kittens. Birds of the magpie kind are the analogues of monkeys, full of mischief, play and mimicry. There is a story of a tame magpie that was seen busily employed in a garden gathering pebbles, and, with much solemnity and a studied air, burying them in a hole made to receive a post. After dropping each stone it cried "cur ack!" triumphantly, and set off for another. On examining the spot a poor toad was found in the hole, which the magpie was stoning for his amusement.—Passions of Animals.

A FIGHT FOR LIFE.

Battling Unarmed in a Cage with a Siberian Bloodhound.

(From the New York Sun.)

Some time ago ex-Judge Troy, of Brooklyn, became the possessor of the Siberian bloodhound Satan, known to sporting men throughout the country as a terrible fighter. But the dog was so treacherous in his disposition that ex-Judge Troy turned him over to a clerk in his office, Mr. E. Haering, who, having been an athletic performer in a number of circuses, had became accustomed to entering the cages of wild beasts, under the instructions of a number of animal trainers. Mr. Haering agreed to take the dog to his father's premises in Atlantic, near Alabama avenue, East New York, providing that ex-Judge Troy would pay for the animal's keeping. Mr. Troy willingly consented to this, and a cage ten feet long, seven feet wide, and ten feet high, was constructed in Mr. Haering's garden, and Satan was placed in it. One Wednesday, two or three weeks ago, Satan began to howl, as was his custom when he wanted food or water. Haering went into the garden to feed the dog, accompanied by half a dozen persons, curious to see the dog. After giving the dog meat, Haering procured some water, stepped with it into the cage, and then bolted the cage on the outside. He usually went into the cage to feed the animal, and always, on such occasions, carried a heavy, loaded riding-whip. On this occasion he had neglected to take the whip with him. Haering set the pan of water on the floor, but the dog seemed disinclined to drink, refused to be petted, and walked restlessly up and down the cage.

Haering saw that "Satan" was in one of his worst humors, and turned to go out of the cage. He had no sooner turned his back than the animal sprang upon him. Haering threw himself to one side, but the dog's paws struck him on the shoulder, and dog and man fell to the floor together. Haering sprang quickly to his feet, and the dog jumped at him and sunk his teeth into the man's right arm. Haering, quick as lightning, pitched the dog over on his back, and was just going to jump on his paws, as the brute recovered himself, and sprang for Haering's throat. With one hand Haering grasped the dog's leg, and with the other caught him by the upper eyelid, and did not let go his hold until he had torn the animal's scalp to the back of the head. The dog fell back with Haering on top. Both got their feet, and Haering sprang for the gate of the cage.

The dog dashed at him again, and Haering clinched the brute, and tried to set his teeth into his shaggy neck. He failed, but caught the dog's ear with his teeth, and held on until he had cut it off, and then he hurled the brute to the floor, and fell himself.

The dog rushed at Haering again just as he was getting up, and bit him in the left hand. Haering thrust his hand into the brute's throat and tried to smother him. In the struggle both fell again, and the dog lacerated Haering's left hand.

"Unbolt the gate quick," shouted Haering to the men, who were standing fifty feet away, but no one dared come to the rescue.

Haering then threw himself on the dog and set his teeth into his throat, and at the same time grasped the dog by the upper jaw with his right hand, pressing down the lower jaw with his left arm until the flesh at the sides of the dog's mouth was torn by the strain. Dog and man struggled about the cage for at least five minutes. At last they reached the door. Haering, still keeping his teeth fixed in the animal's neck, lifted him up and pinned him against the side of the cage. Then with his right hand he unbolted the door of the cage, and got outside, at the same time drawing the dog's head through and closing the gate on his neck. Then he pressed upon the gate with all his might. He held the dog in this way until he felt his strength failing, and then, letting go the dog's neck with his teeth, he opened the gate slightly, and, with a quick kick, he knocked the dog inside, and closed and locked the gate.

Both Haering and the dog were covered with blood. Haering's lacerated hand bled fast, and blood was running from the brute's throat. Dr. Allen was sent for, and he dressed Haering's wounds. Four of the veins in his hand were found to have been torn, and they have begun to bleed afresh twice since they were dressed. Haering had to be removed to Dr. Allen's house for constant medical treatment. He was rapidly improving at last accounts. He says he regrets that a member of the family poisoned the dog, for if it had recovered from the wound in its throat he intended to enter the cage, armed with a heavy whip, and beat the animal into submission.

Mr. Lincoln Didn't Think Himself Fit for the Presidency.

The Omaha Republican prints a letter from Abraham Lincoln which has some historic interest. The letter was addressed to a gentleman who is now a resident of Omaha, and is as follows:

> Springfield, Ill., April 16, 1859.
>
> My Dear Sir: Yours of the 15th is just received. My engagements are such that I cannot at any very early day visit Rock Island to deliver a lecture, or for any other object.
>
> As to the other matter you kindly mention, I must in candor say I do not think myself fit for the Presidency. I certainly am flattered and gratified that some partial friends think of me in that connection, but I really think it best that no concerted effort, such as you suggest, be made. Let this be considered confidential.
>
> Yours, very truly, A. Lincoln.

There can be no doubt, from the phraseology of the letter, and the request that it be considered confidential, that Mr. Lincoln sincerely distrusted his fitness for the office of President, and deprecated the use of his name in that connection.

A Family Gun.

An historical gun is owned by Fernando Healy, of Rehoboth, Mass. His great grandfather brought it to this country in 1680, and used it in the French wars. His son Joseph put a new stock on the piece in 1761, inserting a small silver plate bearing the initials "J. H., 1761." Joseph's son John used it during the Revolution. It afterward came into the possession of another son, the late Stafford Healy, of Rehoboth, father of the present owner. He used it fourteen days during the war of 1812, receiving therefor a pension. In 1820 he restocked the gun and put in a new lock, and at his death it came into the hands of the present owner. The barrel is original, is in good order, and the gun is still used by members of the family as a fowling-piece.

Father Miller.

The year 1840 marked a new era in the progress of Second Adventism. Not only was the "day of probation" drawing nigh—the day on which the universe should shrivel up with fire, the resurrection and ascension of the just attend the awful coming of Christ, and the millennium begin, after which the wicked would be raised for their eternal discomfort—of which the date was at first approximately fixed between the vernal equinoxes of 1843-44; but Father Miller, "the-end-of-the-world man," as he was irreverently called by those whose sense of humor was greater than that of his followers, began more freely to extend the sphere of his personal exhortations, particularly in Eastern New England. Though a native of Pittsfield, his labors up to his 58th year had been almost wholly confined to the border counties of New York and Vermont, until in April, 1839, he appeared for the first time in Massachusetts as a prophet—a reed shaken by palsy, if not by the wind. In December he was again in Boston; and in February, 1840, he saw the publication of the Signs of the Times—afterward Advent Herald—begun, the first of the Millerite organs, which afterward reckoned the Midnight Cry (New York), the Glad Tidings (Rochester), the Millennial Harbinger, etc. From this time to his death he lectured frequently in his native State in halls and groves, expounding his rules of interpretation, by which the harmony of the scriptures was assured, and interpreting by the aid of Revelations the "time, times and a half" of Daniel, on which his destructive calculations rested. It was in Massachusetts that his venerable and sincere presence first failed to restrain the rotten egg, which in those times awaited the utterer of unpopular doctrine, for he was mobbed with missiles at Newburyport in May, 1842. A month later we find him holding forth at the first Second Advent camp-meeting, and in the audience the poet Whittier, taking notes of the strange, impressive, picturesque scene—a tall growth of pine and hemlock throwing its melancholy shadow over the multitude, who were arranged upon rough seats of boards and logs; the white tents, drawn about in a circle, forming a background of snowy whiteness to the dark masses of men and foliage; a hymn pealing through the dim aisles of the forest; preachers thundering from a bower of hemlock boughs.* * *

On the 14th of March, 1844, Father Miller closed the diary of his public labors, and reckoned up his 3,200 lectures given since 1832. It was almost the only change in the regularity of his daily life which betokened the approach of "the burning day." When March had gone out, and April saw not the heavens in commotion, and May had come, the poor old man was heard confessing his error and acknowledging his disappointment, but not his unbelief. October might yet witness the fulfillment of prophecy: "The Lord will certainly leave the mercy-seat on the 13th, and appear visibly in the clouds of heaven on the 22d." During this interval of ten days, secular business was suspended among the Adventists. In New York, as Mrs. Child records, at a shop in the Bowery, muslin for ascension robes was offered; tradesmen shut up shop, or gave away goods, or dealt more liberal measure, to make their record good with the Almighty—all the while that the ungodly disturbed the meetings with stones and brickbats, and crackers and torpedoes. The Advent Herald issued its last number with a valedictory. And then the sun rose on the 23d, and the sad prophet could only say, "I have fixed my mind on another time, and here I mean to stand until God gives me more light, and that is, to-day, TO-DAY, and TO-DAY, until He comes." Some, however, alleged that the Lord had come, but invisibly, and "closed the door of mercy to the sinner;" and then arose a contention between the orthodox and the "shut-door" party as to which should gain over Father Miller. This was exquisite cruelty, but not without a logical cause. The shut-door faction, given up to fanatical excesses, or neglecting its worldly affairs in a way to call for guardianship or the work-house at the hands of Judges and Selectmen, did not in the end prevail. The orthodox party became a tame and uninteresting sect like any other, with an indefinite lease of life. The "Come-outers," who had made with the Adventists the joint convention at Groton, were chiefly from Cape Cod, and appear to have formed a lasting union with them. The Cape is still the country par excellence of camp-meetings and Adventists, and there the wretched Freeman, offering his little daughter as a sacrifice, recalled an almost forgotten superstition.—From "The Isms of Forty Years Ago," in Harper's Magazine.

The Moslem Religion Making Headway.

Dr. Dollinger, authority in such matters, makes this interesting statement: "At Sierra Leone a Moslem university is flourishing, in which are being educated a thousand young men whose lives will be as absolutely surrendered to the cause the school represents as were the lives of the early soldiers of the crescent, who counted it joy to fall in its defense on the field of battle. In China the followers of this ancient symbol have increased beyond computation, 50,000 residing in Tonquin alone. Among the Maylayans and the islanders of the eastern archipelago it is reported that 18,000,000 have been won over to its support; and still one fifth of the dwellers on the earth are enrolled as its army, of whom 50,000,000 at least are subjects of her Majesty Queen Victoria."

Five of New York's millionaires, estimated to have been worth $308,000,000, dropped off close together. "Seymour," writing to the Hartford Times, says: John Jacob Astor went first, and then in quick succession Commodore Vanderbilt, A. T. Stewart and William C. Rhinelander, and now the money worshiper Goelet. Astor's wealth was estimated at $50,000,000, Vanderbilt's at $100,000,000 and Stewart's about the same. Rhinelander's property represented, it is supposed, $10,000,000, and Goelet's is estimated at $20,000,000.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, } EDITORS.
ROB. J. LOWRY }

KANSAS claims an increase of 144,097 in population in the past year, its recent census showing 849,978 inhabitants.

NAT HARVEY, the saloon keeper of Marshall, Texas, who saw Currie shoot Porter, and who absconded to avoid testifying against Currie, has been traced to his hiding place in the swamps of Western Louisiana, and will be brought back.

MR. POUND, of Wisconsin, has introduced into the national House of Representatives a resolution in favor of an amendment to the constitution which shall fix the term of President and Vice President at six years after March 4, 1885, and make them ineligible to the same offices for more than one term consecutively, and shall also provide that members of Congress be elected for three years.

THE contract for the construction of the Texas and Pacific road from Fort Worth to El Paso has been signed, the main feature of the agreement being that the 600 miles shall be completed by the 1st of January, 1883. This will leave 800 miles to be constructed before the line will be finished to the Pacific. Twenty thousand dollars per mile is the construction price, to be paid in mortgage bonds.

GEORGE W. CHATTERTON, a respected citizen of Springfield, Ill., was sued for divorce a few weeks ago by a woman who calls herself Mrs. Cornelia Chatterton. The defendant proves that he never was married to the woman by a declaration in the hand-writing of Abraham Lincoln, who, when he penned he declaration in 1844, was a lawyer in Springfield. The manuscript is neat, with all the "i's" dotted and every "t" crossed. It shows that in 1844 Chatterton sued one Cornelia Wilcox for defamation of character. Lincoln gained his case and relieved Chatterton of any responsibility to the State on account of Miss Wilcox.

"I FELL in here four days ago, when the Indians were running me. I am starving. If Bill don't find me to-morrow I will run this knife through my heart. I can't stand to starve to death. John Roan, Nov. 1, 1850," was found recently in a cavern at Paint rock, near Lampasas, Texas The message was carved on the face of a smooth limestone rock. Near the rock was the skeleton of a man, and near the the skeleton the rusty blade of a bowie knife, the handle of which was rotten with age. The cavern walls cannot be scaled without the aid of a rope twenty-five feet in length, and the aperture is exceedingly small. Roan's own efforts to save his life would have been unavailing.

WILLIAM SWANK, of Pleasant county, W. Va., is no ordinary avenger. He "fell out" with Rufus Ralston, a neighbor, a year or so ago, and recently, to make matters worse, Mrs. Swank procured a divorce from her husband that she might be free to marry her husband's bitter enemy. On the night of the day that Ralston and Mrs. Swank were married, Swank planted his artillery in front of the Ralston house and fired away. He had made a small cannon from a three-inch oil-well pipe and had loaded it to the muzzle with wagon-pins and slugs. The charge made a gaping hole in the weatherboarding, passed through the partitions, demolished any amount of furniture, and knocked to pieces the bed upon which the newly-married couple were reposing. As it so happened, Mr. and Mrs. Ralston escaped without bodily damage and sought refuge in the house of a friend.

FIFTY years ago ex-Gov. McArthur, of Ohio, died and left a property worth several millions. By his will the estate was not to be divided until the youngest grandchild should reach the age of 21 years, and then it was to be divided equally among them all. But the grandchildren kept coming, and the other children saw no chance of getting anything during their natural lives if they had to wait for others to be born and attain their majority. So they asked for a division of the property, which was accomplished after fifty years' delay and litigation, and now come some of the younger grandchildren and want a slice also. A dozen of the best lawyers in Ohio, including Stanley Matthews, are arguing the case before Judge Swayne, sitting as United States Supreme Judge, and the suit will go to the Supreme Court for a final decision, no matter what the decision of Swayne may be.

MATERIAL for a play that would bring down the gallery gods every five minutes comes from Pontoise, France. The story is one of love, in which an emotional actress could have free rein and a few inches to spare. Mlle. Clemence Blossier, aged 16 years, became enamored of a swain who lived in the same village, Anvers, which is near Pontoise, but her parents objected to the match and put her under lock and key. She stood at the window of her prison and hurled a burning faggot to the roof of a neighboring house; then a second fagot to another house, and so on until the village was wrapped in flames. Her lover broke into her prison, rescued her, mounted a fleet-footed steed and escaped. But Mlle. Blossier was not allowed to enjoy the fruits of her stratagem. She was arrested and condemned to ten years' hard labor for arson. There's a good deal of the calcium light business in this.

A JEWISH peddler recently traveling on foot through the Grodno district, Poland, was attacked in a wood by a footpad, who robbed him of all the money he had about him and then let him go. Proceeding on his way, the plundered peddler met a mounted gendarme, to whom he related his mishap, and who proceeded at once to search for the robber, accompanied by the plundered man. They soon came up with the object of their quest, upon whose person the stolen money was found, as well as two clasp knives and a pocket whistle, of which "unconsidered trifles" the gendarme took possession. Having bound the culprit's hands behind him and attached him to the gendarme's saddle by a cord, they started for the nearest village, the peddler on foot, the police officer on horseback. Presently it occurred to the latter that he might as well ascertain what sort of a tone could be produced by the confiscated whistle, which he accordingly put to his lips and blew with untimely vigor. Straightway there appeared upon the scene a horde of armed brigands, who surrounded the party, and, after freeing their comrade from his bonds, attacked his captors. The gendarme put spurs to his horse, broke through the circle of his assailants, and got away with a bullet in his shoulder. But the unfortunate peddler, unable to escape, fell a victim to the brutality of the bandits, who hacked his body to pieces and left his mutilated remains on the high road.

A Rich Thing About Editors.

"Editors are usually wealthy," the man with the sample case remarked.

"Yes," I said, "they are familiar with all the slang and business phrases of the money market; they write about millions as ordinary men talk about dollars; they know how to pay the national debt; they build railroads; they organize mining and magnificent transportation companies with fabulous capital; they declare war without consulting the Rothschilds, and if all the banks in America were to fail to-morrow they wouldn't be a cent poorer than they are to-day. Yes, they are rich. They associate with the moneyed classes, they sit down at tables with Kings, and, sometimes, in happier, luckier moments, with aces; if you want to borrow money, go to the editor, he will turn to his advertising columns and tell you where you can borrow it. If you have money to loan, rather than see you suffer he will borrow it of you himself. Rich? He knows the secrets of the moneyed rings; he divulges the plans and schemes of the heavy operators to the people; he roars himself louder than the bulls, and growls among the bears; his voice is heard in the temples of the money-changers, asking for money; he warbles his little roundelay out on the curbstone, in a melancholy minor key, when he doesn't get it. Oh, yes, editors are rich. When you want to spend all the money you have in this wide, wide world, go to your lawyer; when you want something done for nothing, hie you to your newspaper office. Then, when you want to send some man to Congress, send your lawyer, because you can get along without him."

I paused, and a profound, impressive silence filled the ear like a dream of peace. I looked around upon my audience.

It was asleep.—Bob Burdette, in Burlington Hawk Eye.

Taking Tea in a 'Bus.

An American is about to carry out the railway dining-car system in a novel direction. He has designed, especially for the use of Londoners, a "tea 'bus." In this vehicle there will be every accommodation for "5 o'clock tea." It is expected that the 'bus will be a great favorite with ladies, who will take advantage of it not merely for shopping purposes, but also as a pleasant way of spending the afternoon and having agreeable chats with each other over their teacups. A narrow table runs along the middle of the vehicle, and behind the seats there will be room for the conductor to wait on the tea-drinkers. Water will be boiled in a little apparatus beneath the seat of the driver, the tap being inside the 'bus, so that kettles may be filled without difficulty. The tires of the wheels are to be India rubber, to prevent unpleasant jolting, and the springs of the carriage will be adjusted on an entirely new and improved principle, insuring the complete ease and comfort of its occupants. With a plentiful supply of biscuits and bread and butter the scheme may prove a success, but the 'bus will have to be driven with extreme care, for the horrors of a collision in the streets will be greatly enhanced by broken crockery and boiling water.—Pall Mall Gazette.

AN Idaho man committed suicide the other day. He left as an excuse that he "wanted to get there before all the best claims had been taken up."

FARM NOTES.

PRUNING of small branches may be done at any time when the weather is pleasant. A very little time spent on young trees will bring them into good shape and determine their future form.

THE application of manure to the orchard is too often neglected. Use well-rotted stable manure. It may be drawn on at any time during the winter, most easily when the ground is frozen. When spread, it should cover the whole ground, and not be heaped just about the trunks of the trees, where there are no small roots.

A cow that is milked three times a day will give more milk and yield more cream than one that is milked at intervals of twelve hours. When the udder is filled a process of absorption goes on and part of the milk secreted is thus lost. It will pay to take the milk from copious milkers at intervals of eight hours as nearly as possible. A cow that is milked at 5 in the morning, 1 in the afternoon, and 9 at night will yield from 10 to 20 per cent. more milk and more cream than if milked twice a day.

WOODEN vessels for containing articles of food, wine, etc., also wooden vessels for culinary purposes, can be rendered fit for immediate use by the removal of the unpleasant extractive matters by treatment with a solution of washing soda. Thus, an ordinary barrel should be filled half full of water, and a solution of about two pounds of soda in as much water as will dissolve it poured in, and the liquids thoroughly mixed by shaking the barrel, which should then be filled to the bung with water, and allowed to remain from twelve to fourteen hours; then, after withdrawing the discolored liquid, it should be well rinsed and filled with pure water, and should remain a few hours more, when it will be fit for use. Other wooden utensils may be similarly treated.—Journal of Chemistry.

IN choosing feed for animals, it is not safe to be guided altogether by the chemical constituents. An analysis may be useful in comparing one well-known food with another, and may help us in making up a judgment as to proportions and values. But with feeding stuffs not well known, a mere analysis may be delusive; for instance, spent hops are shown to contain 11.7 per cent. of fat, 9.9 per cent. of ash, and 14.7 per cent. of albuminoids. From this they would appear to surpass in value the best clover hay, or even to equal cotton-seed meal, in nutritive qualities; but as a food for cows, few would care to experiment with them. This is a broad example, but it shows the necessity for discretion in forming opinions of the value of such crude food as sedges, rushes and coarse, wild grasses. Digestibility is of the utmost importance, and must be taken into account in estimating the values of food.

AT the last session of the American Agricultural Society, in New York city, Dr. A. S. Heath, President of the Farmers' Club of the American Institute, read a paper entitled "How Shall We Increase the Value of Our Dairy Cows and Beef Stock?" The object, he said, could best be accomplished by care in breeding. If milch cows were desired, farmers should breed for milk; if butter was required, they should breed together those animals whose special excellence strongly indicated that product in large quantities, and also in superior quality. If cheese was the aim of the farmer, then he should strive to secure the best results, and use every effort to secure animals whose milk is rich in the elements of cheese. The Ayrshire cow was one of the most valuable cows brought to this country. Although as a milker she was second to Jersey, as a cheese-maker she was unsurpassed, and in general excellence was undoubtedly the best cow in America.

IT is a popular idea that every portion of the globe furnishes in some tree, shrub, plant or mineral a remedy for the diseases prevalent in that section. It is also very generally believed that the seedlings produced in any part of the country will be found specially adapted to the soil and climate of that region—very hardy and productive. Many persons who raise promising seedling fruit trees, and who find that they fail in the region where they are produced, make no effort to test their value in other localities. It would be the part of wisdom, however, to send specimens to remote portions of the country for the purpose of allowing local horticulturists to test their merits. The fruit produced on a seedling apple tree originated in Kentucky may rot on the branches and be declared worthless. But a tree of this variety planted in Michigan might mature its fruit in prime condition. The Maiden's Blush, which is a summer apple along the Ohio river, is an excellent late fall apple in this vicinity, and a late keeper in Northern Wisconsin. The Roxbury russet and Rhode Island Greening, which keep well till April and May in the New England States, not infrequently rot on the trees in Kentucky and Tennessee. A gentleman near this city raises some apples which he is able to keep nine months. They are the product of trees procured in Georgia, where, singularly enough, the fruit ripens in June and decays before autumn commences.—Chicago Times.

He "Squoze" Her Hand.

An Ohio merchant tells the following story about himself. Where he lives is a secret, except that it is not a mile and a half from the Xenia Court House.

"When I was about 17 years old I made a trip to Cleveland in the old-fashioned stage coach, with its spanking four horses. At Mount Vernon, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, a pretty girl came on board. She sat on the back seat, next to an elderly farmer-like looking man. I was on the middle seat immediately in front of her. I soon struck up a pleasant chat with her. She was a charming talker, and almost as brilliant as she was pretty. It looked as if we were mutually pleased. When dark came I concluded there would be no harm in giving her hand a squeeze by way of a feeler. I reached behind and got hold of the hand. I was a little startled at the hardness, but it returned a vise-like pressure. I squozed again and it squoze back. A sense of disappointment would steal over me when in my mind I would contrast the seeming toughness of her hand with the tenderness and sweetness of her voice. The contrast did not seem to arterialize my blood quite up to the point of exhilaration. At last she reached her destination and left the coach. After we had started again that old rooster who sat beside her addressed me thusly:

"'Young man, do you feel all right? You had a nice time tugging at my old paw for the last five miles; hope you enjoyed it.'

"The two young ladies on the front seat giggled all the way to the next station, and the gentlemen passengers didn't forget to smile when I looked up. I have been more successful since in that line."

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

FROSTED FEET.—Take a raw onion, cut in halves, dip it in salt, and rub the afflicted parts with it a few times.

POUND CAKE.—Two cups of butter, one pint of sugar, one quart of flour, twelve eggs (the yolk of one left out), one teaspoonful of mace. Bake in a rather quick oven forty minutes. Always beat the eggs separately for pound cake, and stir in the whites the last thing.

HERMITS.—Two eggs, one and one-half cups of sugar, two-thirds cup of butter or lard, one cup currants, one teaspoonful each of cloves, nutmeg and cinnamon, one teaspoonful of soda. Roll out like cookies; roll the currants in flour; sprinkle sugar on top before baking.

GRAHAM GEMS. To one pint of sour milk take one egg, one spoonful of sugar, well beaten, one teaspoonful of soda, and good fresh Graham flour enough to make a stiff batter. To be baked in iron gem-pans, with quick, hot fire. They will be delicious, light, putty and tender.

WHITE MOUNTAIN CAKE.—Make like Concord cake, and bake in sheets about one inch thick; have all the cakes the same size. Have three cakes in a loaf; lay one cake on a board and spread with frosting, then lay another on top of that, and spread this with frosting; then lay on the third and frost the whole, and set where it will dry. This is very handsome, and will keep a long time.

REPOTTING PLANTS.—If the roots become pot-bound, of plants that have been blossoming all winter in the house, it will become necessary to repot them in the spring, and the best time to do so will be during the months of April and May. Or, if you wish, you may put them out in the ground, trimming them up, and they will soon sprout again, making nice plants. The branches trimmed off will make good slips and fine blooming fall plants for next autumn.

SAVORY RICE PUDDING.—Wash one ounce of the finest rice, put it in a pie-dish with half a pint of beef tea or any kind of broth. Bake until the rice is well cooked; it will take about an hour in a moderate oven. Boil a quarter of a pint of milk, pour it onto an egg lightly beaten, stir well together, and then mix with the rice. Season with salt, and, if allowed, a little pepper. Put the pudding into the pie-dish, bake very slowly for an hour and a half, and serve.

LEMON PIES, RICH.—Pare carefully the yellow rind from two lemons; then remove the thick white substance which grows next the rind, it being a very indigestible and useless article; then squeeze the juice into a bowl and remove the seeds; chop the rind and the remainder of the lemons very fine and add to the juice. Add also two well-beaten eggs and two slightly-heaping cups of sugar; mix well; line a plate with a rich crust, with several layers of crust around the edge, which may be made to adhere to each other by the use of a little water. Bake without a cover.

Gen. Dorfling.

The celebrated Prussian General Dorfling was originally a tailor. On finishing his apprenticeship he had the ambition to wish to see Berlin. As he was obliged to pass the Elbe in a boat, and had no money to pay the expense, the passage was refused him. Stung with this affront he disdained a trade that so narrowed his circumstances, and, throwing his wallet into the river, he enlisted for a soldier. In that capacity he made rapid advances. He soon gained the esteem of his comrades, afterward of his officers, and lastly of the Elector, his master. That great Prince, who loved war, who had made himself a proficient in that science, and who was compelled to study it, rapidly advanced a man who, to great military knowledge, added all the virtues of a citizen. Dorfling was, after some time, promoted to the rank of Field Marshal, and in that capacity came up to every idea that could be formed of a man who, from a common soldier, rose by his merit to be a General. A fortune so extraordinary excited the jealousy of many who had not those abilities to recommend them to notice. Some even went so far as to say that though Dorfling was a great man he had not lost the air of his original profession. "Yes," replied he one day to those who bantered him, "it is true that I have been a tailor, and have cut out cloth; but now (putting his hand on the hilt of his sword) I use this instrument, with which I will cut off the ears of any man who dares to speak ill of me."

Cost of a Roman Triumph.

The following, according to Dean Swift, was the bill of costs of a Roman triumph:

	£	s.	d.
For frankincense and earthen pots to burn it in	4	10	0
A bull for sacrifice	8	0	0
An embroidered garment	50	0	0
A crown of laurel	0	0	2
A trophy	80	0	0
A thousand copper medals (value ½ penny apiece)	2	1	8
A triumphal arch	500	0	0

THE HOMESTEAD LANDS.

An Important Amendment.

An important bill to soldiers has passed the House of Representatives at Washington, and will probably become a law. The effect of the bill is to place soldier and citizen on an equality in their entry of homesteads within railroad limits. The law originally authorized a soldier to enter within railroad limits eighty acres of land, valued at $2.50 an acre, in lieu of homesteads of 160 acres of other lands valued at $1 25 an acre. Subsequently a law was enacted authorizing soldiers to enter 160 acres within railroad limits, and to enter an additional eighty acres where only eighty acres had previously been taken; but it also required soldiers to pay registry fees of $10 for every such entry. Another law was afterward passed authorizing citizens to select 160 acres within railroad limits, and citizens who had selected only eighty acres were permitted to enter an additional eighty acres, but were not required to pay fees for registry. The bill which has now passed the House simply places soldier and citizen upon an equality. The text is as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act even sections within the limits of any grant of public lands to any railroad company or to any military road company, or to any State in aid of any railroad or military road, shall be open to settlers under homestead laws to the extent of 160 acres to each settler, and any person who has, under existing laws, taken homestead on any even section within the limits of any railroad or military road land grant, and who, by existing laws, shall have been restricted to eighty acres, may enter under the homestead laws an additional eighty acres adjoining the land embraced in his original entry; or, if such person so elect, he may surrender his entry to the United States for cancellation, and thereupon be entitled to enter lands under the homestead laws the same as if the surrendered entry had not been made, and residence and cultivation of such person upon and on the land embraced in his original entry shall be considered residence and cultivation for the same length of time upon and on the land embraced in his additional or new entry, and shall be deducted from five years' residence and cultivation required by law. Provided, that in no case shall patent issue upon an additional or new homestead entry under this act until the person has actually, and in conformity with the homestead laws, occupied, resided upon and cultivated the land embraced therein at least one year.

The Fly's Proboscis.

Prof. George Macloskie, of Princeton College, lately read a paper before the New York Academy of Sciences on "The Proboscis of the House-Fly." The wall behind the desk at which the professor stood was decorated for the occasion with diagrams showing highly magnified sections of the body of the common house-fly, or musca domestica. There were also some pictures of exaggerated cockroaches, and a representation of an enormous lobster, more than three feet long—so large, in fact, that the teeth in his "spoon-shaped jaws" could be distinctly seen. As for the picture of that instrument of torture, the proboscis of the house fly, it resembled, both in shape and size, a rifle with the barrel broken off where it meets the stock, and a large warty potato stuck on. The potato would respresent what some naturalists call the "tip," and what others call the "knob," of the proboscis. Prof. Macloskie declared that it was a mistake to say that flies bite, the testimony of all mankind to the contrary notwithstanding. They didn't bite—they only filed. It was for a long time said by naturalists that this knob at the end of the fly's proboscis was made up of muscular tissue, by which the owner was enabled to rub his teeth, so to speak, into the flesh of suffering humanity. Later investigation had demonstrated the fact that this knob was made up principally of small rods, the sharp ends of which projected a little beyond the end, making a surface similar to that of a very sharp and effective file.

The lecturer described just how the flies go to work to file a person's face. Having discovered a minute speak of something palatable, the fly first dropped a little saliva upon it to moisten or dissolve the dainty morsel. This done, he went to work with his file, executing a movement like that of the snout of a pig when rooting up the earth. Having gathered up enough for a "swallow," he drew up his proboscis, emptied the food into his mouth, and chewed it. To prove that flies had teeth, although they were so located as not to bite any external object, the professor passed around a specimen of a fly's jaw adjusted under the objective glass of a microscope, and showing off the fly's back teeth to great advantage. The mosquito's apparatus was very different. That interesting New Jersey bird was provided with a number of lancelets set in among a system of sucking tubes. This enabled it to bore for blood and draw it up at the same time.—New York World.

Cause of Poor Butter.

We have said many hard things of the manufacturers of bad butter. But much of the fault is chargeable to the cowardly conduct of country and city grocers and store-keepers. For fear of the limber tongue and neighborhood influence of some prominent farmer's wife who brings large quantities of grease, dirt and buttermilk to market each week and calls them butter, the cowardly merchant pays just as much for this conglomeration as he does for pure, sweet butter. It is then tumbled all together, good, bad and execrable, into a common tub or barrel, and mixed up for fear some customer may by chance discover the difference and inquire for some special farmer's butter. It was hoped that the increase of butter factories would supply so much good butter that all classes would be compelled to produce a sweet, clean article or find no market. Such, however, is not the result. Nearly all the good factory butter is taken to the Eastern or foreign markets, and the home towns and cities are mainly supplied with what would be termed grease if taken to the great cities of the Union. Every town should have a butter inspector, who should be authorized to grade and number the butter according to the quality. The timorous merchant would then grade his prices according to the number, like wheat. This, it is true, would cost considerable, but the world could afford to do or pay almost anything to improve the quality of butter. There is nothing in human economy so filthy and degraded as the common grade of butter. In some way the root of this evil should be removed at any expense. The chronic manufacturers of hair-grease and buttermilk ought to be exterminated.—Exchange.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

TEAS FOR THE SICK-ROOM.—Dried leaves of sage, one half ounce; boiling water, one quart; steep for three-quarters of an hour and then strain for use; sugar can be added to suit the taste. Peppermint, spearmint, balm, hoarhound and other herb teas are made in the same manner.

A CURE FOR SCARLET FEVER.—The following recipe from the Country Gentleman shows the efficacy of the sulphur cure: The foreign journals quite generally notice the successful treatment of scarlet fever by Dr. H. Pigeon, by the use of sulphur. It appears that all the cases in which he employed this remedy were well marked, and the epidermis on the arms in each case came away like the skin of a snake. The patient was thoroughly anointed twice daily with sulphur ointment, and five or ten grains of sulphur given in a little jam three times a day. Sufficient sulphur was burned twice daily on coals on a shovel to fill the room with the fumes, and, of course, was thoroughly inhaled by the patient. Dr. Pigeon asserts that, under his mode of treatment, each case improved immediately, and none were over eight days in making a complete recovery.

DIPHTHERIA AND PORK.—A medical correspondent sends the Lancaster New Era a communication in which he argues, at some length, that eating pork is an inciting cause of this terrible disease now so prevalent. His theory is that a morbid appetite is created by eating pork, and "growing with what it feeds on," more morbid matter is craved, until the specific pork poison is manifested in exudations deposits from the blood in the throat." He argues that, as the glandular system is a system of organs for getting rid of the redundancy of blood-poison, it is easily seen how this exudation is principally manifested in the throat. He advises parents not to allow their children to diet on pork and sausage, but to give them plenty of fruit and vegetables, and they will then soon lose their unnatural and morbid appetites. They should also sleep in rooms well ventilated with fresh air, but not in draughts, nor should they be allowed to "sleep several layers thick in the same room."

MULLEIN CURES CONSUMPTION.—A correspondent of the Lexington (Ky.) Press writes as follows about the flower of a well-known plant: "I have discovered a remedy for consumption. It has cured a number of cases after they had commenced bleeding at the lungs and the hectic flush was already on the cheek. After trying this remedy to my own satisfaction I have thought that philanthropy required that I should let it be known to the world. It is the common mullein steeped strongly and sweetened with coffee sugar, and drunk freely. Young or old plants are good, dried in the shade and kept in clean bags. The medicine must be continued from three to six months, according to the nature of the disease. It is very good for the blood-vessels also. It strengthens and builds up the system, instead of taking away the strength; it makes good blood and takes inflammation away from the lungs. It is the wish of the writer that every periodical in the United States, Canada and Europe should publish this recipe for the benefit of the human family. Lay this by, and keep it in the house ready for use.

Disappearance of Fishes.

Disappearances of sea fish from their long-time homes occur frequently, and for reasons unknown to man. The herring have left the coast of Sweden, where once they were numerous, and the big eyed or chub mackeral, which, thirty years ago, was common on our coasts, is now so rare that Prof. Baird has been unable to obtain it for his collection, although he has offered $25 for a single specimen. Whether the merits of this fish have suddenly become known to marine epicures, or whether the chub-mackeral has found a deep-sea larder which is better stored than his old one was, must for the present be matter for conjecture. Perhaps tunny-fish, sharks, porpoises, dogfish, and other lordly fellows with discriminating appetites, might throw some light upon the subject if they could be interviewed. At one time the tunny had driven the cod entirely away from the vicinity of Block island, but the tunny himself having become attractive to oil men, and purveyors to manufacturers of fish guano, the cod hurried back to the family homestead. Prof. Baird believes that the demand for tunnies, dogfish, sharks, etc., by the factories which will turn them into oils and manures, will have the effect of increasing the number of food fishes by lessening that of their enemies. "Grand, gloomy, and peculiar," like other great slaughterers, these predaceous fish also resemble their human prototypes in being comparatively few in number, and in keeping themselves prominently before the eyes of those who are eager to destroy them.—John Habberton, in Harper's Magazine.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 1, 1880.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

County Officers and the Constitutional Amendment.

The adoption or rejection of one of the proposed constitutional amendments, to be voted for or against, next April, will be of considerable importance to many of the county officers of this state. The amendment referred to provides that "All general elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November." If this amendment is adopted next April, county officers would not be elected until the second day of November, 1880, and the next election not occurring until the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1882, would make it necessary to elect in 1880 successors to all officers whose term expires before the November election, 1882. In DeKalb county, the term of each of the county officers expires as follows:

G. H. K. Moss, clerk, November 1, 1883; Albert Robbins, auditor, November 5, 1882; Daniel Gonser, treasurer, October 28, 1880; A. S. Leas, sheriff, November 10, 1880; Michael Boland, recorder, November 2, 1880; J. J. Van Auken, surveyor, October 26, 1880; J. J. Latson, coroner, November 10, 1880; Geo. H. Duncan, commissioner, November 5, 1880; Edward Kelham, commissioner, October 29, 1882; John Shoub, commissioner, December 1, 1882.

So that the county officers to be elected in November, 1880, would be auditor, treasurer, sheriff, recorder, surveyor, coroner, commissioner to succeed Duncan and commissioner to succeed Kelham. If the election is held in October, the auditor and commissioner to succeed Kelham will not be elected until 1882.

Who Were They?

Considering the number of railroads centering here, which always have a tendency to infest a town with tramps and hard characters, by way of offset for the benefits derived from them, our little place has been wondrously fortunate as regards crime and outlawry; but a case of robbery was averted by a small margin a few days since, the facts being substantially as follows: Early last Monday morning—which means about three o'clock—as Amos Miller, of Hicksville, was walking along the Eel River track towards the junction, where he intended taking the four o'clock B. & O. train for home, he observed the suspicious movements of two rough-looking individuals just in advance of him. Being convinced that they meant business of some kind, he left the track and crossed over to Ensley's avenue, where his belief was confirmed, for one of the roughs had headed him off and stood in the road a short distance ahead of him. Amos now thought that things were getting rather interesting, and not being armed, he concluded that discretion was the better part of valor, so returned to town, where he took a small arsenal on board and accompanied by his brother, Bruce Miller, of the firm of Miller & Getrost, returned. They met one of the fellows near where Amos had left him, who, upon noticing the re-inforcement and "smelling a rat," accosted them with, "Tut, tut, boys; no harm done," and passed along. Amos said he was ready to perforate the ruffians if they gave him half a chance, and it might have been a good thing had he done so.

The New Supreme Judge.

Governor Williams has appointed Hon. John T. Scott, of Vigo county, to fill the vacancy on the supreme bench, occasioned by the death of Judge Perkins. The Indianapolis Sentinel says:

"Judge Scott, now in the full prime of vigorous manhood, who has been made one of the supreme judges of the state, is a native of Glasgow, Ky., where he was born May 6, 1831, and is therefore in the forty-ninth year of his age. Judge Scott studied law in the office of Messrs. Bates & Garrett, Glasgow, Ky., and in 1853, when 22 years of age removed to Indiana, locating in Montezume, Parke county. In 1861 Judge Scott removed to Vigo county, and took up his residence in Terre Haute, where he now resides. In 1860 Judge Scott was elected prosecuting attorney of the common pleas district, composed of Parke, Vigo and Sullivan counties, and in 1868 was elected common pleas judge of the same district, and was again elected in 1872, remaining in office until the court was abolished. Since that time Judge Scott has practiced his profession.

Judge Scott brings to the arduous duties of the high position of supreme judge a mind well stored with legal knowledge and thoroughly disciplined for the work. Judge Scott is a citizen above reproach, a gentleman of a chivalrous sense of honor, and though a democrat in politics, will, in all matters pertaining to law and justice that may come before him, rise above all partisan feeling in giving decisions."

The democratic state central committee will meet at Indianapolis, on Thursday of next week, for the purpose of fixing the date for the next state convention. Prominent democrats from all parts of the state will attend the meeting.

Superintendent Lockhart.

During a visit to Indianapolis last week, Mr. R. M. Lockhart, superintendent of the Indiana State Board of Agriculture, was presented with the following testimonial, signed by a large number of exhibitors of all kinds of machinery at the last state fair:

R. M LOCKHART:

Dear Sir:—We, the subscribers hereto, having been exhibitors at the Indiana state fair during the fall of 1879, desire to express to you our high appreciation of your superintendency of the same. Although we recognize the fact that a return of good times had much to do with the state fair, we feel very sure that the efficiency of the management contributed much more to its unprecedented success.

In bringing together such a large number of exhibitors whose interests to some extent are antagonistic, it is no light task to render to each one equal justice that every one may feel satisfied. We would, however, state that we believe your management has met with the almost unanimous approval of the exhibitors, and we desire to testify, not only to your efficiency as an officer, but also to your kind and gentlemanly treatment toward us at all times.

"A bit of unwritten history" which recently appeared in the Washington Evening Star, is as follows:

"When the St. Louis convention insisted upon nominating Mr. Hendricks for vice president, his friends maintained that he would not accept, and there was a good deal of trepidation felt among the leaders lest this might prove true. On the evening of the last day of the convention, the New York and Indiana delegates met at the Southern hotel and held a conference. At the conference that evening, Lieutenant Governor Dorsheimer and others, who like him were known to have Mr. Tilden's confidence, voluntarily made the pledge that if Governor Hendricks would consent to accept second place on the ticket, he should in 1880 have a clear field for first place so far as Mr. Tilden was concerned."

The above may have been unwritten but it was not unknown, as every one who attended the conference can testify. It was a fair and square pledge on the part of Tilden's friends, and now, because Tilden was not equal to the emergency of 1877, his friends (at his bidding) are undertaking to force him upon the party with sure defeat staring him in the face. There are democrats who could carry both Indiana and New York, but Tilden cannot carry either of the states named.

In answer to an inquiry as to whether he thought he could beat General Hunter for governor, Mr. Frank Landers said:

"I think I can be elected, without reference to who is nominated on the other side, easily, and I could tell you why if I had time. You fellows know what I want, and it is for you to say whether I shall have it or not."

Will. F. McNagney, of Columbia City, was a guest at the Swineford Monday. He left for home early Wednesday morning.

The time and place for holding the democratic national convention, will be agreed upon at a meeting of the national committee, to be held on the 22nd of February.

The republican state central committee met at Indianapolis on Tuesday last and changed the date of holding the republican state convention from February 25th to June 17th.

Hon. W. H. English, of this state, is favorably spoken of as the democratic candidate for the presidency. If Mr. Hendricks cannot secure the place, Mr. English will have a strong following in Indiana.

Present appearances indicate that the festive George—Auburn's George—Georgie Hazzard, in short,—will get the full limit of the law, or about three years, thirty-six months or one thousand and ninety-five days in the penitentiary.

Thanks.

MESSRS. EDITORS: Allow me to return my thanks to S. S. Barr, O. H. Widney, J. D. Leighty, M. P. Bishop, John W. Dills and a number of others, for their munificent Christmas-gift of a little over $17 in cash, to be applied to the purchase of another horse. I hope they may all live long and see the return of many a happy Christmas.

G. W. WOODCOX.

A Crowded House and a Jolly Time.

On last Tuesday evening Mr. Wm. Sheffer, the popular harness-maker and his estimable wife, had worked in double harness ten years. The friends of the happy couple having kept track of the time, planned a surprise, which was successful in every particular. About 8 o'clock in the evening Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Ralston, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McIntyre, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. McQuiston, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zimmerman, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Rush, Dr. and Mrs. Spooner, Mr. and Mrs. Clint. Headley, Mr. and Mrs. John Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Reed, Mr. Joe. Rainier, Mrs. F. Buchanan, Mrs. George Patterson, Mrs. F. D. Ryan, Mrs. Lottie Osgood, Miss Lizzie Reeder, Miss Lizzie Mahuren, Miss Emma Eckles and Miss Amanda Cundiff might have been seen on their way to Mr. Sheffer's loaded with tinware and refreshments.

The surprise was complete, neither Billy or his wife having been informed of the coming of their friends. After spending several hours very pleasantly, the friends wished Mr. and Mrs. Sheffer many happy returns of their wedding anniversary, and departed for their homes.

SCHOOL GOVERNMENT,

Or moral Development in the School-Room.

BY AGGIE C. BAXTER.

Gladly would every teacher hail the day with joy, were it possible for children to be governed so properly at home that teachers could proceed with the great work of education without having their minds harassed with extra work which has long been neglected. Yet we would not cast blame upon all parents, for we are surrounded with many of them who are wise and good, and who have done and are now doing their work nobly. And were all patrons working for the best interests of their children, there would be little need of teachers spending so much time in governing. According to our present system of public instruction, good and bad are all brought in together. If good and true parents do not fear the result from such associations, certainly we ought not to complain as teachers; and the negligent and careless parents have much to be thankful for that their uncouth and undisciplined children have the advantage of the society of well-behaved children. Teachers have a great work to perform here in guarding moral children from becoming immoral in consequence of immoral associations. Would it not be a wise plan to make every good pupil, as much as possible, do some missionary work for the benefit of the evil ones? This method would certainly inculcate noble feelings and a sympathy for erring humanity, and much good might result to both classes. Methinks I see a little fair-haired girl of eight summers coming from a country schoolhouse. Some little boy is in trouble; she advances toward the little suffer, and with a womanly grace and dignity, puts her little arms around the little one's neck and whispers words of cheer and comfort. The clouds vanish and the sunshine breaks forth again. Methinks such a sight to a parent would be worth more than all the gold the world possesses. The parent of such a child might well exclaim, "My unselfish little daughter is the pride of my heart." Do not dwarf, but cultivate this noble and unselfish spirit; for such a child, if need be, after arriving at womanhood, could stand before the guillotine, as did Madam Roland, and with words of cheerfulness and hope reconcile the gray-haired, tottering friend to witness the terrible sight of her own execution. Only a few brief moments later and Madam Roland's head was severed from her body, and one of France's noblest women was hurled into eternity. But what true heroism was displayed in this woman's character, comforting an old white-haired man until the axe was ready to fall upon her head! Sympathy for others and an unselfish nature made her good as well as great. A better and higher cultivation of good morals and genteel manners is greatly needed in our schools. The advancement a child makes in this department is of much more importance to himself and to society than the highest grade he can attain in the common school branches. Being able to solve a difficult mathematical problem, or to analyze the most difficult sentence in grammar, is of minor importance, and will not answer for or excuse the neglect practiced upon innocent children in the failure to cultivate the true principles that will enable them to become true men and women. It is true they make, to some extent, the mathematician, the grammarian and orator, but do they make the man or the woman? This is indeed a serious question, and one well worth the serious reflection of our teachers. Methinks the angels in heaven would stand still in amazement, yea, weep for joy, at the prospect of a higher and better code of manners and morals developed in the school-room. We need those children without one blemish upon their beautiful natures, to help alleviate the suffering from hopelessness, crime and wretchedness. We need them more than we do the riotous mob who glory in their brutality and lack of sympathy.

But a few years ago Louis Gentig was a little white-haired boy. He was a bright and apt pupil, and as he approached the years of manhood, was the pride of his teacher in scholarship. Where is he to-day? He fills a murderer's grave. He has earned a name in the criminal history of our beautiful state that is sickening to reflect upon. We trust his teachers did all in their power to instill those early principles so requisite in boyhood for the formation of a true manhood. Better lay aside the books occasionally, if need be, and not allow the mania for book knowledge to take the place of common-sense teaching. If we have full control of our schools, (which every true teacher worthy the name should have), our words, if spoken in earnest, from true and feeling hearts, will act as a panacea for good. The time will not be lost, but gained, by a diminution in crime. Instill in the mind of that boy who would willingly torture or destroy one of God's creatures, the principles of humanity. Show him the great gulf that lies between cruelty and manhood, before cruelty is stamped upon his nature, never to be erased. Save him before he takes his place in society, a monster instead of a noble man. Point him to those beautiful lines on "humanity" from the immortal Cowper. Let the reformatory school be in progress all the time. Remember that "each day its duty brings. The undone task of yesterday cannot now be fulfilled without some current work's displacement." No child, whether moral or immoral, should have a truer friend outside of the family-circle than his teacher should be. There should be special attention paid to the cleanliness and appearance of the school-room. It is not to be wondered at that in many schools disorder reigns; for in many instances both school-room and instructor present anything but a genteel and orderly appearance. Loud and commanding tones should not be indulged in; they are a detriment to the cultivation of self-respect, and breathe a vulgarity that is offensive to innocent childhood. Constant employment must be furnished in order to preserve order. We cannot call a dull and quiet school orderly just because it is quiet, for "nothing but harmonious activity in school is order."

To be a "magnet" in the advancement of good to the youthful mind, is worthy the highest ambition of the true teacher; for anything worth doing at all is worth doing well.

St. Joe.

—Mrs. J. D. Leighty is recovering from an attack of croup.

—The ice blockade is a harvest for blacksmith Gus., and he is smiling.

—George Inks and wife, of Lagrange, were visiting over Sunday with friends in this vicinity.

—E. Bell received a nice gift off the Christmas-tree, which raised quite a laugh, but they did not bluff Bell any; that is not his style.

—Three of George W. Woodcox's children are suffering with typhoid fever; one, a little girl, has been confined to the house eight weeks.

—Dr. Thomas Dills and family, of Fort Wayne, and W. H. Dills, of Auburn, were visiting at the residence of J. W. Dills last Sunday.

—G. W. Woodcox had the bad luck a few nights ago to lose his only horse, one that he had been using in the elevators for the last three years.

—Some of the boys from Orange made considerable fuss Christmas eve, but the boys had never been out much, and anything better could not be expected of them.

—The Christmas-tree at the church Wednesday evening was a grand success. The tree (hickory) was loaded with the nicest kind of presents, which not only made the scholars happy, but many others. At the supper about 200 tickets were sold, which will net the church $75 or $80.

—Hon. Will. Cumback will lecture in Auburn, for the benefit of the public schools, January 20, 1880. Subject, "Invincible Some People." The place and price of admission will be given next week.

—A very pleasant private hop occurred Monday evening at the residence of John L. Davis on Fifth street. Several couples from Waterloo were present, and the party was an enjoyable one to all.

—Mr. Peter Hass, of Wilmington township, has sold his farm, and will leave with his family for California, about the 20th of this month. His sale of personal property, consisting of horses, cattle and farming implements, will take place the 13th inst.

—List of unclaimed letters in the postoffice at Auburn, Indiana Dec. 27, 1879: Devoss, N. C.; Congleton, T. C.; Imbody, Adam; Knight, Nettie; Little, Josiah; Moore, A. F.; Morrison, Rosy; Nelson, B. C.; Rozaubal, James.

Joseph Rainier, P. M.

—The editor of the Ligonier Banner says: "My wife has been using one of the 'Improved Noiseless Bissell Carpet-Sweepers,' purchased of T. V. Sebring, of Lagrange, and pronounces it a most serviceable and perfect instrument. She cordially recommends this sweeper as the best yet sold in this place.

Notice.

The Auburn Historical Society will meet at Gordon's art gallery at seven o'clock p. m., Friday, January 9, 1880. Miss Lida Powers, assisted by Mrs. Peterson and Mrs. Swarts, will give a reading at that time. All are cordially invited to attend.

Mrs. D. J. Swarts, Secretary.

Rough on the Girls.

The appended sarcasm, in relation to the new temperance society, was handed us a few days since for publication, and if we were the girls we would trot out our little broomsticks, hunt up the victim, and never let up until the writer's blood had paid the penalty. Here it is:

Editors Courier: I am glad to learn that a few of the young ladies of Auburn are about to reform, and with this end in view have organized a "Christian Temperance Union." Success to the reform.

A Subscriber.

Turning The Tables.

We believe that the custom of making New Year's calls has been generally ignored by the gentlemen of Auburn heretofore, and will be to-day in a great measure, as we know of but four who will make the rounds and call upon their lady friends. This being leap-year, however, some of our young ladies, in all propriety, have taken the oars into their own hands and will to-day, figuratively speaking, row their little canoe to suit themseves; that is to say, they intend to open the gladsome New Year by calling upon and extending a greeting to their many friends, and the party will consist of the following young ladies: Misses Mary Pitcher, Laura Fair, Nettie Shaffer and Mate Cleveland. This is a good idea, as it will doubtless wake some of the sleepy-heads up to a realization of what is expected of them in the way of honoring and recognizing a sensible and universal custom.

Agreeably Surprised.

On Wednesday evening, December 24th, that being the tenth wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Ralston, a number of their friends concluded to surprise them. After having induced Mrs. Ralston to attend church that evening, the following persons took charge of the residence: Mr. and Mrs. W. H. McQuiston, Mr. and Mrs. A. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Coder, Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Wright, Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Harris, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Sheffer, Dr. and Mrs. Spooner, Rev. H. Johnson and Mrs. Hare, Mrs J. C. Somers, Mrs. Fair, Miss Laura Fair, Mr. Howard Griswold, Miss Ella Griswold, Miss Lizzie Mahuron, Mr. Mahuron, Mr. M. F. Long, Mrs. F. D. Ryan and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McIntyre. Upon the return of Mr. and Mrs. Ralston, they found their parlor lighted with a new hanging lamp of the latest pattern, and in the dining room they were surprised to find a stock of tinware, spoons, &c. Refreshments were served, after which the party was entertained by Coop. and his estimable lady in their usual pleasant and hospitable style.

The Right Man, but the Wrong Name.

It is characteristic of a certain class of people to continually get into scrapes and endeavor to throw the slur on some imaginary individual. In substantiation of this, we clip the following item from last Friday's Fort Wayne Gazette:

"Charlie Meinheimer, a tailor, of Auburn, was on a periodical spree last evening, during which he claimed to have lost or was robbed of $26.70."

That name may answer the purpose in Fort Wayne, but for the edification of people in Auburn, who have never met "Charlie Meinheimer," we will merely state that the initials of the above-named gentleman's (?) real name are John Korth. He recently joined the Good Templars' lodge, at this place, and has endeavored to take an active part in its proceedings; but his deviations from the rules of the society, whenever he gets outside of the corporation, will doubtless preclude the possibility of his ever attaining an enviable position in the lodge. This aspiring little coat-maker is, withal, a real nice man.

The Ball.

Last Thursday evening, which, by-the-way, was Christmas, the Neoterics gave a grand masquerade party at their usual place of meeting—Ensley hall—and it was a decided "hit" in every particular, being the first thing of that peculiar kind ever presented in Auburn; and as a result, the large room was literally running over with life and activity. About forty-eight couples participated in costume, beside a large number who went merely as "wall-flowers," and there were at one time fourteen sets, or one hundred and twelve people, engaged in the "light fantastic" on the floor. The costumes were varied and the majority of the characters were admirably enacted, one of the best features of the evening being the appearance of four young gentlemen from Waterloo, who assumed the roll of "Dot Leedle German Band." A rich supper was provided at the Swineford house at about 12 o'clock, after which the dancing was continued until four, when the happy throng dispersed, well pleased with Auburn's first masquerade.

—One fellow attended watch meeting last night, to our certain knowledge. The crowd was made up of two persons, and they "watched" into each other's eyes.

—1879 is dead.

—If the old page is full, turn over a new leaf now.

—Saloons and cigar stores must suffer now, for the boys have all "swored off."

—Communion services will be held at the Presbyterian church next Sunday.

—Mrs. P. V. Hoffman, of Fort Wayne, is spending a few days with relatives in this place.

—This winds up the holidays, and to-morrow the year will have commenced to grow old.

—A few young people took tea with Mr. and Mrs. B. D. Harris yesterday evening, and report a pleasant time.

—Johnnie Gossage, former employe in this office, is holding down a situation on the Daily Gazette, at Fort Wayne.

—The Presbyterian church social, and a very pleasant one, occurred last evening at the residence of A. J. Ralston.

—If the old year was hit every time it was shot at last night, the probabilities are that it went into eternity "all tore up."

—James McMichael, former agent at the junction for the Saginaw railroad, is in town, visiting old friends and acquaintances.

—The girls are making New Year's calls to-day. Good enough. Come and see us, girls, and we will set up the cigars all around.

—Several young gentlemen intend to inaugurate the scheme of making New Year's calls to-day, and we trust it will be repeated every year.

—Sam. Pommert says that the whole barber-shop has "got it up its nose" this week. In other words, all the hands have the epizootic.

—George Hazzard has been found guilty by the jury in the United States court at Indianapolis, but has not yet been sentenced by the judge.

—An essay written by Miss Aggie C. Baxter, and delivered at the Garrett institute recently, is published this week by request and will be found on the fourth page.

—Did you lay in your supply of "corn-juice" last night? If not, you can't wet your whistle to-day, for the saloons are all taking a lay-off. You might try the back doors, however.

—Pete Eldridge desires us to make acknowledgment, through this paper, of his indebtedness to W. J. Austin, who presented him, this morning, as a New Year's gift, a bran new pair of shoes—trings.

—After a week's absence, visiting friends in Kendallville, this state, and Toledo, Ohio, Rev. Wm. Conzelman is again at home. He came from Waterloo Tuesday, and will preach as usual hereafter.

—Somebody ought to send in a petition to the weather clerk for about three inches of first-class snow, as the foundation is now all that could be desired and the sleighing would be "just too lovely for anything."

—Attorney W. H. Dills and wife, together with Dr. T. J. Dills and wife, of Fort Wayne, spent last Sunday at St. Joe, visiting their brother, J. W. Dills. It was a sort of brotherly and sister-in-law-ly re-union.

—The "Silent Bissell Carpet-Sweeper," manufactured at Grand Rapids, Michigan, is an entirely new invention, of the greatest merit. Wherever introduced they sell readily and give the very best satisfaction to all who use them. T. V. Sebring, general agent, Lagrange, Indiana.

—The Auburn Daily News was born on Saturday and expired the following Saturday, being short just one day in the week—Friday. It was a good little paper, considering its weight and inches, but, as we predicted, it was nipped in the bud.

—There is an insignificant Dutch tailor, not a thousand miles from the postoffice, who has worked himself into the good graces of a few people and pretends to be a shining light in the temperance cause; but he goes out of town, gets on a jamboree and loses his finances, "all the same."

—We have not been informed whether any of the young ladies will keep open house to-day or not, but Fred. Clark, Harry Yesbera, Will. Hoffman and Dave Hampton propose to go around and "open 'em up" anyway. "Huff" says they will walk part of the way and go afoot the balance.

—Our gay young friend, W. W. Hoffman, better known as "Huff," has relinquished his claims on the junction and will probably operate hereafter in some distant clime. While sorry to have him leave us, we join the rest of his friends in throwing the traditional old shoe of good luck.

—Young gentlemen, if you have any regard for your reputation as house-keepers, clean up your rooms and offices, hide your dirty old pipes and euchre decks, comb your hair, put on clean sh—oes and brace up generally, for the young ladies are liable to drop in on you to-day.

—DeKalb Lodge No. 214, F. & A. M., elected and installed the following officers, December 23, 1879: F. E. Davenport, W. M.; J. J. Van Auken, S. W.; Wm. Sheffer, J. W.; John L. Davis, treasurer; Joseph W. McKay, secretary; A. L. Hollopeter, S. D.; D. C. Headley, J. D.; John Treesh, tyler; B. D. Harris and Jas. A. Potter, stewards.

—The Winifred club, of Waterloo, gives a grand New Year's reception and ball at that place to-night. Several of our young folks—which includes a few married people—will be on hand.

—The members of the Neoteric club desire to thus publicly return thanks to Messrs. Coop. Ralston and Dave Snyder for services rendered on the occasion of the masquerade ball Christmas night, they having faithfully acted in the capacity of floor-manager and ticket-agent, respectively.

—Misses Frankie Ryan and Sadie Hare, organist and chorister at the Presbyterian church, are evidently well appreciated by the members of that congregation. The former received a handsome Bohemian toilet-set, while the latter was the recipient of a beautiful cameo ring, from the Christmas-tree last Wednesday evening,—not by way of remuneration for services, but merely as tokens of esteem.

—Our portion of the plunder, consequent upon Thursday evening's masquerade in this building, consists of the following medley, which, if not called for, we will make up into hash for our New Year's dinner: One well-ventilated overshoe, two square yards of black cambric, one dilapidated black fan, a demoralized rubber comb with four-thirds of the teeth knocked down its throat—or somebody else's—and last, but of greatest importance, a little black muff, trimmed with fur. That last article, if unclaimed, will not go into the pot-pie, but will be tenderly laid away as a souvenir of things that were.

—The "Noisless Improved Bissell Carpet-Sweeper," manufactured at Grand Rapids, Michigan, is a late improvement over all other carpet-sweepers. It will sweep clean close to walls, base-boards, legs of furniture, and zinc boards, uneven surfaces of carpets or a bare floor. There is no sweeper made that will do the same work. It is the only one made with central bearings and self-adjusting brushes, which enable it to do the work better, easier and cleaner than any other sweeper. Perfection has been attained in them; they give perfect satisfaction, sweeping cleaner than can be done with a broom all kinds of rag, ingrain or brussels carpet; also all kinds of matting, etc. They are sold on their merits. A fair trial is all that is required to prove their perfect success. T. V. Sebring, general agent, Lagrange, Indiana.

For Sale at a Sacrifice

A Geiser threshing machine in good condition, offered for sale by Mr. D.D. Moody, at a very low price, and on time. This is an excellent opportunity to get a bargain. 27tf.

Card of Thanks.

Editors Courier: Please allow us the use of your columns to return our sincere and heartfelt thanks to our friends who so kindly remembered us on our tenth wedding anniversary. May the many blessings of a kind Providence be showered upon them during the remainder of their lives.

—It is reported that Coburn town has the two champion oyster-eaters, one of them having "got away with" no less than, some say, 8, and others 10 dishes, while the other, not quite so ravenous, ate only seven dishes. The only wonder is that they left the dishes.

A Surprised Physician.

A Dying Patient Recovers Through the Interposition of an Humble German.—Some weeks ago Dr. G——, a very reputable and widely-known physician, living on C—— street, was called to attend a very complicated case of rheumatism. Upon arriving at the house he found a man, about forty years of age, lying in a prostrated and serious condition, with his whole frame dangerously affected with the painful disease. He prescribed for the patient, but the man continued to grow worse, and on Sunday evening he was found to be in a very alarming condition. The knees and elbows and large joints were greatly inflamed, and could not be moved. It was only with extreme difficulty that the patient could be turned in bed, with aid of three or four persons. The weight of the clothing was so oppressive that means had to be adopted to keep it from the patient's body.

The doctor saw that his assistance would be of no avail, and left the house, the members of the family following him to the door, weeping. At this critical hour, a neighbor, a poor and humble German shoemaker, appeared to the grief-smitten ones as a saving angel. He had heard of the despair of the family, and now asked them to try his remedy, and accordingly brought forth a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil. As a drowning man will catch at straws, so the poor wife applied this remedy; she had no hope, but would try anything, as a matter of duty. The first application eased the patient very much; after a few hours they used it again, and, wonder of wonders, the pain vanished entirely! Every subsequent application improved the sufferer, and in two days he was well and out. When the doctor called a few days after, he was indeed surprised; for instead of a corpse, he found a new-made man.—Exchange.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French, or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, W. W. Sherar, 149 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y. 42-eow-6m.

Also, $1 for one dog, $2 for each female dog, and $2 for each additional dog, for the collection of which I may be found at the county treasurer's office, in the town of Auburn, on and after December 15th, 1879.

Taxes may be paid in full or in two installments. The first installment including all road taxes, can be paid on or before the third Monday in April, 1880; the second installment on or before the first Monday in November, 1880. If the first installment is not paid when due, both installments become delinquent, ten per cent. will be added, and I shall at once proceed, as the law requires, to collect the same, together with the costs that may accrue, by distress and sale of personal property.

Road receipts will not be received after the third Monday in April, only on delinquent taxes. No road receipts will be received on the November installment.

Examine your receipts before leaving the office, and see that all your property is included.

No county order will be paid to any person owing delinquent taxes.

The annual sale of lands and lots for delinquent taxes will occur on the second Monday in February, 1880.

Come early and avoid the rush of the last few days.

The books will positively be closed on the evening of the third Monday in April, and no one will be allowed to pay after that date without penalty.

Parties sending by others, or by letter, to pay tax, should not fail to send description of their lands and lots.

No receipt will be made out hereafter, for any party, until they are ready to pay for the same.

Auburn, Ind., Dec. 15, 1879.

DANIEL GONSER, Treasurer of DeKalb County.

HISTORY OF 1879.

A Brief Record of the Year's Occurrences.

THE DEAD YEAR.

To time's measure, moving slow,
Let the pages, passing, go;
Let there follow in its train
Festive pleasure, hooded pain—
All the past month's joy and woe;
Let the dreary pageant go.

Fill its grave and heap it high;
With it let its memory die;
And within it hopes lie sealed,
Their fulfillment unrevealed,
Tenderly the coming year
With fresh flowers may strew the bier.

With a paean for all the earth
Then proclaim the New Year's birth;
Last year's pangs, a motley host,
Just expired, then lay their ghost;
For the old Year toll the bell;
Hope is ushered by its knell.

NORTH HERO, Vt. MARIE S. LADD.

Surname of the English Royal Family.

At dinner, the other night, the conversation lapsed, as it sometimes will lapse with the best of hosts, into questions hardly distinguishable from conundrums. A celebrated historian was present, and I put a question to him which I know has puzzled a great many people at different times, "What is the surname of the royal family?" "Guelph, of course." That is the usual answer, and it was the historian's. I ventured to suggest that, although the Royal family are Guelphs by descent, her Majesty's marriage with Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg must have the effect which the marriage of a lady has in all other cases, and that the surname of the present house must be the Prince Consort's. "But what is the surname of the Prince Consort's family?" Simple, but staggering. No one knew. All guessed, and all were wrong. I happened to have looked up the subject a few months ago, so I knew that the name was "Wettin." Of course no one had heard it before. Every one smiled at the horrible idea of the Guelphs being reduced to Wettins! The point was referred to Theodore Martin. "You are quite right. Wettin is the family name of the house of Saxony, to whom the dominion of Saxony came in 1420. The King of Saxony and the minor Princes of the house are therefore all Wettins, or, in German, Wettiner."—Whitehall Review.

Ingersoll's Appeal to a Jury.

Once a farmer was on trial for murder. He had shot one of his neighbors dead. The evidence was conclusive as to the killing and who did it; but it could be construed to show that the slayer might have had cause to think that he was acting in self-defense.

When Col. Ingersoll was addressing the jury he drew a poetical picture of his client's wife and children at home—he had refused to allow the wife or children to be present, as a less-skillful advocate would have done—and then he said that even at that moment the loving wife was standing at the door, with the sunlight on her face, waiting to welcome her husband back to his fireside, and the little boys were swinging on the gate and looking from time to time along the road, expecting to see him come, and jump into his arms and kiss him. "And won't you let him go home?" he asked. The jury were listening with moist eyes and leaning forward in their seats. The foreman, a great, sturdy farmer, with tears running down his sun-browned cheeks—as if the question had been asked for immediate information—nodded his head and said: "Yes, Bob, we'll let him go home to them!"

Ingersoll had not half finished his argument, but he sat right down at once. The Prosecuting Attorney made a long speech in reply, but of course it was of no use—the defendant was unanimously acquitted.

THE Jennings case, the original of the Jarndyce vs. Jarndyce case in "Bleak House," is again before the English courts. The amount involved is about $40,000,000. Charles Dickens' father, in early life, was in the office of a solicitor, where, his son assisting him, this persistent, wonderful old case of wealth drew the imaginative attention of the great future novelist. Charles Dickens has himself confessed as much.

OVER THE RIVER.

BY JOHN G. [illegible]

["Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees."—Jackson.]

Over the river beyond the flood,
We'll pitch our tents in the leafy wood,
And rest from the heat of the noon-day sun,
For the battle of life is fought and won.

Over the river dark and deep,
To the goodly shore where none shall weep;
We'll pitch our tents by the river side,
Where haughty foemen never ride.

Over the river, through its mist of death,
My eyes behold, as I gasp for breath,
That goodly land where the pure may rest,
And pillow their heads 'pon the Savior's breast;
And the river of death, though it lave the shore,
Will chill their trusting souls no more;
And the bright green trees that shade the ground
Are never withered, sere and brown;
For o'er this river they bloom and bear
Their verdure green through an endless year;
And sounds of joy are always heard,
And song of praise and welcome word,
To greet the Christian when he crosses o'er,
To camp forever 'pon the goodly shore.

Forward, onward, over the flood,
To the quiet shore and the leafy wood;
We'll rest from the heat of the noon-day
For the battle of life is fought and won.

IT happened when Oil City was a new oil town that at a political meeting one of the prominent members went out the side door, for a few moments, just as an orator, referring to the death of a noted citizen, said: "Thus another great man is gone. Supposing the speaker had reference to the citizen who had just stepped out, a man on the back seat said: "O don't worry! he's just gone for a drink!"—Oil City Derrick.

"WHERE is our American navy?" shrieks an exchange. If this excited editor is laboring under the impression that it is concealed in this town, he is mistaken. We haven't seen anything of the American navy, and we are in the vicinity of the Schuylkill canal a good deal, too. If the navy is lost, the price of it should be deducted from Secretary Thompson's salary. We told him six months ago that, if he did not put bells on the necks of our steam rams, the entire navy would wander away and lose itself. He said he could get up another one just as good inside of two weeks, and now let us see him d it.—Norristown Herald.

SUMMING UP.

One day in the summer,
A mercantile bummer,
A young Boston drummer,
Came out to the West;
Like other examples,
He travels and tramples;
Each line of his samples,
He said was the best.
In his business he glories
To sit down and pour his Big stock of new stories
In his customer's ear;
But when he would sell him,
The merchant would tell him
He'd have to expel him
If he talked business here.
So the long summer faded,
And his new stories shaded,
And wearied and jaded,
He packed up his goods;
And he said, this young drummer,
This mercantile bummer,
He'd wasted all summer
Out West in the woods.

Nothing Like Success.

"There is nothing," said little Mr. Barkingdale, who was jumping at the top hook in the hat-rack with his new silk hat—"there is nothing"—he panted, with another desperate jump—"succeeds"—and up he went again—"like"—and he made a jump that a kangaroo would have envied—"like"—he shouted, as he hung his hat fairly over the hook, hung on to the brim just a second too long, tore it clear off, pulled the hook through the side of his hat, and then, as the whole hat-rack came over on top of him, and he thrust his head through the mirror in the middle of it, he roared in desperate and legitimate conclusion—"success." And all the rest of the guests seemed to think that way, too, for the enthusiasm was tremendous.

ONLY 500,000,600 YEARS OLD.

The Age of the Earth, According to Prof. Proctor.

[From a Recent Lecture.]

Science has given us very much more satisfactory information as to space than to time. We have first the size of our own earth to use as a basis of measuring the planets around us. To get an idea how this is accomplished, picture the earth as a globe one inch in diameter, the sun three yards in diameter, and the distance between the two 300 yards. This will convey a much better idea of the difference in size between the earth and the sun than if we dealt in the stupendous figures which are actually correct. From this diminutive sphere astronomers have to survey the sun and the whole solar system, and it will readily be seen that the angles upon which we make our measurements must be so minute that observations must be most carefully made, for the smallest error would make a difference from correct results of many miles.

In measuring time we have no basis to work upon. If we ever know positively the age of the earth our movements would be greatly facilitated. All estimates are comparatively doubtful, although geologists tell us that there are certain conditions in the crust of the earth which have taken such and such terms of years to form, and from their deductions I think a moderate estimate of the age of the earth would be 500,000,000 years, and this is generally accepted by the most eminent geologists. Even this is uncertain, however, as the changes in the earth's crust, having all been formed by the action of the sun, we do not know that that action has been uniform throughout all those years. We know that before the crust formed the earth was in a molten condition, but finally cooled off and became solid. Now, supposing the molten mass was at a heat of 2,000 degrees centigrade, and had to cool down to 200, the highest rate at which life could exist, it would have taken, according to scientists, at least 350,000,000 years; add 50,000,000 years for the time during which the earth was contracting, and then 100,000,600 years which the crust has taken to form, and we have a total of 500,000,000 years. The solar system as at present understood corresponds with this idea of the age of the earth: and we work on the basis that the smaller the planet the older it is, and in the cooling-off process the molten mass contracts and grows smaller and smaller. The moon is believed to have passed through all the stages which the earth has undergone, and, being considerably older, has experienced many changes which the earth may expect to experience. Jupiter, on the other hand, being much larger than the earth, is believed to be much younger, and it is estimated that it will not reach the present condition of the earth for 3,000,000,000 ot years, and that it will take the sun 5,000 years longer. Venus is nearly the same age, and Mars and Mercury are both older than our globe.

We find that Venus, being nearly our own age, is surrounded by atmosphere, and has oceans and seas something like our own, and we may call her our sister planet. The earth will constantly get smaller and smaller until it gets to the size of Venus, and from that to the size and condition of the moon. Now, let us see what observers have found out about the moon. We find that it is a desert, and as desolate a place as can be imagined! It is covered with craters and seams, and we find declivities which show signs of having been filled by large bodies of water. They are empty now, however, and there is no water to be discovered on the moon's surface. It is believed that this water has retreated into the bowels of the planet, for the moon is a planet the same as any other. There being no atmosphere surrounding it of itself would render life impossible, and we may expect that after the lapse of many millions of years our oceans will dry up and the earth become uninhabitable by any living being.

A Queer Half.

He was not exactly seedy-looking, yet he was not such an appearing man as an experienced barkeeper cares to supply more than one round of drinks to without a settlement. He entered a Kearney street bar-room and softly ordered a cocktail, "with just a dash of absinthe, please." The mixologist had proceeded about half way with his scientific operations when the stranger felt in his pocket, and after a sweeping investigation produced a four-bit piece. This the stranger tossed in the air, and it fell on the counter with a dull thud. The mixologist's attention was immediately attracted toward the coin. He looked at it a moment, and then took it between his forefinger and thumb. His countenance changed instantly. He laid the coin down on the bar and shoved it slowly toward the stranger, remarking indifferently, as he put the half-composed cocktail under the bar, "I can buy 'em for a dollar a pound; bring us something better."

"What do you mean?" asked the stranger, looking from the coin to the mixologist curiously.

"Mean!" replied the man of drinks, "why, that you must take me for an awful fresh to try and shove such a queer 'queer' as this on me. If that's the best you've got, good-by."

It was now the stranger's turn to examine the coin. He took it up, felt of it, examined it, bit it, and tried to make it ring on the hard-wood counter, but it wouldn't ring. He remarked, however, in a confident tone, "I can't see that that is queer. What ails it?"

The barkeeper took the coin up and felt of it again. It was dull-looking and soapy-feeling. He passed it back again wearily, and remarked, with the tone of a man who had considered too long a subject of trifling importance: "Take it away; it's the worst I ever saw."

The stranger took it again. He examined it more carefully. "Well, I never thought I would be taken in by a piece of the queer," he remarked, thoughtfully, "and (emphatically) I'll be blanked if I think I have."

"Oh, no; of course not," said the barkeeper contemptuously.

The stranger became earnest. He gave the slippery-looking coin another searching glance, and then remarked slowly: "Say, mister, I have said I didn't think I was taken by a piece of the queer, and I think so yet. Now, I'll just bet you a ten that this is a genuine piece of silver."

The barkeeper had a $10 gold piece borrowed from the till and planted on the bar in an instant. The stranger did not say a word, but, taking a knife out of his pocket, he coolly proceeded to peel a veneering of silver foil from the coin where it had been stuck to the good silver with soap.

The stranger reached out for the $10 piece, and, as he pocketed it he remarked slowly:

"Twigez vous? Oui, je twig."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The number of students in American colleges in 1856 was 8,438; about 30,000 are now in attendance.

The money expended in railroads since the invention of the locomotive reaches the vast sum of $15,000,000,000.

The British National Lifeboat Institution has 300 boats and spends about $200,000 annually in rescuing, on an average, 4,000 lives.

Seeds of fruit and of many ornamental trees are best kept in damp sand, or sandy soil, and should be in a place so cool that they cannot germinate.

Columbia College has an endowment fund of $5,000,000; Johns Hopkins University, $3,000,000; Harvard, $2,500,000; Cornell, $2,000,000; Princeton, $2,000,000; Yale, $350,000.

There are to-day more than 242,000 Government pensioners. The amount of the year's pension to all pensioners is $25,493,742; but the actual payment is millions in excess, because the newly-admitted cases have arrears of pension due.

The entire coin circulation of Germany amounts to $664 500,000, consisting of $429,000,000 gold coin ($97,500,000 are thaler pieces, $20,000,000 Austrian thalers) $106,750,000 fractional silver currency and $11,250,000 nickel currency

It had been supposed that Maine exceeded all the States in number of lakes and miles of coast-line, but Michigan leads in those particulars. The Houghton Mining Gazette says Michigan has 36,128,640 acres of land, 5,173 inland lakes, 176 islands, and 1,620 miles of coast-line.

The quantity of silver obtained in 1878 from British mines was 397,471 ounces, and most of the precious metal was found in combination with lead. The total value of the silver thus obtained in the year in question was estimated at £88,296 19s. 6d. In the same year the gold found in British mines weighed 702 ounces 16 dwts. 8 grs., and was estimated to be of the value of £2,848 15s. 2d. Nearly all this British gold—namely, a fraction over 607 ounces—was procured in Wales.

The population of the globe may be roughly assumed at 1,421,000,000, divided thus: Europe, 309,000,000; Asia, 824,000,000; Africa, 199,000,000; Oceanica, 4,000,000; America, 85,000,000. It has been calculated from the mortality tables of known countries that the annual number of deaths throughout the world is 35,693,350, or that, in other words, 97,790 persons die each day. On the other hand, the balance of population is more than kept up by births at the rate of 104,800 per day. Seventy new lives are ushered in every minute of the twenty-four hours.

A German return which has been lately published gives the following particulars of the cost of building some of the leading continental theaters: The Stadt Theater, at Leipsic, built in 1868, cost altogether $420,000. The Court Theater, at Dresden, which was burnt down, and which was built between 1838 and 1841, cost $306,000; and the present theater, which took from 1871 to 1878 to build, cost $1,750,000. The Theater du Chatelet, in Paris, built between 1860 and 1862, cost $687,000. The Comic Opera House in Vienna, built between 1872 and 1874, cost $418,000. The Theater Lyrique, in Paris, built between 1860 and 1862, cost $450,000. The Imperial Opera House, in Vienna, which took from 1861 to 1868 to build, cost altogether $2,700,000. Finally, the Grand Opera, in Paris, the building of which occupied from 1861 to 1875, cost $8,000,000.

Among the Romans.

When good Gov. S——, who is a most devout Episcopalian, was the Chief Magistrate of Kentucky, he was wont to frequently entertain the members of the General Assembly at the Governor's mansion. To one of these levees came, with the member from his county, an old mountaineer who had just reached Frankfort with the raft of logs which he had brought down the Kentucky river. The old man, who was called familiarly "Uncle Johnny," soon became the center of an admiring group, to whom his jean clothes were not at all an improper attire for the Governor's levee; and his tongue being loosed by a glass of sherry wine, which he then tasted for the first time in his life, he was entertaining his auditors with stories from "his county," when the Governor approached.

"Uncle Johnny, here is the Governor," said one of the company; and straightway the old man was silent, for he was overwhelmed by this first vision of the majesty of the commonwealth.

"Go on with your story, Uncle Johnny," said some one; "the Governor will like to hear it."

"Yes, go on, Uncle Johnny," said the Governor, with a kindly smile of encouragement; and the old man, thus convinced that even the Governor was also a man, concluded his narrative.

Then, becoming bolder, he ventured to address the Governor, saying, "Guvnor, I went to your meeting yistiddy and I seen whar you se.s."

He had been to the Episcopal Church, and had been shown the Governor's pew

"Did you, Uncle Johnny?" responded Gov. S——. "And how did you like it?"

"Well, Guvnor, I never knowed much what they was a-doin', but I riz and fell with 'em every time."—"Editor's Drawer," in Harper's Magazine.

Traveling in the Olden Times.

Traveling in the early English days was very different from what it is in the present day; coaches were not invented, and the only vehicles which went upon wheels were carts and wagons, and these were heavy and clumsy. Horseback was the only conveyance, so that the sick and infirm could scarcely leave their houses. In those times there were very few roads upon which one could travel in safety. The Romans left excellent roads in many parts of Europe, which, however, were neglected, and they fell into decay. Marshes were perilous to cross; a bridge might be broken down, and when you tried to ford the stream, your horse might get out of his depth, and then he and his rider might be drowned. Sometimes the traveler had to pass through a dark forest, abounding with bears and wolves; and, at the end of his day's journey, instead of putting up at a comfortable inn, he was often compelled to stretch his cloak on the dark earth in some wretched hut. And, what was worse, the Kings and Princes were almost always at war with each other, and a stranger was constantly liable to be plundered and seized, or put to death, by the contending parties.

A Modern Solomon.

A rather novel proceeding has occurred in a Philadelphia court concerning the custody of a 5-year-old colored girl, the offspring of Edward Moore and Emma Gould. Some time ago, it appears, the mother was sent to prison for felony, and confided to a mulatto woman named Lydia Ann Thompson the custody of the child. The putative father subsequently claimed the child, as Lydia Ann was not rearing it properly, and transferred its custody to a woman residing in Camden. Thereupon Lydia Ann brought suit to contest the right of possession as against the other woman. The Judge, after listening to the facts of the case, declined to hear arguments from counsel, but decided the matter in this way: He directed the two claimants to stand up, then, calling the little girl to him, he asked her: "Which of these two women do you wish to go with?" The child made no reply, but when the Judge said: "Go touch the woman you wish to go with," the little one tripped down from the bench and quickly touched the woman from Camden. Counsel for the opposite side then wanted to argue the matter, but the Judge said: "That settles it."

Beer and Porter.

The Egyptians have the credit of being the first inventors of beer; they called it the Pelusian liquor, because it was first made at Pelusium, a city near the mouth of the Nile, about 1,200 years before the Christian era. The porter, for which London has become so distinguished, was first introduced about the year 1750. Previous to that time the malt liquors in general use were ale, beer and two-penny; or else a pint, or tankard, of three-threads, meaning a third of ale, beer and two-penny. Then the publican was obliged to draw from three casks to serve one customer. To avoid this trouble and waste a brewer, whose name was Harwood, conceived of an idea of making a liquor which should partake of the united flavors of ale, beer and two-penny; this he called entire, or entire-butt beer, meaning that it was drawn entirely from one cask or butt. It was soon discovered to be a very hearty, nourishing liquor, suitable for porters and other working people, whence it derived its name of porter.

An Involved Epistle.

The following letter, from a father to his son in college, ought to have stirred up the youth to save the reputation of his parents:

"My Dear Son—I write to send you two pair of my old breeches, that you may have a new coat made out of them. Also, some new socks which your mother has just knit by cutting down some of mine. Your mother sends you $10 without my knowledge, and, for fear you may not use it wisely, I have kept back half, and only send you $5. Your mother and I are well, except that your sister has got the measles, which we think would spread among the other girls if Tom had not had it before, and he is the only one left. I hope you will do honor to my teachings; if not you are an ass, and your mother and myself your affectionate parents."

He Was Overcome.

He called himself a commercial traveler, but vulgar people style him a drummer. He walked into a hotel office and proceeded to place his several pieces of luggage in the keeping of a son of Ham. Then he carelessly took up a pen and was registering his name when a good-sized sample of the cimex lectularius made its way slowly across the page of the register. The drummer stopped suddenly, and, after taking a long look at the insect, he cried: "Well, I've traveled all over the United States, and put up at all sorts of hotels, but I'm blessed if this isn't the first house I ever struck where those things come down-stairs and find out the number of a fellow's room."—Brooklyn Eagle.

DARK DESIGNS.

Desperate Republican Game—Determined to Win by Fair Means or Foul, and Count in the Next President Whether Elected or Not.

[Washington Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.]

There is no doubt whatever that the Republican leaders are already beginning to lay their plans for the execution of some desperate schemes to carry the country for the Republican party next year. The most strenuous efforts are being made to disguise their movements and blind the people of the country as to their intentions; but some things have leaked out which have excited a good deal of apprehension among Democrats, and which give color to the belief that they mean to inaugurate another Republican President regardless of whether the majority of the people of the country want him or not.

It has unquestionably been determined that no effort shall be made to carry any Southern State; and, more than this, steps have already been taken to prevent any Southern State from being carried. A part of this programme was carried out in the recent election in Louisiana. It will be remembered that the talk which prevailed at one time of sending Northern Republicans to canvass that State was suddenly stopped; that no Republicans went there except Mr. Stewart L. Woodford, of New York, and that after his arrival there there was a sudden and inexplicable apathy on the part of the Republicans; and that when the election returns came to be counted it appeared that in certain parishes where there is a very large colored population no Republican votes at all were cast. The Republican newspapers are already citing this last fact as an evidence that there was intimidation and bulldozing by Democrats in those parishes. The Democratic members of Congress who represent these parishes declare positively that the charges are absolutely false.

There is more than reason to believe that the failure of the negroes in those localities to vote was in obedience to the instructions carried to Louisiana by Mr. Woodford, who, it will be remembered, has had a good deal of reputation as an intriguer in politics, and was prepared to play a pretty important figure in the election of 1876 if the much-talked-of scheme of inaugurating Mr. Tilden in New York had been attempted. In plain English, it is charged, and there is reason to believe that the charge is true, that Mr. Woodford went to Louisiana for the purpose of informing the Republican leaders of that State of the plan which had been determined upon by the leaders of the Republican party to keep the South solid and make the North solid; and that in certain parishes the negro vote was kept at home purposely by the Republican leaders in order that there might be no possible chance of the Republicans carrying that State; and, also, for the purpose of furnishing a pretext for just such assertions of intrigue and bulldozing perpetrated by Democrats as are now being printed in the Republican newspapers throughout the North.

A similar series of this Republican programme may be expected to develop in New York, which State, there is grave reason to apprehend, the Republicans propose to seize, through the instrumentality of the present Legislature, which may be expected to exercise its undoubted prerogative under the constitution to change the method of choosing Presidential electors in New York, and pass a law that they shall be chosen by the Legislature, and then itself choosing Republican electors, in spite of the fact that New York was Democratic at the last election by 40,000 majority, and without giving the people of the State a chance to express their preference upon the subject next year. The charge that the Republicans intend to do this thing will doubtless be denounced as sensational. But some of the shrewdest observers in politics, and some of the longest-headed politicians here, are confident that the Republicans have really determined upon this plan of action, and really mean to seize New York in this way. Several things which have already happened are explainable upon this hypothesis.

It will be remembered that a few weeks before Congress met Senator Matt Carpenter delivered himself of the opinion at some length that the Democrats intended to inaugurate the next President, whether they elected him or not. This sensational opinion of Senator Carpenter was set up in type here, and slips of it were sent to all the leading Republican papers throughout the country. It appeared simultaneously in nearly all of the largest cities in the country. Its appearance created very great surprise at the time, inasmuch as no Democrat had hinted or thought of such a thing. The only reasonable explanation of Senator Carpenter's act is that he meant to prepare the public mind for extraordinary proceedings in the next Presidential election, and desired to create the impression that the Democrats contemplate seizing the Government by fraud or force as an excuse for what the Republicans had already determined upon. The journey of Mr. Woodford to Louisiana, otherwise inexplicable, is easily understood in the light of this programme.

And now the Republicans are following out a line of procedure in regard to Maine which also squints in the same direction. As is well known to all who have watched the situation in Maine at all seriously, neither Gov. Garcelon nor any one of the Council have performed any act or used any word which gives the slightest ground for the suspicion that they intended to do anything in that State contrary to the laws of the State and the constitution, or that they had any ulterior object in view, or meant anything else than to issue certificates of election to those State officers and members of the Legislature to whom they were authorized to issue such certificates by the law. Nevertheless, Senator Blaine, the entire Republican delegation from Maine, and the Republican newspapers in Maine, and elsewhere, are charging daily that Gov. Garcelon and the Democratic party in Maine mean to seize upon the Government of that State wrongfully, and that the Legislature, after they have thus wrongfully seized it and possessed themselves of it, mean to change the law in that State and choose Democratic electors next year.

The purpose of this is very plain. Senator Blaine is exceedingly anxious that the Maine Democrats shall do just this very thing. He and all his allies in the Republican party are trying by every means in their power to goad the Fusionists in Maine into changing the law in Maine in regard to the choice of electors, and enact a law which shall give that choice to the Legislature. The object of having the Democrats in Maine do this is to give the Republicans an excuse for doing the same thing in New York. The Republicans realize that they can afford to have this thing done in Maine, even if it should be carried to completion, and the Maine Legislature should elect Democratic electors, because the Republicans could lose Maine, and still carry the country, if they can secure New York and Indiana and the other Northern States. It is proposed to carry Indiana by the means of the negro-colonization scheme, which has already been inaugurated. The Democratic majority in that State is only about 5,000. The law of that State allows any man to vote after a residence of six months. Between this and spring the country may expect to see 100,000 negroes transported to Indiana from North Carolina and other Southern States.

This, in brief, is the desperate scheme which some of the most sagacious political leaders here firmly believe the Republican party is determined upon, and which they seem to be already preparing to carry out.

A most distressing accident occurred the other day at the farm of Mr. William Hodgen, four miles east of Vincennes, resulting in the death of two boys, the support of a widowed mother. The boys, whose names were Walter and Eddie, aged respectively 18 and 12, were felling a large sycamore tree, and, after chopping into the trunk until it was nearly ready to fall, made their plans for getting out of the way. They expected the tree to fall into a field, and they were to run into the road, and had taken down the fence to allow them time to reach a point of safety. When the tree began to sway and crack they ran, but unconsciously ran into instead of out of danger, the tree falling upon them, killing Walter, the elder, instantly, and so injuring Eddie that death relieved his sufferings an hour afterward.

Number of private schools taught, 635, with 678 teachers and 14,434 pupils, and an average daily attendance of 8,867, at an average cost of tuition per month, per pupel, of $1.15

Obituary.

Samuel E. Perkins, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Indiana, died at midnight, Dec. 17, at his residence in Indianapolis.

Judge Perkins was born in Brattleboro, Vt., Dec. 6, 1811. He came to this State, locating at Richmond, in 1836, and was admitted to the bar in 1837. In 1843 he was appointed Prosecuting Attorney for the Richmond judicial circuit. In 1844 he was one of the Presidential electors on the Polk ticket, and was appointed one of the Judges of the Supreme Court by Gov. Whitcomb. The Whig Senate refused to confirm the nomination, and he was appointed in 1845 with [illegible]. After the adjournment of the Legislature, however, the Governor again appointed him, and two years later he was regularly confirmed. He succeeded Judge Sullivan, and remained on the Supreme bench for nineteen consecutive years—until 1865. In 1872 Gov. Baker appointed him Judge of the Marion County Superior Court, which office he held until again elected to the Supreme bench in 1876. Two of Judge Perkins' acts while on the Supreme bench were the cause of wide and varied comment. One of these was his decision against the collection of the tax for school purposes as then provided for. The result of this was that for several months, until provided for by a following Legislature, the public schools were closed and the children deprived of educational privileges. The other decision was that in the case of Beebe vs. The State, in which Judge Perkins decided that the prohibitory liquor law, then in force but a short time, was, so far as it prohibited the manufacture and sale of liquors, unconstitutional. He was the editor of the Sentinel in 1865–'66, when it was known as the Indiana Herald. In 1858 he prepared an Indiana "Digest," and the following year published "The Indiana Practice." In addition to this he filled the law chair several years in the Northwestern Christian University. His service on the Supreme bench is longer than that of any other Judge, and when he entered upon the office he was probably younger than any one who has filled that position in Indiana.

He was twice married, first in 1838, and again in 1856, each time to a daughter of Joseph Pope, of Richmond. He had but two children. At the bar he has achieved the reputation of a sound and upright jurist.

Broken-Hearted Horses.

Noticing an old-time John critically examining one of the lead horses in the Pioche stage last evening, the reporter slid up alongside in time to hear his remark, sotto voice, "There's Dick going to the devil just like all the rest, and he hain't been on the road six months." An inquiry as to the cause of Dick's—a horse—evil destination led to the development of some facts in regard to stage stock that may be interesting to our readers. "You see that bay leader," said he; "that animal was put on the route six months ago, and he was a good one, full of life and ambition, and when he first went into harness it took two good men to hold him down before the start, and a smart driver to hold him afterward. Now he's as boggy as a dray-horse, and hasn't got spirit enough to hold up his head. They most all go that way. Horses are curious beasts. You can drive 'em twenty miles a day on all sorts of roads and they will keep fat and die of old age; but put 'em on a fifteen-mile run, where they've got to travel the same route every day, and they will break their hearts and die in less than two years. It works like a tread-mill on a man. They can't stand the monotony."—Eureka (Nev.) Leader.

GOLDSMITH MAID.

The Early History of the "Worthless Decker Mare," Who Became so Famous.

A correspondent of the New York Times, writing from Deckertown, N. J., gives a most interesting biography of the famous Goldsmith Maid. Her dam was a bony bay mare bought of a pedler, who was bred to Edsall's Hambletonian, and the colt was born in May, 1857. This colt, John B. Decker, her owner, intended to raise for use on his farm. It was a mare, and proved to be a most ungovernable piece of horseflesh. She was three years old before an attempt was made to break her to harness, as she was undersized, nervous and fretful. It was only by the most persistent effort that she could be induced to undergo the restraints of harness, and then she utterly refused to do any work on the farm. One day she was hitched to a plow to furrow out corn. To the surprise of her owner she worked with a will for half a day. Then she suddenly turned about in the furrow and started in another direction. Upon being forced back to her place she lay down and kicked herself loose from the plow and ran off in the direction she had chosen. Once afterward she drew a stone drag for two or three hours, and that was all the work she ever could be induced to do on the Decker farm. She was turned loose in the fields, and she ran at will, as free and unrestrained as the wild horses of the plains.

To add to the annoying contrariness of the mare on the farm, she was in the habit of making a trip through the adjoining country, regardless of fences, ditches or streams, regularly once a month. She COULD JUMP ANY FENCE ON THE FARM, and if one of extraordinary height was built around her inclosure, she would kick an opening in it somewhere. She would make a circuit of eight or ten miles around, when out on these journeys, and everyone knew the "worthless Decker mare," and there were a few persons who, knowing the blood that was in the colt, believed that something might be made of her. In November, 1864, John H. Decker, nephew of John B., tried to purchase the mare, but her owner declined all offers. Mrs. John B. Decker, however, wanted her husband to sell the mare, and, after much persuasion by her, the nephew obtained the mare for $200, and, after catching her (no easy matter, when it is stated that the mare had not looked through a collar for four years), he drove away with his prize. Arriving home, his mother objected to his owning what she termed a "race horse," and her husband joining in the debate, John H. sold her to one William Tompkins, a sporting man known as "Jersey Bill," for $366. In the spring of 1865 John H. Decker met Alden Goldsmith on an Erie railway train, and the result of the conversation was that Goldsmith bought the mare of "Jersey Bill" for $600. After purchasing the mare Alden Goldsmith put her in charge of Bill Bodine, a noted Orange county horseman. When he took her four men were required to hitch her up.

She was, from use and inclination, a runner, and it was for months before Mr. Bodine could induce her to take the desired gait. She ran at every opportunity, and several times came near killing her trainer. Goldsmith was thoroughly disgusted and discouraged with her, and, but for Bodine, would have disposed of her for any price. The driver knew there was sterling stuff in the nervous little mare, and by months of patient, kind and persistent effort, made her as tractable and obedient as could be desired. No matter to what height of fame she reaced under subsequent management, the world is indebted to-day to the skill, untiring effort and rare judgment of William Bodine, for the peerless Goldsmith Maid. Her first race as a trotter was at Goshen, N. J., where she defeated a well-known horse, General Walker, in three straight heats, making a record of 2:26. Immediately after she became famous, and was named Goldsmith Maid. Goldsmith owned the horse until November, 1868, when he sold her for $20,000 to Budd Doble and Barney Jackman. Two years later she was purchased by Henry N. Smith for $35-000. She was withdrawn from the turf in 1877, with a record of 2:14, made in her nineteenth year, in 1874. She had trotted 132 races, and won ninety-two. Her aggregate winnings were about $240,000. Among her great achievements was the trotting of three successive heats in Buffalo, on August 3, 1876, in 2:16, 2:15½ and 2:15. Since her retirement she has become a mother in her twenty-second year.

Who was Washington?

An American gentleman, who has resided in London for several years, recently told me a funny story. He was one day invited out to dinner at the house of an eminent London solicitor. The daughter of the host sat next to him at the table, and observed him with much courtesy, finally making the stereotyped remark that she was "surprised to see him so white; she had thought all Americans were copper colored." Soon after some questions arose respecting our national currency, and my friend took from his pocket some specimens of our bank notes, among which was one bearing the portrait of General Washington. The note passed from hand to hand around the table, and finally came to the young lady before mentioned: "Whose portrait is that?" she asked of my friend. "General Washington," he answered. "And who was he?" she inquired, "One of our presidents?" cautiously answered the gentleman, who was anxious to see how far his fair neighbor's ignorance would extend. "One of your presidents; ah, indeed, did he come before or after Mr. Lincoln?"—Cor. Philadelphia Telegraph.

Special Announcement.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishers of the STATE SENTINEL which enables us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the COURIER and WEEKLY SENTINEL one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "THE LAW OF THE FARM," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.
2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.
3rd What the deed of a farm includes.
4th The farmer's rights in the road.
5th As to farm fences.
6th As to estray and trespassing animals.
7th The farmer's habilities for his animals.
8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.
9th Of water rights and drainage.
10th Of tresspassing on the farm.
11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The INDIANA WEEKLY STATE SENTINEL is an eight-page paper, (the same as the COURIER) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the COURIER subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

EDUCATIONAL COLUMN.

By Prof. W. H. MacIntosh.

PATRONS AND TEACHER.

Our schools are all in session, and it is worth the patron's while to ask himself what he can do to help the school. In one respect he can call at the school, ostensibly to take his children there, or coming after them early, stop awhile and observe the exercises of the afternoon. He will show interest in the children's efforts to study and to recite. He will notice good points in the government and instruction, and good lessons recited by the children, and take occasion at home to speak of them, commending the teacher and praising the pupils, and saying that the teacher understands his business, and that the school is doing good work. The effect will be felt in the course of next day's exercises. Praise good order and it becomes better; speak of good lessons and they will be studied harder; say a good word for the teacher and it will encourage him, and there will be greater effort made.

Talk to the teacher about your children, and tell him frankly of any peculiarities that he ought to know. If a child is sensitive and diffident the teacher should know it, lest harsh treatment, unwittingly bestowed, should induce a lasting and injurious distaste for school. If another is weak physically, but of ambitious mind, the teacher should know it that he may hold him back from intense application. If one is slow and indolent, he should be incited to put forth ordinary effort, and if the child is not governed at home he may learn some beneficial restraint at school.

There is a good deal said about visiting schools. It pays for the trouble incurred. The effect is immediate and lasting. Many of our country schools do not have a single visitor during the entire term. There are deserving, energetic young men who should have encouragement for their good work and their patience and labor should be recognized. They know that the term is short and that they are ill-paid, but they find no fault with the trustee, because they know that he pays all that the money which comes into his hands will permit. They regret that a tuition fund is not allowed to be levied to swell the fund for paying teachers, but knowing that the officer is blameless, they do not complain.

It is too often the case, parents, that you judge the teacher by hearsay evidence. He is given a reputation for excellence that he does not merit, or is denounced as incompetent, when he is laboring faithfully and doing meritorious service. In one school, recitation seats are placed parallel on each side of the stove and upon them children sit for long intervals indulging in a pleasant whispered chat, while the teacher unconcernedly calls class after class to recite, until at close of school all take seats for dismissal, and the children who have been allowed to waste time and make disorder, go home to tell how they like to go to school to Mr. Do-as-you-please-if-you-don't-disturb-me.

At another school, the call to books is disregarded, and the boys continue at their play some distance away, and when reprimanded, become sullen. The teacher remonstrates with them for idleness, and endeavors to incite them to study. His well-meant efforts are fruitless, and the head-strong boys return home to stab the reputation of a faithful teacher by slanderous reports of inability, and the district begins to have a name for insubordination, and the teacher is blamed for it.

Parents may induce a respect and sympathy between their children and the teacher which will make their step lightsome schoolward bound, relieve the drudgery of teaching and make of school a pleasant place of resort. When teachers are popular with parents, and there is co-operation between them, pupils will be pleased, interested and instructed, and great practical benefit will be brought about.

It is not to be forgotten that the the schools are maintained at the expense of the parents and by the state. It is a remarkable general rule that the employed are responsible to employers and under their direction. This rule has greater application in some fields of labor than in others. It applies to teachers to a certain extent, and it is a pleasure to observe their cheerful obedience to it. If parents desire their children to confine their attention exclusively to certain branches, it is the teacher's duty to submit to their wishes. He may do all he can to cause them to see the matter as he does, but failing, he must bow to their authority. Teachers may recommend or suggest, but it is for the parent or his representative, the trustee, to decide. There are some teachers who regard themselves as supreme in the school-room, and resist any interference with their plans. Their number in the schools of DeKalb is limited, and most are ready and even anxious to further the wishes of parents. Troubles occasionally arise in the exceptional case. Parents think the state of a school demands investigation. The teacher acts wisely who makes this an occasion to state his plans in detail and to ask their assistance. If requirements are in excess of his ability or disposition, he has his option to resign or else yield in good humor to their wishes. When parents properly express their wishes regarding the instruction of their children, it is poor policy to treat them coldly civil; hearty acquiescence will secure confidence, and in the end the teacher will be the gainer, in purse and character.

The authority of parents on questions connected with the education of their children should be acknowledged. They are made wholly responsible for the manner in which their children are prepared to discharge the duties of life, and society is careful not to infringe upon the parent's desires in respect to the education of his children. This is the strong barrier to compulsory education. It might be that enlightened government would do better for the young than parents are doing, but it will not do it. The parent must be ready by argument and persuasion, for upon him must fall the consequences of well or ill-advised instruction when the teacher of a few months has departed to return as instructor no more. Teachers have little at stake, and parents hazard everything, and it is justice that the one regard the wishes of the other and are rewarded in time by an appreciation and cordial support which renders their daily work a round of ennobling pleasure.

Often in response to the question, "How would you secure good government in school," the reply has been "by gaining the good will of the scholars." It will be found that no inconsiderable accessory to this rests in the good will of the parents. It is reasonable to conclude that all parents are glad to see their children properly taught in learning, morality and industry. The teacher who takes judicious measures to accomplish these objects will fail in obtaining the home endorsement, without which he might as well resign his position.

Parents are left to decide what culture their children are to receive at school. If cheered at home, they will go to the school-room with warm hearts. They will be prepared and willing to be guided and instructed, and will unconsciously perhaps learn valuable lessons of moral and intellectual beauty from the constant example of an observant and faithful mentor.

Parents, therefore, have the power to build up and strengthen their district school or they can weaken and destroy it. Let them use their influence to make the teacher's services valuable indirectly through their children to them, and let their language tend to increase confidence in the wisdom of the teacher's plans, and let them assist by promoting punctuality, urging diligence and commending actual progress.

What It Cost to Keep Grant

[Springfield Republican.]

Politically speaking, and ignoring moral issues, the republican party can ill afford to shoulder Grant. It tried to for eight years, beginning with a majority of 305,000 in 1868, and ending with a majority of 266,000 in 1876.

Ohio Democratic if Grant Is Nominated

[Cleveland Plaindealer.]

A change of 3 per cent. of the vote of Ohio will make it democratic in 1880. The nomination of Grant will make Ohio one of the certain democratic states. Put the "King of 'Merica" in nomination by all means.

WHITE-HOUSE SPORTS.

Favorite Amusements of Hayes and His Cabinet—The Presidential Fraud Likes "Pussy Wants a Corner"—Key Plays Solitaire and Seven-Up, and Schurz Plays the Piano.

The Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Times, H. J. R., thus describes the various devices of Hayes and his cabinet for resting their wearied brains after their monotonous official labors: "I called on Postmaster-General Key the other evening and found him engaged in a hot game of cards with—himself. He is probably one of the most inveterate solitaire players in the country. Well, didn't Napoleon play Solitaire? Key says he likes the game, first, because he likes to play with a sensible man, and, second, because he likes a skillful man for an opponent. After leaving the judge I met in the Ebbitt house rotunda a cabinet sharp (that is, one who knows all about cabinet officers), and I asked him how the several gentlemen pass their evenings. "Well," said he, "you have already seen how Key passes a weary hour. You will find him that way every evening. He never misses an invitation to dinner, and he is very social. He has the fewest airs of any man in the cabinet. He will go and play seven-up with anybody who is respectable, and he will drink his share of the whisky and smoke his share of cigars. A very good old fellow is Key."

"How do the other cabinet roosters pass their time?"

"O, well, Schurz generally reads, and when his eyes trouble him from overwork he goes to the piano, shuts his eyes, the room being somewhat darkened, and improvises. He is the only man in the cabinet who knows anything of music. His style is sometimes weird and mournful and sometimes it is the gayest. He and Henry Waterson will sit together and sing and play a whole evening.

"The piano is Schurz's diversion, as horses were Grant's."

"How about Sherman? How does he spend his evenings?"

"Well, Sherman is a great newspaper reader, and just now he is making himself amiable with the southern politicians. He frequently has them at his house of evenings. Sherman is more of a social man than you would think. He is full of anecdote, and his reminiscences are very entertaining. He is cold only in social life. He is also fond of a good dinner and a glass of wine. The Shermans all are. The secretary very often gets his short-hand writer at his house and spends the whole evening writing letters. His correspondence is very large."

"How about Uncle Dick Thompson? Does he work evenings?"

"No. He is very domestic and passionately fond of young people, and he has always a troop of young children about him. He has always a houseful of company, and he likes to romp with the little ones. Besides, the secretary of the navy has reached that age when he likes to go to bed early. He is an early riser, too, and then he pitches into his official work. There is not a man in the cabinet who devotes more hours to his office than he. He doesn't trust everything to subordinates, and you will never find his table piled a foot thick with papers of an important character, as Robeson's used to be."

"How about Attorney-General Devens?"

"Well, he is another hard worker. He studies a good deal of nights. He is not particular so he gets to bed by 12, 1 or 2 o'clock at night. He is a jollier fellow than he generally gets credit for. He likes whist and Boston, and he is fond of the theatre. He also likes pleasant fellows about him, and he can tell a good story. He likes, withal, the study of literature, and is, in this regard, a man of fine and correct tastes. He is not a man of strong character, for, like many Boston men, he cares too much for appearances. But he is honest and is a conscientious officer."

"Is Secretary McCrary a great student?"

"I am afraid McCrary is a little fat and lazy. He is a great lover of the law, and likes to read cases. He is a slow, heavy man, who does not like to go out of evenings, but he is good-natured and always treats people politely, although reservedly. He is better fitted for judge than for jumping political fences. In the war department he is little more than a clerk, but in cabinet, whenever a big law question comes up, I would rather have his opinion than all the rest put together. He is old common sense. But he is not secretary of war. General Sherman runs the war department, and in this respect the military power is above the civil. Belknap is the only man who ever brought Sherman to terms. Belknap made Sherman a subordinate and drove him to St. Louis."

"Well, how does Evarts spend his evenings?"

"O, Evarts is so rarely here that I can hardly tell. You had better ask some New York client of his. Evarts is, however, fond of company and is the best story-teller in the cabinet. He is also a big eater, although he is one of the thinnest men I ever saw. I really don't know how he passes his evenings. The chances are that if he has company he will talk to them as long as they will stay. He gives fine dinner parties, and has the best house for entertaining in Washington. He does not by any means disgrace the standard established by Mr. Fish in this respect."

"How does the president pass his evenings?"

"Now, look here," said my friend, "you are going too far and are guying me." I assured him I was not. "You must surely know, then," said he, "that the president is the jolliest man in the world in his home-circle. He is in the private rooms of the White House every evening, where Mrs. Hayes receives all who call. He says pleasant things to everybody and makes himself very agreeable. When it rains, or when from other causes nobody calls during the evening, he plays 'puss wants a corner' with the young ladies, for there are always young ladies visiting at the White house."

"Now, honestly, does the president play 'puss wants a corner?'"

"Upon my word he does, for I have seen him do it, and he seemed to enjoy it."

Controlling a Colt.

[Michigan Farmer.]

Restiveness is sometimes but rarely hereditary; more often arises from imperfect breaking; very frequently from being left, week after week, fed in a loose box without exercise. It is quite impossible to say what will cure restiveness, but the first remedy to try is work. If the animal is old and confirmed in vice it requires the assistance of a master of arts in matters equestrian. But very often, if the first symptoms are checked, the cure will [illegible] long or difficult. A gentleman who had been breeding and breaking horses for more than 40 years always lunges his colts carefully, not brutally, before he puts them in harness the first time. They are kept standing and are driven in harness without vehicle attached, for several days before they are tackled to a brake. So also, if a horse after being idle, shows any signs of having forgotten his breaking lesson, he is first lunged backward until he sweats, then with a rider on him and afterward his days' work in the middle of a cart team where he is not asked to draw many pounds. These seem trifles, but it must be remembered that the very best horses the soonest become above themselves. Many a first-rate animal, that would be pronounced by timid driver or rider as dangerous when first mounted or driven, after being at Tattersall's from Friday to Monday would be found a perfect joy and delight after two or three days' regular work. Magnificent animals are spoild by over-feeding, want of exercise and brutal repression.

Pause, Ponder and Peruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others. The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infinitesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand, and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company. Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, N York.

THE NEW STYLE

$25 FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.

THE USUAL $65 MACHINE REDUCED TO 25.

$150 per Week Made Easy.

Home and Wagon Free to Agt's

The CHEAPEST and BEST in the World.

Too Long in Use to Doubt its Superior MERITS

No Money to Pay until Machine is Delivered to you and Examined.

It makes the shuttle, double-thread, lock-stitch, (the same on both sides of the work), which received the highest reward at the Centennial exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., 1876. And is complete with a larger assortment of attachments for fine work than any other machine, and reduced to only $25.

It is an easy and pleasant machine to operate, requires the least care, produces every variety of work, and will last until the next century begins. Strong, simple, rapid and efficient.

Use it once and you will use no other. The money cheerfully refunded if it will not outwork and outlast any machine at double the price.

Agents sell them faster than any other in consequence of their being the "best at the lowest price."

Each machine thoroughly warranted with written guarantee for five years. Kept in order free of charge; money refunded at once if not satisfactory.

It is the most solid, reliable, and satisfactory machine ever invented for all kinds of family work. It is an acknowledged unequivocal mechanical success, thoroughly tested and used in thousands of homes. An efficient, silent, rapid, reliable and ever-ready helper to the weary wife or seamstress, it will do the work of a family for a lifetime, or it will earn from $4 to $5 per day for any one who wishes to sew for a living. This machine costs less than half the price of any new machine of like quality. Has extra long, large-sized shuttle, easily removed. Extra large-sized bobbins, holding 100 yards of thread, doing away with the frequent rewinding of bobbins. It is built for strength and constant hard work. Interchangeable working parts, manufactured of fine polished steel. Will run for years without repairs; is simple to learn, easy to manage, understood perfectly in an hour, and always ready in a moment to do every description of heavy or fine work, at less cost or price than any other machine ever did or can do. It will sew anything a needle can pierce, from lace or cambric to heavy cloth or harness, with any kind of thread, and will run off twenty yards per minute; it uses strong, straight needles, and never breaks them. It cannot miss or drop a stitch, ravel or break the thread. If you have any other machine, buy this and have a better one. The ease and rapidity of its motion and quality of its work, are its best recommendations. It will hem, fell, tuck, braid, cord, bind, gather, quilt, ruffle, pleat, fold, scallop, shirr, roll, baste, embroider, run up braids, etc., with elegance, ease and quickness, unsurpassed by any machine ever invented.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

The price for our new machines are less than those asked by dealers in second-hand, rebuilt and refinished machines, or those selling off old stock to close up business, many such inferior and old style machines being offered as new at reduced prices; beware of imposition and only buy new machines. There are no new first-class machines offered as low as the "FAMILY," by many dollars.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

At Bangor, Me., on Christmas day, considerable excitement was caused by reports of the intended removal of arms from the State Arsenal to Augusta. Two trucks were loaded and had proceeded a ways toward the depot, when an excited crowd overtook them and demanded an explanation of the drivers. An unsatisfactory reply being given, the mob undertook to unhitch the horses, when a young man sprung on one of the wagons and stated that he was a clerk in the office of the Adjutant General, and that the munitions of war were intended for use in defense of the State House. At this the crowd became furious, and the Mayor advised the clerk to beat a retreat, notifying him that he was powerless to resist the crowd. The arms were then returned to the arsenal, under an escort of police.

The city of Boston has just suffered from another destructive conflagration in the business quarter. The fire started in the rear of Houghton, Osgood & Co.'s publishing house, destroying that establishment, the paper warehouse of Rice, Kendall & Co., and numerous other large and valuable buildings. The loss is roughly estimated at from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000.

By a fire-damp explosion in a coal mine near Pittsburgh, two men were killed outright and a third badly injured....The early accounts of the Boston fire were somewhat exaggerated. It is now ascertained that the total loss will reach little over $1,000,000.

The Postmaster at New York has been instructed by Postmaster General Key to refuse the payment of money orders or the delivery of registered letters addressed to certain firms in Broad and Wall streets, purporting to be engaged in stock brokerage....The extraordinary demand for stock in the Edison Electric Light Company continues. One of the largest holders was offered $800,000 for 200 shares, but refused to sell for less than $1,000,000. These shares cost him a few months ago $6,600.

THE WEST.

Doby Fox, charged with killing Whicher, the well-known Pinkerton detective, near Missouri City, in 1875, has been arrested, and is now in jail at Kansas City, Mo....At Worthington, Wis., Lester C. Turner, a merchant of Sioux Falls, was set upon on coming out of an outhouse of the hotel by two men, who knocked him down and robbed him of $15,500, which he had just realized by the sale of his business.

At an early hour on the morning of Dec. 28, an express train on the Chicago and Alton railway was thrown from the track near Bardan, Ill., by a broken rail. In the chair-car the stove upset and, the wood work taking fire, the coach was soon in flames. After a few moments of dreadful suspense the passengers were all rescued except Col. Bond, of Auburn, Ill., who was fatally burned. The porter of the sleeper was killed and about twenty-five passengers seriously injured....Dispatches from Los Pinos Agency state that "Ouray and the chiefs selected to go to Washington came to the agency, bringing with them only a part of the prisoners. Gen. Hatch refused to go unless all the prisoners demanded by the commission were surrendered. Ouray asked for further time, and five days more were granted to deliver them. Ouray is either playing a double game or is unable to accomplish what he attempted."

Two men, Sam Woodruff and Joe Seminole, the latter a half-breed Indian, who murdered B. B. Hayward, a farmer of Jefferson county, Col., last September, were taken from jail at Golden, Col., last week, and lynched by 150 masked men....Two suits, one for $1,000 and the other for $8,000, have just been brought in Cincinnati against Archbishop Purcell.

By the explosion of the Wabash river steamer Prairie City, near Evansville, Ind., three lives were lost, and the Captain's wife had both her arms blown off and the Captain lost one arm....The business portion of the city of Springfield, Ill., was thrown into great consternation the other morning, by the explosion of a boiler in a steam flouring mill. Fragments of the boiler and the building were scattered for blocks around, but fortunately no one was seriously injured.

Robert C. Wright, a prominent Chicago merchant, and member of the firm of Wright & Tyrrell, is dead.

THE SOUTH.

N. D. Sadler, late Representative in the Arkansas Legislature from Franklin county, was recently assassinated at his home by unknown parties....Four negroes, charged with murder, were taken from jail, at Amite, La., by a mob of fifty men, and shot to death.

A large party of colored people arrived at Washington last week from North Carolina, and left for Indiana. They were comfortably clad, and had a large quantity of baggage, including household effects. All had purchased through tickets before starting on their exodus....At Calf creek, Searcy county, Ark., the boiler of Benjamin Taylor's saw-mill exploded, killing instantly his son-in-law, Wade Campbell, Wade Griffin, Kennedy and Burt Woodard.

GENERAL.

Burned: A part of the Carleton College buildings, at Northfield, Minn., loss $60,000; several stores at Newton, Iowa, loss $36,000; a Catholic Church at Manayunk, Pa., loss $20,000; the Bailey hat factory, at Newburyport, Mass., loss $110,000.

There seems to be little room to doubt that Thomas A. Edison has at last solved the problem of the electric light, as the dispatches report that his test on Christmas eve was successful in the illumination of his laboratory and several houses, and even Christmas trees, at Menlo Park. He himself says that his work is done, and now, after many sleepless days and nights, he shall rest. He has given to the world a Christmas gift of rare value, use and beauty, and one which will send his name down to posterity high up in the ranks of the world's great inventors. It is only a little lamp, about the size of an orange, and a strip of paper of the shape of a horseshoe, but a lamp almost as magical as that of Aladdin, and certainly much more useful. This little lamp, which can be made at a cost of 25 cents, is a plain glass globe, in the bottom of which there is a metallic stopper, through which pass copper wires connected by a strip of carbonized paper. The secret of the process is sending a current of electricity through the strip of paper, the carbon becoming luminous at once in the globe, which is hermetically sealed. The only condition of success is the exclusion of the air. The carbon filaments are not consumed. On the other hand, though they glow with a very brilliant light, they grow harder and more serviceable, and give better light, with use. Mr. Edison's previous experiments had been made with platinum, but a fortunate accident in one of processes revealed to him that paper, which costs comparatively nothing, would answer all the purposes of the precious metal.

A force of 400 men has been organized in Chihuahua, Mexico, for the purpose of exterminating the Indians, who, until now, have been performing that service for the whites. Fearing that the Greasers will drive the savages back into New Mexico, Gov. Wallace, of that Territory, has issued arms to about 1,000 citizens, and it is prestimed that, between the two, the redskin will pass away.

A Philadelphia dispatch says: "The advance in iron during the past week has been the most rapid yet, and the price has now reached the highest point known in many years. In fact, the furnace men, who have been putting all their works in blast as fast as possible, find orders pouring in even ahead of the starting of fires, and the rage seems to be to buy iron, as if it were a bonanza."

Gen. Grant and party left Washington on the evening of Dec. 30 for the South and Cuba and Mexico. The entire party on the trip consists of Gen. and Mrs. Grant, Col. and Mrs. Fred Grant, Gen. and Mrs. Sheridan, and Mrs. McKinley and Miss Felt, of Galena.

WASHINGTON.

Thirteen cases of small-pox are reported in the District of Columbia. The National Board of Health will endeavor to stamp out the plague....A Washington dispatch says: "Two men have been arrested who contemplated stealing Gen. Grant's Arabian horses from Gen. Beale's farm and holding them for a large reward for their return."

Secretary Schurz is represented as being gloomy and discouraged at the Indian prospect, and to be about to agree with Gen. Sherman that the Utes are not to be trusted.

Small-pox has become so prevalent at Washington as to excite alarm on the part of the dwellers there....The palatial residence of ex-Senator Stewart, of Nevada, one of the less finest private mansions at the tapital, has been partially destroyed by fire....A letter from Secretary Sherman to Senator Morrill on the subject of refunding is now made public. The Secretary states that a total of $772,761,700 of United States bonds will become due and redeemable between now and the 1st day of July, 1881, and as it is plain that such an amount cannot be paid off within the next eighteen months he has recommended that authority be granted for refunding those bonds at 4 per cent. He believes the present time to be particularly advantageous for carrying out such a refunding plan, but has no faith at all in the practicability of Fernando Wood's scheme of refunding at 3½ per cent. interest, as he is certain that bonds bearing that rate of interest could not be sold at par.

POLITICAL.

A meeting of the Maine Greenback State Committee was held at Augusta last week, at which there was a full attendance. Delegates were appointed to the National Convention in Washington, those at large being Congressmen G. W. Ladd and T. H. Murch and Solon Chase. Resolutions were passed indorsing the action of the Governor and Council. They declare full confidence in them, and believe they counted the vote honestly; denounce the utterances of the Republican politicians in public meetings, and the denunciations against the Executive Department of the State as an insult to the Governor and Council and a disgrace to the State as well as to the party.

Mr. Alexander Stephens, says a Washington correspondent, has again chosen to place himself on record in favor of Grant as against Tilden, and is reported to have declared that, as between Grant and Tilden, Grant could obtain a large majority in Georgia, especially if the person nominated on the ticket with Grant should be a Southern man....The Washington Post is authority for the statement that Horatio Seymour will accept the Democratic nomination for the Presidency, if tendered him.

A dispatch of Dec. 27, from Bangor, Me., says that influential Democrats have united in an appeal to Gov. Garcelon to accept the suggestion of ex-Gov. Morrill, and allow the courts to settle the pending troubles. The same dispatch intimates that the Governor is likely to heed the request.

Senator Edwards, of Vermont, who thought of resigning in order to accept an appointment to the Supreme bench on the retirement of Justice Hunt, which is expected soon, has been remonstrated with by his constituents so vigorously that he has decided to remain in the Senate until the expiration of his term in 1881.

The Hon. E. Spront, of Veazie, Me., one of the Fusion members-elect to the Legislature of that State, has written a letter declining to accept the certificate of election tendered him.

Dispatches of the 30th ult., from Augusta, Me., state that Gov. Garcelon declines to submit the questions proposed by ex-Senator Morrill to the Supreme Court. He says he thinks he has no legal right to do so, and that certificates of election having once been issued by the proper authority the case is no longer open. There was great excitement throughout the State. Large meetings were being held by Republicans and Fusionists, at all of which warlike sentiments were expressed. The Governor had an interview with the Mayor of Augusta relative to the protection of the Legislature on the day of assembling, the latter agreeing to place 200 special policemen on duty. A dispatch from Portland says the Montgomery Guards have been notified to hold themselves in readiness to march at a moment's notice.

Several wagon-loads of arms and ammunition were removed from the arsenal at Bangor to Augusta, Me., on the 30th ult. In response to the protests of a committee of safety Gov. Garcelon said he had ordered the transfer for the purpose of testing the loyalty of the people of Bangor. He would not call out the military unless forced to do so by disturbances which the police cannot control. The Fusionists held a meeting at Portland in the evening, at which Congressmen Murch and Ladd made speeches approving the acts of the Governor and Council.

The Pennsylvania Republican State Central Committee has determined upon Feb. 4 as the date of the Republican State Convention. This action is interpreted as a blow to the hopes of Senator Blaine regarding the Pennsylvania delegation. It is believed to mean Grant....A dispatch from Providence, R. I., says: "Gov. Van Zandt has reconsidered his previous decision to accept the Russian mission, and has declined principally on account of inadequate salary. Gen. Burnside, who was also tendered the position, declined for the same reason."

FOREIGN.

The upper chamber of the Spanish Parliament has approved the bill abolishing slavery in Cuba....The health of the Empress of Russia remains unimproved, and apartments for her occupancy have been secured at Rome, Italy....The fierce and bloody war by sea and land which has been raging for several months past between the Chilians and the allied forces of Peru and Bolivia is said to be virtually at an end. The Chilians have proved victorious in almost every battle, and their allied antagonists are badly demoralized and on the point of breaking up.

The British Ambassador at Constantinople has demanded the release of a Mussulman now under sentence of death in that city for the crime of translating the Bible into the Turkish language.

William Hepworth Dixon, an extensive traveler and a popular writer, and for many years the editor of the London Athenæum, is dead.....It is said that in the spring Russia will dispatch two columns, one under Gen. Kaufman, from the Amu Darya river, and the other under Gen. Tergukassoff, from the Caspian sea, against Merv and perhaps Herat.....Cable dispatches report a frightful railroad accident in Scotland. A portion of the railroad bridge spanning the Firth of Tay was blown down while a train from Edinburgh to Dundee was crossing, and all of the passengers, 150 to 200 in number, were drowned.....Advices from Afghanistan report that Gen. Roberts, on the 23d of December attacked, defeated and dispersed the enemy around Cabul and reoccupied the city. Gen. Gough's reinforcing column arrived after the engagement was over.

The city of Paris, where cold weather is of rare occurrence, has just recovered from over a month of severe weather, during which there was much snow and the thermometer was as low as 8 degrees below zero—the coldest ever known in that city....The news that Edison had perfected his electric light caused a great tumble in London gas stocks.

As the King and Queen of Spain were driving through the gate of the Royal Palace in Madrid, a few evenings ago, a young man dressed as a workman fired a shot from a revolver at the royal carriage, but his aim was bad, and nobody was hurt. The would-be assassin, who is a mere boy, was arrested....It having been reported that the Czar had ordered the nobles to divide their property among the peasants in Russia, and those on the lands of Count Schouvaloff seeing no signs of the grand divide in their case, a large number of them attacked the castle of that diplomatist, near St. Petersburg, and sacked it.

The official report of the North British railway in regard to the terrible calamity from the break in the Tay bridge says: "The falling girders made a very clean break from the portion standing. Almost the only signs of smash are the ends of the rails on which the trains ran, which are torn asunder. The rails remaining are wrenched out of their chairs for a few yards." The British newspapers are unanimous in demanding that a searching inquiry be made into the cause of the accident.

FRIGHTFUL DISASTER.

The recent bridge disaster at Dundee, Scotland, was one of the most appalling in the long list of railroad accidents. That a train of five coaches, carrying ninety passengers, should plunge from a bridge into a river, and not a living soul escape to tell the story of the accident seems almost incredible. Cable dispatches give the following account of the affair: During a terrific gale several spans of the bridge crossing the Firth of Tay were blown down. This happened at 7:14 o'clock in the evening, while the express train from Edinburgh to Dundee was crossing.

At the time the train reached the south end of the bridge the signals indicated that everything was in safe condition. It was seen to pass upon the bridge, and soon after the gloom was illuminated by a flash of fire; then communication by wire was broken. This interruption alarmed the railway officials, who ventured out upon the structure, notwithstanding the storm, only to find a huge gap, through which the train had plunged into the water. The loss was made certain, at the same time, by the drifting ashore of mail-bags, baggage, clothing, fragments of the coaches and portions of the bridge-work.

The whole country was aroused by this catastrophe, and thousands of people came in from the surrounding districts to obtain news of the accident. Steamers and small boats went to the scene of the accident for the purpose of rescuing bodies.

The bridge at which this frightful calamity took place was, until the erection of that over the Firth of Forth, the largest in the world. The Firth of Tay, across which the bridge is built, is simply an arm of the sea, and vessels of 500 tons burden run under the structure.

The Tay is a principal river and estuary of Scotland, running from 120 to 160 miles. The cities of Dundee and Earl are on the north side of the estuary, and Newburg on its south side. The bridge was commenced in 1874, and has only been completed within a few years. It forms a connection between the town of Dundee and the North British railway system in Fife, and crosses the Firth of Tay about a mile and a half to the west of Dundee. The length of the bridge exceeds two miles. For the first five spans the bridge is on a curve of a quarter of a mile radius; it is then straight for a distance of a mile and a half. At the south end of the bridge the rails are seventy-eight feet above high water. Over the navigable part of the river the rails are 92 feet above high water. There are three spans of 60, two of 80, ten of 120, twelve of 136, thirteen of 230, one of 150, eleven of 120, twenty-five of 60, one of 155, and six of 27 feet; total number of spans, 84. The piers are founded on rock, and are double cylinders of brick work.

The superstructure consists wholly of wrought-iron girders; the bracing is of double lattice form. The girders for the 230 feet spans and the bow-string girders have wrought-iron cross-girders resting on and riveted to the lower timber on which the roadway is placed.

It was supposed that the bridge was as strong as iron, wood and brick could make it, and was looked upon in the United Kingdom as one of the finest specimens of engineer art that had ever been produced.

The gap created in the bridge through which the train was precipitated is not less than half a mile in length. It includes eleven spans of 245 feet each, and one of 145 feet.

The great height from which the cars fell, together with the fact that the passengers were all locked up, according to practice on British railways, rendered the destruction of all on board possible.

The Sorrows of Genius.

Homer was a beggar.

Spencer died in want.

Cervantes died of hunger.

Terrence, the dramatist, was a slave.

Dryden lived in poverty and distress.

Sir Walter Raleigh died on the scaffold.

Butler lived a life of penury, and died poor.

Bacon lived a life of meanness and distress.

Plautus, the Roman comic poet, turned a mill.

Paul Borghese had fourteen trades, and yet starved with all.

Tasso, the Italian poet, was often distressed for 5 shillings.

Steele, the humorist, lived a life of perfect warfare with bailiffs.

Otway, the English dramatist, died prematurely, and through hunger.

Chatterton, the child of genius and misfortune, destroyed himself at 18.

Bentivoglio was refused admittance into a hospital he had himself erected.

The death of Collins was through neglect, first causing mental derangement.

Savage died in prison at Bristol, where he was confined for the debt of $40.

Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield" was sold for a trifle to save him from the grip of the law.

Fielding lies in the burying-ground of the English factory at Lisbon, without a stone to mark the spot.

Milton sold his copyright of "Paradise Lost" for $75, at three payments, and finished his life in obscurity.

Names of Children in China.

In the event of the birth of a child in China, the name that is given to it is determined often by the most trivial circumstances. If a child is born at midnight, his name is possibly called "Midnight," or, on the anniversary day of a grandparent's birth, his name may be called "Sixty-five" or "Seventy." If the little one comes to the world at sunrise, he may be called "Sunrise," or if at sunset, he may be called "Sunset." But the funniest fact of all is—it is a fact we knew not before—that not infrequently the name given on the arrival of a little girl is Kause, which translated means, "Ought to be a boy."

TWO HOLES IN A COAT.

How Lincoln's Assassin Ruined a Dress-Coat.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle.]

There reposes in the trunk of William Withers, Jr., leader of the California Theater orchestra, an ancient swallow-tail coat, faded somewhat with time, fragmentary in condition through the clipping of pieces from it as mementoes, yet what a highly interesting garment through historical association. The coat has two long knife-cuts in it, one in the neck and the other in the hip, which were received in Ford's Theater in Washington, where the coat, with Mr. Withers inside of it, was present on the night that President Abraham Lincoln was assassinated. The gashes were inflicted by the assassin, John Wilkes Booth, a few moments after he fired the shot that reverberated through a nation, and the story of that night, as told by Mr. Withers to a Chronicle reporter yesterday, is as follows: "The play, as you will recollect, was 'Our American Cousin.' The house was jammed from pit to dome with a throng whose admiration and attention were divided between the Presidential box, where sat Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln, little Tad, and Maj. Rathbone, and the stage where Harry Hawk and Laura Keene personated the leading roles. The first two acts had proceeded without unusual interest, President Lincoln appearing to quietly enjoy the performance, and finally the curtain rose on the third act and the dairy scene, where 'Trenchard' was to propose to 'Marg Meredith.' During the interlude I had gone behind to talk with Wright, the prompter. I had composed a song 'Honor to Our Soldiers,' in honor of the occasion, which had not been sung at the proper time, and went to see about it. To talk with him where he stood I had to order Spangler, the scene-shifter, out of the way. His position was at the gas-box, and it turned out afterward that his enforced removal spoiled one of the cards in the programme, which was the turning off of the gas as soon as the shot was fired. I had finished my talk with Wright, and turned down the passage which led out into the alley way where Peanut John was holding Booth's horse, and which also led to the door by which I returned to my place in the orchestra.

"The passage was dark and very narrow, so much so in fact that two men could not pass side by side. I had traversed nearly to the door when I heard a single pistol-shot. I stopped, started, and tried to think where there was a pistol fired in the 'American Cousin.' Then I heard a strange murmur and looking around I saw Harry Hawk running rapidly up the steps that led to his dressing-room. A second afterward I saw a man running across the stage. He had jumped from the box to the stage on the other side from me, but his impetus was so great that he ran into the brick wall near me, putting out his hands to break the force of the collision. Then he jumped for the passage-way and I saw his face, but scarcely recognized Booth. His eyes seemed starting from his head, his black hair stood on end, and his dark, handsome face wore such a ferocious expression that he did not seem like the same man. I was completely paralyzed as he rushed into the passage and said, 'Get out of my way.' I could not have done so, even if I had had the presence of mind, and in a second he was on me, striking at me with the dagger he held in his right hand. The blow struck me, glancing on the hip, and made the cut you see there. It turned me partly round, and like a flash he struck me again and knocked me headlong to the floor of the passage in front of him. Without losing a second he jumped over me, seized the knob and wrenched the door open, and in a second more was galloping at top speed down the street. All this took place in far less time than it takes to tell it. After him, also, jumping over me, came Stuart, the detective, and following him a crowd of people, who, taking me for an accomplice, arrested me and took me back on the stage. The scene there was simply indescribable.

"The audience, crazy with excitement, were yelling they knew not what. The stage and the front part of the auditorium were jammed with people, some asking the cause and others crying 'lynch him,' 'hang him,' though who the assassin was they did not know. The lights were in full glow, and above could be seen the President, senseless and white as death with his head partially hanging out of the box, while Mrs. Lincoln bathed his forehead with water from a basinful which Laura Keene held. The audience became even wilder when the truth was known, and were augmented by the throng of breathless arrivals from the outside, until the theater was so crowded that another person could not possibly have got even his head in.

"The President lay in his box under the doctor's care for a long time, and was finally removed, through the greatest crowd that ever gathered in Washington, to the boarding-house across the street, where he died the next morning. I was taken to the police station, but discharged as soon as the facts were known. Spangler was arrested and convicted of being an accomplice, but was afterward pardoned. The knife thrusts did me no great injury, the first not penetrating the skin and the second only scratching my neck. I have kept the coat, however, as a memento of the most exciting night I ever experienced. The shirt which I wore, which was also slashed, I gave to Harry Widmer, now of the Baldwin, who was playing with me at the time, and who still has it I believe."

The Doctor's Man.

The late Dr. R. was one who could seldom resist telling a good story, even when it turned the laugh against himself. On one occasion a man-servant, whom he had recently engaged, astonished him by appearing to wait at breakfast with a swollen face and a pair of unmistakably black eyes. "Why, John," said he, "you seem to have been fighting?" "Yes, master, I have," was the reply. "And who may your opponent have been?" "Why, sir, Dr. M.'s man," naming a rival Esculapius. "And what did you fall out about?" "Why, sir, he said as you wasn't fit to clean his master's shoes." "And what did you say?" "Well, sir, I said you was!"

What the Government Life-Saving Service Has Done.

The perils and achievements of the United States Life-Saving Service are but little understood, and an article written for Scribner's, on this topic, by Capt. J. H. Merryman, is interesting reading. After describing in detail the actual work of the coast crews, the writer adds:

But, it will be asked, what results have been attained by the service? At this writing, the last published report is that of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878. From this it appears that, during that year, there were 171 disasters to vessels within the limits of the operations of the service. There were on board these vessels 1,557 persons. The number of lives saved was 1,331, the number lost 226, and the number of days' succor afforded to shipwrecked persons at the stations was 849. Of the 226 lost, 183 perished at the disasters to the steamers Huron and Metropolis, the former occurring four days prior to the manning of the stations, which the appropriations for the maintenance of the service did not then permit to take place until the 1st of December, and the latter occurring at a distance so remote from the nearest station as to render prompt aid impossible—defects which the reports of the service had repeatedly pointed out, and asked to have remedied. The loss of fourteen others occurred where service was impeded by distance, or where the stations were not open. Making allowance for these, the loss of life legitimately within the scope of life-saving operations was twenty-nine. The sad catastrophes of the Huron and Metropolis contributed largely in securing the passage of the effective bill of June, 1878, was introduced and warmly advocated by Hon. S. S. Cox, and which established the service on a stable basis, with powers and functions somewhat commensurate with its purpose and capabilities. From November, 1871, the date of the inauguration of the present system, to the 30th of June, 1878, the number of disasters stated to have occurred within the field of operations of the service was 578; the number of persons on board the vessels involved was 6,267; the number saved was 5,981; the number lost 306, and the number of days' relief afforded to shipwrecked persons at the stations, 3,716.

It should be observed that during the first of these seven years the service was limited to the coasts of Long island and New Jersey; the two following years, to those coasts, with the addition of Cape Cod; the next year, to the foregoing, with the addition of the coasts of New England and the coast from Cape Henry to Cape Hatteras; the next, to the foregoing, with the addition of the coast from Cape Henlopen to Cape Charles; the next, to all the foregoing, with the addition of Florida and the lake coasts; and the last year, to the coast at present included.

It is not claimed that the entire number of persons designated in the above figures as saved would have perished but for the aid of the life-saving crews, since not infrequently, in cases of shipwreck by stranding, a portion of the imperiled succeed in escaping to the shore, as did several in the case of the Huron; and it often happens that the sudden subsidence of the sea spares the threatened vessels from destruction. But it is certain that a large proportion of the number would have perished. A closer approximation to the real efficacy of the service could be reached if statistics of the loss of life in former years upon the coasts where life-saving stations are now established could be obtained. Unfortunately no such record exists, except an imperfect one, consisting of meager data relative to disasters between 1850 and 1870 in the vicinity of the rude station-huts on the Long island and New Jersey coasts. It is known that this record by no means includes near all the disasters which occurred on these coasts. A comparison, however, of the record of the service since 1871 with this list shows an average annual reduction in the loss of life of about 87 per cent.

The record is a shining one. How much of it is due to official organization may readily be conceived, but it is less easy to realize how much of it belongs to the gallant crews of the stations. The professional skill of these men, their unfaltering energy and endurance, their steady bravery in the hour of supreme ordeal, and at all times their sober fidelity to duty, however hard or irksome, are beyond all tribute. None can better know it than the officers in charge of the service, whose main reliance must be, after all, upon the manly virtue of these crews. What, indeed, can ever stand in lieu of men!

Cæsar, His Men, and His Arms.

He was the ablest Roman then living and he had the power of attaching the ablest men to his service. He had five years in which to look about him, and to act at his leisure—as much time as had been given to Pompey of the East. Like Pompey, too, he was left perfectly free. No Senatorial officers could incumber him with orders from home. The people had given him his command, and to the people alone he was responsible. Lastly, and beyond everything, he could rely with certainty on the material with which he had to work. The Roman legionaries were no longer yeomen taken from the plow, or shopkeepers from the street. They were men more completely trained to every variety of accomplishment than perhaps ever had followed a General into the field, or ever since. It was not enough that they could use sword and lance. The campaign on which Cæsar was about to enter was fought with spade and pick and ax and hatchet. Corps of engineers he may have had; but if the engineers designed the work, the execution lay with the army. No limited department would have been equal to the tasks which every day demanded. On each evening after march, a fortified camp was to be formed, with mound and trench, capable of resisting surprises and demanding the labor of every single hand. Bridges had to be thrown over rivers. Ships and barges had to be made and repaired, capable of service against an enemy, on a scale equal to the requirements of an army, and in a haste which permitted no delay. A transport service there must have been, organized to perfection. But there were no stores sent from Italy to supply the daily waste of material. The men had to mend, and perhaps make, their own clothes and shoes and repair their own arms. Skill in the use of tools was not enough without the tools themselves. Had the spades and mattocks been supplied by contract, had the axes been of soft iron, fair to the eye and failing to the strokes, not a man in Cæsar's army would have returned to Rome to tell the tale of its destruction. How the legionaries acquired these various arts, whether the Italian peasantry were generally educated in such occupations, or whether on this occasion there was a special selection of the best, of this we have no information. Certainly only it was that men and instruments were as excellent in their kind as honesty and skill could make them; and, however degenerate the patricians and corrupt the legislature, there was sound stuff somewhere in the Roman constitution. No exertion, or no forethought on the part of any commander, could have extemporized such a variety of qualities. Universal practical accomplishments must have formed part of the training of the free Roman citizens. Admirable workmanship was still to be had in each department of manufacture; every article with which Cæsar was provided must have been the best of its kind.—"Cæsar," by Froude.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, BOB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

It is stated that the "Diary of a Public Man," a series of papers that appeared in the North American Review during the past year, and attracted wide-spread attention, was written by H. S. Sanford, formerly Minister to Belgium.

Mr. Thompson, of Conway, Ark., has invented a new system of cheap insurance on personal property. He hired a store of Col. Bruce and put in a stock of groceries. The shelving broke down, ruining a large quantity of goods. The tenant put a pistol in his pocket, hunted up the landlord and shot him.

According to Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., a large proportion of deaths or injuries on railroads occur to those who are not in the cars, but on the track in front of them. As a remedy, he advises that the companies should ballast their roads with broken stone, as the Pennsylvania railroad has done.

The lower house of the Massachusetts Legislature has 35 merchants, 30 farmers, 25 lawyers, 22 mechanics and 20 manufacturers. There are 6 editors, and 3 are reported as literary gentlemen. One gentleman is described as a button-hole maker. An exchange thinks he might be a valuable adjunct to the lobby.

A gas company in St. Louis has been largely swindled by a shrewd manufacturer of meters. The expert, with a sharp steel instrument, punctures the meter in such a way that part of the gas escapes and goes into the customer's pipes without going through the regular channel. In this way the company is swindled out of at least 50 per cent. of their bill.

The lowest point to which wages have yet fallen is 5 cents an hour, and the places where this has occurred are Hartford, Ct., and Providence, R. I., two of the wealthiest cities in the country. When the poor of these cities apply to the authorities for relief they are required to earn it by chopping kindling wood in the municipal wood yards at 50 cents a day, and a workingman's day down East is ten hours.

J. C. Flood, of Bonanza fame, is credited with a determination to withdraw from the stock market. This action is said to be due to the fact that, by the new constitution of California stockholders become personally responsible for corporation liabilities and shares are taxable. Disgusted with this outrage on a poor man, Mr. Flood has "unloaded," as the phrase is, and will seek to forget his sorrows in foreign travel.

The sailing of Parnell and Dillon for this country is announced in a cable dispatch, which states that they come authorized by the Land League of Dublin to receive subscriptions for the relief of the distressed in Ireland. Throughout the United States the great Parliamentary leader and his compatriot will doubtless be warmly welcomed by the Irish-Americans, and all others who sympathize with the people of Ireland in their distress.

The Republican National Convention, to be held at Chicago in June, will be the fourth political National Convention to nominate candidates for President and Vice President that will have been held in that city. The first was that which nominated Lincoln and Hamlin in 1860; the second was the Democratic National Convention of 1864, when McClellan and Pendleton were nominated; the third was the Republican National Convention of 1868, which nominated Grant and Colfax.

One of the witnesses in the Hayden trial was a kind-hearted old deacon. He testified that Hayden and himself had a talk about poison for rats, and he also informed the minister that he had sprinkled Paris green on his peas: "My wife," he said, in innocent simplicity; "wouldn't let me bring the peas in the house because she was afraid that they were poisoned. I told her that we wouldn't waste them—we'd give them to some of the brethren and sisters." Here's where the court laughed, and also where the wonder ceases that people are poisoned in Connecticut.

Mr. Garhart, a Virginia (Nev.) stage-driver, says that in his efforts to run down a hog he has become more exasperated than in being robbed by road-agents. He has borne down on them with a five-ton stage and six-in-hand on a down-grade, but just as he expected to see the air filled with wagon-grease and spare-ribs, they would lurch under the stage with a grunt and look of satisfaction. In a single instance he succeeded on a hog that had dodged a train of cars coming out of a tunnel, but he upset the stage, killing two passengers and maiming several for life.

There is much comment in Washington at the fact that the proprietors of the Louisiana lottery have succeeded in employing as their counsel members of both houses of Congress. This comment is the more significant from the fact that there is now pending in Congress a bill relating to the whole subject of lotteries in the mails, upon which these Congressmen who have been employed as counsel are expected to vote impartially as judges. The Congressmen who have thus been employed by the lottery companies are Senator Matt Carpenter, of Wisconsin, and Representative Casey Young, of Tennessee.

The latest product to which California soil has been found well adapted is opium, of which a superb quality, much superior to the opium of commerce, has been raised in the Sonoma valley. The only obstacle to its cultivation is the fact that labor costs more than in the Orient; but that is offset by the better quality of the domestic article, and the absence of heavy duties. There seems to be hardly any product of the earth that cannot be raised in some parts of the Golden State. Tea, figs, oranges, lemons, bananas, olives, dates, even the cinchona tree and poppy plant grow there along with the fruits and vegetables of temperate climes.

The Kansas State Superintendent of Schools has issued a circular containing a summary of the common-school statistics of the State for the year ending the 31st of last July, which shows the following facts: Kansas has a school population of 311,310, the increase for the year being 44,535, or 33 per cent. more than for any other year of the State's history. This increase represents an immigration to the State of from 160,000 to 175,000 people in one year. During the year the school enrollment increased about 30,000; the average daily attendance is about 20,000. The average school term for the State was 24 8-10 days, this being a half month more than ever before. Sixty-six normal institutes were held from four to six weeks, in which 6,050 of the 6,707 common-school teachers of the State received instruction. School revenues for the year amounted to $1,878,563, of which $105,699 was expended for teachers' wages. Four hundred and fourteen new school-houses were built during the year, at a cost of about $300,000.

The Great Napoleon.

Bonaparte is of small stature and not well proportioned, the upper part of the body seeming to press upon the lower portion. He has scanty chestnut hair and gray-blue eyes. His complexion was yellow as long as he was thin, but later it became dead white, without the least color. The expression of his forehead, the setting of his eyes, the lines of the nose—all this is fine and reminds one of antique medallions. His rather common mouth becomes attractive when he laughs. His teeth are regular, his chin somewhat short. He has small feet and hands, which must be noticed because he takes good care of them. In standing and walking he bends a little forward. His eyes, usually dull, give to his face when in repose a melancholy expression, but when he is angry his glance become suddenly sharp and threatening. His smile becomes him well; it disarms and rejuvenates his entire person, and in such moments it is difficult to withstand his winning expression, so changed and beautiful is his countenance. His clothing was always simple. Usually he wore the uniform of his Guards. Cleanliness was with him more a matter of system than of inclination. He bathed frequently and often in the middle of the night, because he thought it good for his health.

Although very remarkable for certain intellectual qualities, nothing was more debased, it must be confessed, than his soul. He had no generosity, no true grandeur. I never saw him admire, and I never saw him comprehend a noble action. He always suspected any trace of a good sentiment; he thought nothing of sincerity, and never hesitated to say that he recognized a man's superiority by the degree of ability with which he could manage to lie; on these occasions he delighted to tell the story that, in his childhood, one of his uncles had foretold that he would govern the world, because he had the habit of always lying. "Metternich," he said at another time, "is becoming a statesman; he lies well." All his means of governing men were chosen by Bonaparte among those which tended to debase them. He feared the ties of affection; he tried to isolate every one; he only sold his favors in such a way as to awaken inquietude, thinking that the true way to attach men to himself was to compromise them, and often even disgrace them in public opinion. He never pardoned virtue except when he could overwhelm it with ridicule.—Memoirs of Madame de Remusat.

The Duke of Portland, who died last week, was one of the greatest of English land-owners. He was of a taciturn nature akin to madness, never marrying, and for many years was subject to a painful malady. He was morbidly averse to society of any kind, devoting his whole time, and a part of his enormous income, estimated at $1,500,000, to keeping the estate at Welbeck in the most superb order. He employed hundreds of men, and, although constantly among them giving orders, he would allow no one to speak to him, discharging any man who ever touched his hat to him.

FARM NOTES.

Don't store celery too early. Don't cover strawberry beds until after the ground is frozen an inch in depth.

A report is made to the California Academy of Sciences that sulphate of iron (copperas) is a remedy for mildew and grape-rot. A mixture of four pounds to five of water is applied to the stems of the vine.

Hon. James Wilson, of Iowa, says: "Just now there is a great demand for feeding steers, which is an evidence of something lacking. The most profitable way to manage is to raise the steers you feed, as you rarely can buy first-class animals. It takes care to reach the point when you are possessed of first-class young steers, and those who are enterprising enough to raise good steers are generally wise enough to feed them."

Periods of Milking.—A cow that is milked three times a day will give more milk and yield more cream than one that is milked at intervals of twelve hours. When the udder is filled a process of absorption goes on, and part of the milk thus secreted is thus lost. It will pay to take the milk from copious milkers at intervals of eight hours as nearly as possible. A cow that is milked at 5 in the morning, 1 in the afternoon, and 9 at night will yield from 10 to 20 per cent. more milk and more cream than if milked twice a day.

Many a Little, Etc.—To plant one grain of wheat, in the hope of in a few years producing enough to seed a field, may seem to many as a hopeless task. But we do not realize the vast increase which is made in the produce of a single grain in the course of a few years. Plant one grain this year and gather fifty from it and repeat, and the third year the harvest will be a peck; but the sixth year the product will be 15,000 bushels, and the twelfth harvest would be sufficient to supply the whole population of the world for their natural lives. This fact may tend to show what may be gained by a course of persevering industry and economy in the pursuit of agriculture and the rewards which are offered for honest work in the labor for which our race was first created—the cultivation of the soil.

Potato Culture.—A writer in the English Agricultural Gazette says: "The crown-eyes of the potato are the only ones which yield vigorous plants; the produce of the other eyes is feeble and unremunerative. If, therefore, potatoes are cut for seed, they should not (as is usual) be cut in their length, by which the crown is divided and eyes of all kinds introduced into the seed, but they should be cut across, the half containing the crown-eyes planted and the other half consumed as food. The very best results are obtained when large potatoes are taken, all eyes excepting those of the crown cut out, and the whole remaining potato planted. Stebler points out that the potato is an underground stem, and the crown-eyes the buds at the end of the branch. But the terminal buds of a branch are always far more vigorous than the lateral buds, as any one may ascertain for himself by watching the growth of trees and shrubs. The degeneration of varieties of potatoes is believed by some of the German writers to be largely due to repeated propogation from small potatoes and feeble buds. The two laws of propagation noticed are strikingly illustrated by the experiments of Franz. His experiments were carried out in garden soil; the crop obtained is given below in tons per acre:

Tubers divided in their length, per acre	5
Whole tubers	7¾
Crown half of tubers	9¾
Whole tubers, eyes other than crown removed	11½

Stebler, Rimpau, Janovsky and Derschler and Fesca have experimented on the same subject; all of them conclude that whole tubers yield a much higher produce than tubers divided in their length; also, that the crown half of the potato yields a decidedly larger crop than the half obtained by division through the length; but they do not, like Franz, find that the crown half is generally superior to the whole tubers. Derschler, from the results, concludes that the crown half is superior to a whole potato when it is cut from a larger tuber than that with which it is compared.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Home-made Crackers.—To five pounds of flour take ten ounces butter, one pint cold water and an even teaspoonful salt. It will take a deal of strength to knead them. Roll thin and bake.

Corn Cake.—One cup sugar, two eggs, four table-spoonfuls sweet cream, two cups sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls saleratus, four teaspoonfuls cream tartar, two cups corn meal and one of flour. Let it set in the warming closet of your stove five minutes, then bake ten minutes in a hot oven.

Noodles.—Take two eggs, a little salt, mix stiff with flour; roll out thin, rub with flour, fold and roll up, cut fine with a knife; put on a spider very near full of boiling water, put a little salt in the water; put in the noodles and boil five minutes, turn off the water and fry in a great deal of butter (delicious).

"Tip-Top" Potatoes.—Boil eight large potatoes in their skins and let them cool. When cold peel them and cut them into thick slices. Put into a stewpan two ounces of butter in a thin slice, and when it is melted add a teacupful of well-seasoned stock or gravy, a teaspoonful of finely-chopped parsley, chopped onions, and a teaspoonful of mixed pepper and salt. Stir these well together over the fire till hot, add the potatoes, simmer five minutes, stir in the juice of a lemon and serve hot.

Chocolate Eclairs.—Take the weight of four fresh eggs in sugar, and half the weight in flour, mixing with the latter half a teaspoonful of cream of tartar and a quarter of a teaspoonful of soda very thoroughly, or the eclairs will not be light; beat the yelks of the eggs until light, add slowly the sugar, as for sponge cake, having it just light; alternate the beaten whites of the eggs with the flour, and bake in pans having compartments, dropping a spoonful of batter in each, or in a paper-lined and well-buttered pan, making the cakes as nearly the size of lady's fingers as possible; the oven should be quick, and when done take out, place two together, allow them to cool, and cover with the chocolate.

Boston Baked Beans.—A favorite and excellent family dish if carefully prepared. Get a red earthen jar, glazed on the inside. It should be fourteen to sixteen inches in height, with a wide top. Get the beans at a first-class grocery, lest they should be old or poor of quality; pick, wash and soak them over night in plenty of cold water; scald them the next day with a teaspoonful of soda; they should not boil unless they have been long stored. Drain off the water, and to three pints of beans (unsoaked) allow a pound and a half of good, sweet salt pork—a rib piece, not too fat, is best. Let the beans cover all but the top of the pork, which must be scored; add water enough to cover the beans, in which half a small teacupful of molasses has been dissolved. They should be put in the oven at bed-time, while there is still a moderate fire remaining. They will be ready in the morning. If the pork is not very salt, add some to the water in which the beans are baked.

Beefsteak Pudding.—Take two pounds of round steak, one teaspoonful each of summer savory, celery salt, and one small onion chopped very fine, a sprig of parsley, salt, and white pepper. Cut the steak up into small pieces and place a layer of it in a buttered dish, the sides of which you have lined with paste. Sprinkle over the steak some of the onion, celery salt, etc.; add another layer of steak and seasoning, until all is used, then pour over it a little water and cover with paste. Place on the top of it a buttered paper, and stand it in a basin of boiling water; cover it tight, and let it boil two hours and a half. To make the paste, take one teacup and a half of flour, a half teaspoonful of salt, and two table-spoonfuls of roast-beef drippings, and wet it up with a half-teacupful of water. Total expense, 33 cents. This quantity will make a dish sufficient for five persons, with the customary vegetables.

A Surprise or Two.

Col. William C. Church contributes to Scribner a suggestive and instructive account of the manufacture of "American Arms and Ammunition." The exhibit made by Col. Church of the extensive use of American material by European nations will be a matter of general surprise to those not familiar with the facts. The paper contains the following anecdotes:

The reduction in cost of arms manufacture has not been obtained at the expense of quality. It has, on the contrary, been accompanied by a steady improvement in workmanship. The use of machinery compels the employment of better material. At his examination, in 1852, before the Parliamentary Committee in England, Col. Colt, the inventor of the revolver, was shown a Minie rifle, presented as a superior specimen of French handicraft.

"Do you consider," he was asked, "that the muskets made in the United States equal this?"

"There are none so badly made at our armories," was the reply. "That arm could not pass any of our inspectors."

This was no idle Yankee boast, and it was equally true of the Enfield-made breech-loaders, sent to the Providence Tool Company twenty years later as models to be followed in fulfilling the Turkish contract. These were so improved upon that Turkey has secured a much better arm than that used in the English service.

The reason is simply this: Though the Enfield guns were honest and strong in workmanship, and made of excellent material, as are most English productions, even their model arms show a lack of finish not to be tolerated here, where the perfection of automatic machine work is obtained, at a far less cost than the less perfect hand-work. As Col. Colt stated on the occasion referred to, it cost them less in the United States to complete a gun-stock than it did in England to buy the wood for one.

A recent newspaper paragraph has recalled the ridicule with which Parliament received the proposition to make the first essay in the introduction of American methods, by the purchase of Blanchard's American gun-stocking machinery. The idea that the Americans were surpassing the English in gun manufacture was really "quite too amusing." An English expert was sent over to investigate. He brought with him three rough stocks of the toughest timber he could find, certain that they would prove too much for the machine intended, as he supposed, for the American soft woods. Concealing his purpose, he asked the overseer of the Springfield arsenal to run them through the machine. Much to his surprise it handled them all the better because of their hardness. The result was that an order was left at Chicopee for the Blanchard machine, and the accompanying machines, six or eight in all, to be sent to England, where they have since been in use.

His Wind.

The steamer had struck, and, while the passengers were hurriedly making preparations for their safety, a fat old Dutchman seized a life-preserver, and, tying it on, began to fill it, blowing till he was red in the face with his efforts. "Hollo!" said a bystander, "you can't fill that thing. There's a big hole in it!" A blank look came into the old man's face. "Mein Gott! is dat so? Den I better keeps my wind in me to float me on top of der water."

Dean Stanley's eldest sister, Miss Mary Stanley, died in London, in her 66th year, a few days ago. Miss Stanley devoted her life to the care of the helpless, and won an enviable fame as the originator of "flower missions," by which agent so much happiness is now diffused. It is also notable that, while her father, Bishop Stanley, and her distinguished brother figured largely in the affairs of the Established Church, Miss Stanley became an adherent of the Church of Rome.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

A New Way to Treat Diphtheria.—Quite a discovery in the treatment of diphtheria, says a Minnesota letter, has been made here. A young man whose arm had been amputated was attacked by diphtheria before healing took place; and, instead of the matter incident to that disease being deposited in the throat, the greater portion appeared on the wounded arm, and the diphtheria was very light and easily managed. Dr. Davis, of Mankato, profited by this, and in his next case of diphtheria blistered his patient's chest, and on this blistered part the chief deposits appeared. This was an easy case of the disease. The theory of Dr. Davis is that diphtheria usually appears in the throat because of the thinness of the lining of the throat. Hence, when the blister breaks the skin upon any other part of the body, the disease appears there.

Food for the Sick.—Beef-tea, if rightly made, may be received with benefit by a stomach which would reject or be unnourished by any other aliment, but skill in preparing it is not universal among nurses. The two following receipts may be relied on as among the best that can be devised: Beef-tea (with moderate warming up after cold steeping).—Take one pound of the best beef; cut it into thin slices and scrape the meat fine; put it along with two-thirds of a saltspoonful of salt into one pint of cold water contained in an earthen bowl, and let the mixture stand two or three hours, stirring it frequently; place it in the same vessel covered on the back part of the range, and let it come very gradually to a blood heat and no more, for any higher temperature would injure the nutriment; then strain it through a fine sieve or muslin bag, and it is ready for use. The making of beef-tea is not a cooking process. Beef-tea without heat.—Take one-third of a pound of fresh beef, mutton, poultry, or game, minced very fine; place it in fourteen ounces of soft cold water, to which has been added a pinch, or about eighteen grains, of table salt, and three or four drops of muriatic acid; stir all with a wooden spoon, and set it aside for one hour, stirring it occasionally; then strain it through a gauze or sieve, and wash the residue left on the sieve by means of five additional ounces of cold soft water, pressing it, so that all the soluble matter will be removed from the residue; mix the two strainings, and the extract is ready for use. It should be drunk freely every two or three hours.

The Value of Milk and Lime-water.—Dr. E. N. Chapman has presented to the Medical Society of the State of New York some valuable notes on the use of milk and lime for invalids. He says he has used milk and lime-water for years as a diet for his patients, with great success, particularly in cases involving nerve centers, that are acknowledged to be little under the command of the accepted modes of treatment, such, for instance, as marasmus, anaemia, paralysis, indigestion, neuralgia, cholera, dementia and alcholism. Also in cases where the nutritive functions are at fault, milk (with a pinch of salt), being rendered very acceptable to the stomach by the lime, is the most digestible and nourishing food that can be given. It allays gastric and intestinal irritability, offers a duly prepared chyle to the absorbents, supplies the blood with all the elements of nutrition, institutes healthy tissue changes, stimulates the secreting and excreting glands, and, in a word, provides nature with the material to sustain herself in her contest with disease. If it be conceded that nature always accomplishes the cure whenever it is secured, and that drugs merely aid, direct or modify her efforts to this end, it must be self-evident that the food, which supplies the vital forces with all the power of resistance they possess, is a matter of the first importance, and that milk acted on with lime, provided it contains all the essential properties of other articles epitomized, and is more friendly than any or all of them, has a range of application almost as extensive as disease itself, whatever its character and whoever the patient.

The Lioness and the Terrier.

The Royal Zoological Garden of Ireland for many years possessed a beautiful lioness, known to visitors as "Old Girl." She was an animal of very high spirit, though very gentle, and was admitted by judges to be the handsomest lioness they had ever seen. The closing weeks of her life were marked by the following touching incident: When in health she had no objection to the presence of rats in her cage; on the contrary, she rather welcomed them as a relief to the monotony of existence, which constitutes the chief trial of a wild animal in confinement. It was a common sight to see half a dozen rats gnawing the bones off which the lioness had dined. In illness the case was different, for the ungrateful rats used to nibble the toes of the poor animal. To save the lioness from this annoyance a fine little tan terrier was placed in her cage, who was at first received with a surly growl; but when the first rat appeared, and the lioness saw the little dog tackle him, she began to understand what the terrier was for. She coaxed him to her side, folded her paw around him, and each night the little creature slept at the breast of the lioness, enfolded with her paws, and watching that his natural enemies did not disturb the rest of his mistress.

A Curious Memorial.

In the national Senate, has been presented a peculiar memorial signed by Commodore William B. Whiting, of the United States navy. The memorialist requests the Senate to authorize the President to issue a proclamation inviting the Governments of all the nations on this continent to unite in a confederation for mutual support, offensive and defensive. Each Government is to remain independent in the administration of its own affairs, but to be otherwise subordinate to the general Government of the confederacy; which shall have the executive right to declare war, to proclaim peace, to maintain armies and navies, and to regulate commerce. In order to organise this confederacy he suggests the assembling of a Congress of Delegates from each Government, who shall draw up a constitution to be submitted for ratification to the nations represented; ratification by two-thirds to be binding upon the whole number. The memorialist mentions that "Great Britain has many colonies on this continent which are to-day in peaceful accord with the mother country, and desire no separation from it, but it is believed that she will cheerfully relinquish her hold upon them if they wish to join such a confederacy." The memorial was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Railroad Accidents.

In his recently-published "Notes on Railroad Accidents," Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., shows that the percentage of loss of life and of personal injuries on railroads is exceedingly small when compared with the amount of travel, and that the risks of railroad travel are much less than they are popularly supposed to be. He cites statistics to prove that it is actually safer for a man or his family to travel by rail than to stay at home, thus corroborating the saying attributed to John Bright, that the safest place in which a man could put himself was inside a first-class railroad carriage of a train in full motion. During the eight years from 1870 to 1878 the whole number of lives lost in operating the entire railroad system in Massachusetts was 1,165, or an average of 146 a year, while in Boston the recorded deaths from accidental causes during the ten years from 1868 to 1878 was 2,587, or an annual average of 259. These results show that in the city of Boston alone the yearly number of deaths caused by accidents was 80 per cent. greater than the number reported on all the railroads of the State. This comparison is not peculiar to Massachusetts, but may be taken as approximately accurate for other places. Indeed, statistics were published years ago in France showing that people were less safe at home than while traveling on the railroads. Another fact which will serve to reassure the timid is, that of the whole number of persons accidentally killed or injured on railroads, but a small proportion are passengers. Many of those who lose their lives or are personally injured are employes who are constantly exposed to risk by virtue of their employment, and whose familiarity with danger leads them to be careless, and even foolhardy oftentimes. But, as Mr. Adams shows, the greatest and most regular cause of death and injury in the operation of railroads is the reckless habit of walking on the track, which is common with too many people, and especially with those who are more or less drunk. More than one-third of all the railroad casualties reported in Massachusetts are classified under the head of accidents to trespassers—that is, accidents to men, women and children, especially the latter, illegally lying, walking or playing on the tracks, or riding on the cars. Mr. Adams says that the best remedy for this dangerous practice is the system of broken-stone ballast, covering the entire surface of the road-bed. This has been adopted by the Pennsylvania railroad with the most satisfactory results, though the company had other objects in view than the discomfort of pedestrians. The sharp and uneven edges of the broken stone form a surface which the most inveterate railroad tramp will shun. The adoption of this system by other corporations would not only give their lines the best road-bed yet devised, but would be a means of materially decreasing the percentage of accidental deaths and injuries.

Morris Smith, a woodchopper, struck for higher wages. He was alone in a Tennessee forest with his employer, David Norman, and his little game was to give Norman the choice between an advance in pay or death. Norman acceded to the demand under the stress of circumstances, but, as soon as he could obtain a pistol, he lowered the wages to the old rate. Smith thereupon undertook to kill him with an ax, and received a fatal bullet.

Belfast, Me., can boast of a boy of 9 who a year or two ago pushed a little girl into a bonfire and caused her death. Subsequently he caused the death of his own father by the simple process of tying a string across a path, over which the old gentleman heavily fell. He died. This precocious child would make an excellent playmate for Jesse Pomeroy.

Mrs. Henry Froudsham, whose husband was lynched by the vigilants at Leadville, Col., a few weeks ago, will bring a suit against the City of Leadville and the County of Lake for $20,000 damages. She has secured able counsel. The city and county will fight the case on the ground that Froudsham deserved lynching.

Leadville is to have its first street railroad in a few weeks, and so it is beginning to put on airs. But, alas! pride must have its fall. No sooner did Leadville announce its street railroad than Denver up and got in a steam supply company, and now Leadville is as far as ever behind in the march of civilization.

The audience at the Bradford (Pa.) theater were surprised to see the daughter of wealthy and respected parents accompanied by a young man of the opposite kind of reputation; and a still greater stir was caused, when, on disappearing, they saw the objectionable escort whipped by the girl's brother.

Thomas Wilson, of Baltimore, left $5,000 to the Society of Friends, and said he would have left them more if he thought they needed it. But he put his largest bequest where he thought it would do most good, namely, into an orphanage and asylum for the poor. To this he gave $715,000.

New York proposes a school for plumbers. We are glad of this. It is time that a plumber should learn to compute more accurately than to make ten minutes' work with a soldering iron and four hours of love-making to the cook, at 60 cents an hour, figure up $19.84.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 8, 1880.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

When will our county central committee meet?

The republicans of the Ohio legislature have unanimously nominated Gen. James A. Garfield for the United States senate. His election is sure.

Senator T. J. Foster is now the sole proprietor of the Fort Wayne Journal, having purchased the interest of his former partner, Mr. Joe Cope.

The fusionists of Maine succeeded in securing a quorum to organize the legislature yesterday. All the republicans refused to take part in the organization except Eugene Hale.

Brother Reed, of the Courier, is a carpet-bagger from Holmes county, Ohio, but he don't like a North Carolina carpet-bagger.—Press, Dec. 25, '79.

Yes, we exodized from Holmes county about nineteen years ago, not for political purposes, however.

It has been decided in the Marion county superior court, that the exemption of widows from taxation on $500 of property under certain circumstances is unconstitutional. Attorney-General Woolen is of the same opinion.

Reed's hair is "kinky," but he didn't come from North Carolina, hence he opposes "the exodus."—Press, Jan. 1, 1880.

Baxter's hair is black, coarse and uncombed, yet he denies being a descendant of poor Lo.

He'd rather have it "kinky,"
And with the niggers stand,—
He'd rather be a stinky
North Carolina contraband.

The report of the proceedings of the meeting of the state board of agriculture shows that Messrs. R. M. Lockhart, John B. Stoll and James A. Barnes were present from this congressional district when the following resolution offered by Mr. Lockhart was adopted by the board:

"Resolved, That the thanks of this delegate and state board be tendered to Hon. John H. Baker, member of congress from the thirteenth district of this state, for the efforts he is making in trying to procure the passage of a law to prevent innocent parties from being swindled by the purchase of patent articles, such as driven wells, etc."

Query:—Why did not the resolution include the name of Hon. W. G. Colerick, who has also introduced a bill in congress for the purpose mentioned in the resolution?

The Fort Wayne Sentinel comes down upon the base insinuation of the Auburn COURIER right well. The COURIER can read a lesson in that article which might do it some good.—Kendallville News.

Yes, it "comes down" as a squirrel would come down from the top of a tree when perforated by a rifle ball. It required over a column of space to explain why it came down, and its readers are none the wiser. The COURIER has not adopted the Sentinel as a text book, nor as a political guide, as the News has another certain newspaper that we might mention. Gratuitous advice is usually taken for what it is worth, hence the above given by the News will not cost much.

Mr. Colerick reports a bitter feeling against Gov. Tilden, at Washington, by the politicians. It is a little strange that while the people are in favor of Mr. Tilden, many of the politicians are against him. The politicians of the country ought to reflect the voice of the people.—Kendallville News.

The News misrepresents Mr. Colerick; he said nothing about politicians, but spoke of the feeling among DEMOCRATS at Washington. It is not at all strange that, while the people are NOT in favor of Mr. Tilden, a great many politicians are for him, notably an element of democratic politicians corresponding with the class of republican politicians who are seeking to nominate Grant. "The voice of the people" will grate harshly in Mr. Tilden's ears if he should receive the nomination, the politicians of the country to the contrary notwithstanding.

About a year ago two agents of the Singer sewing machine company went to the residence of Margaret Piper, in Indianapolis, and took forcible possession of a machine in her possession, on which she had not paid all the installments due. She resisted its removal, and while one of the men held her the other pulled the machine away. In doing so he struck Mrs. Piper's little girl on the knee, either with his boot-heel or the leg of the machine, injuring the child so that she was lamed for life. Suit was brought in behalf of the child and mother by John H. Laird, their next friend, and damages were recovered for $8,000 in one case and $500 in the other. The matter was appealed, and dragged along in the courts till last week, when a compromise was affected, the company agreeing to pay $3,500 to the child and $500 to the mother, together with all the costs accumulated, and to return the machine to Mrs. Piper. The case has excited a great deal of interest, and the judgment against the company was generally approved.

Sherman's Pet Bank.

A special dispatch to the Cincinnati Enquirer says:

The First National, of New York, is in a fair way to be investigated again. Senator Beck's attention has been attracted by the report of the remarkable financial success of that institution during the past year, and he has determined to find out, if he can, something of the relation which exists between that bank and the treasury department. The report of the bank on its condition for the year 1879 shows that during that time it had paid 120 per cent. of dividends, and has carried $500,000 to its surplus account; and in addition, it has on hand an undivided surplus of $967,700. The capital stock of the bank is $500,000. Its profit during the past year has been over 250 per cent. Senator Beck, in commenting on this to-day, said: "In my judgment, it is impossible that any bank or banking institution can have made such a vast amount of money on such a capital. The report shows that the bank has made an actual profit during the year of over $1,200,000. Its capital is only $500,000, and it is in my judgment simply an impossibility that $1,200,000 can have been made in any year on the capital of $500,000 in legitimate banking business. I have no manner of doubt that by far the larger portion of that $1,200,000 of profit is government money—that is, money which the bank has received from the government in the course of its transactions with the government in connection with its placing of the four per cent. bonds—and I think congress and the country ought to know how much the government has paid to the bank for the business which it has done for the government during the past year." Senator Beck stated further that he had tried every way to find out what the refunding operations had cost the government thus far, and that he had been to the treasury department often, and had asked the officials to whom he was referred to give him the exact information, and that he had been told that it was impossible for the department to tell what the cost of the refunding operations had been, and he had been utterly unable to find out. He is confident, however, that he can find out the actual financial transactions which have passed between the treasury department and the First National bank of New York during the past year, and he means to make the effort, at any rate.

The Auburn COURIER is a great believer in Uncle Samuel's "bar'l of money," and infers that the Fort Wayne Sentinel has been the recipient of a portion of it, owing to its position as to presidential candidates in 1880. We would advise the COURIER not to get itself into an inextricable position, for it may have to support the man whom it is defaming, if it supports the democratic presidential candidate this year.—Kendallville News.

We remember having attended a national convention at St. Louis once upon a time, and it was intimated there by the notorious gambler, John Morrisey, that Uncle Samuel's "bar'l of money" was on tap. Now, if that pug-nosed bundle of refinement and morality who was looking after Uncle Samuel's interests on that occasion created a wrong impression, it is not our fault. If the COURIER should "get itself into an inextricable position" we will blame it all on Uncle Samuel's bosom friend, John. But we desire to assure the News that we have no fears of having to support Uncle Samuel in the next campaign; and if we had, we would not be so cowardly as to not represent what we believe to be the sentiment of a majority of the democrats of DeKalb county, which majority is opposed to the re-nomination of Mr. Tilden, and has been since 1877. The fear of getting into "an inextricable position" is just what ails some of our democratic cotemporaries, so far as Mr. Tilden is concerned, but the friends of the latter take great delight in belittling such men as Hendricks, Seymour, English or Potter when their friends dare to mention their names in connection with the presidency. The opponents of Mr. Tilden will support him if he is nominated, but the game of bluff will not win this time as it did preceding and during the convention of 1876. The COURIER's first choice for the nomination is Mr. Hendricks, because we believe he is entitled to the position; because he is a statesman above reproach; because he can be elected and because he is the choice of the democrats of Indiana.

The Plymouth Democrat gives the following advice to the democrats of Marshal county, which is applicable in this community as well:

"The lines are being formed for the year 1880. The republicans are hard at work, and have now a compact organization, while democrats are standing in comparative idleness. In view of the importance of the contest, it is important that the democrats of this county should effect an early and complete organization of the county. The central committee should be convened at an early day for re-organization. The election for township officers and for the adoption or rejection of the amendment to the constitution will be held the first Monday in April. Good men should be selected for these positions. The county central committee, through its township organizations, should conduct the campaign for the April contest. We trust that the chairman of the county committee will give these matters his earnest consideration at an early day."

THE HAZZARD CASE.

Judge Gresham Sentences Hazzard to Two Years in the Penitentiary at Hard Labor.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The motion for a new trial in the Hazzard case was overruled by Judge Gresham, and Hazzard was sentenced to two years' hard labor in the northern penitentiary. Judge Gresham, in passing sentence, remarked that he had been importuned by quite a number of persons to make the sentence a light one, and that, while he sympathized with Hazzard's wife, whom he had no doubt was a most excellent lady, and was deserving of sympathy, yet Hazzard's case was one of the most aggravating nature, and that he would be violating his duties as a public official if he allowed him to get off with a sentence that would not be consistent with the gravity of the offense. At the conclusion of the judge's remarks, Hazzard addressed himself to the court, requesting that his sentence be so changed that his confinement be in the Marion county jail, instead of the penitentiary, which request was refused.

Everybody in the court-room sympathized with Hazzard's wife, who was much affected when sentence was pronounced by the court, and who, during all the trial, was noticeable for her modest and lady-like demeanor.

Hazzard's health is said to be very poor, and it is thought by his friends that he will hardly survive his sentence. His immediate friends say they would not have murmured at a sentence to a county jail or even in the state prison without hard labor; and the objection to the latter is solely on account of his health, which they ascribe to a wound received at the battle of Stone River. For fourteen years after the battle he carried a ball in his hip. This, together with sciatica, has left him in a very bad condition. He leaves a wife and three children totally unprovided for. In the midst of his unfortunate surroundings he bears up wonderfully and pluckily. His wife and relatives are overwhelmed with grief.

The above statement of the Sentinel concerning "a wife and three children totally unprovided for," will be regarded as a joke by the people of this community. George was taken to the penitentiary yesterday, and while he may feel inclined to enjoy a shaving position in that prosperous institution, it is the wish of many of his victims that he be sold out to some contractor, and be required to carry a hod or work on a brickyard until the expiration of his two-year term.

A MOUNTAIN OF GOLD.

[Phœnix (Arizona) Herald.]

Some excitement is being created among the Mexican population of Phœnix by the story of a Mexican who arrived last evening from the Reno Mountains. He came into town under cover of darkness, as he was nearly naked. His hands and feet were torn and bloody, and his face gashed in a fearfull manner. His story was told with the air of a man who had not recovered. With a companion he started out prospecting about a month ago, going up Salt River. They left the river when opposite the Superstitious Mountain. Their prospecting began at this point. While climbing up the mountain in a little gully, through black and sand and down which a large stream of water had evidently passed years ago, they were astonished to find that in this sand were large quantities of fine gold. In some places the sand was only about half an inch deep over the granite. The gold in pieces the size of a bean and smaller, was found in the little fissures in the face of the bed-rock. Very little washing was necessary, and they found a little spring of water which furnished them what they needed. They obtained, they think about $600 worth in half a day's work. About two o'clock in the afternoon they were surprised to see an Indian woman come to the top of the gulch above the spring and start to come down. Upon seeing them she ran back over the hill. In less than ten minutes the were surrounded by fifty or sixty savages. The Indians were very small, and seemed to be of a different nature than had ever been seen in Arizona. The Mexicans were not armed, except with knives, and the survivor says they were almost instantly caught with lariats. The Indians took them up the mountain and put them in a cave. They tortured and killed his companion, and his fate would have been the same but for his escape. He succeeded in getting away with only a few knife gashes on his face. They lost their gold with all their outfit. The Indians seemed to be cave-dwellers, and were evidently excited over the place being found by outsiders. Our reporter's limited knowledge of the Spanish language makes it impossible for us to obtain all the particulars of the affair. For the benefit of non-residents we will say that Superstition Mountain derives its name from the fact that no white man has ever been seen again who attempted its ascention. It is tradition among the Mexicans that large deposits of free gold are to be found in its gulches and ravines. It is not known whether there is any water there or not.

A Fearful Affray in Alabama.

[Huntsville (Ala.) Independent.]

One of the most sickening affairs, if, indeed it is not the most horrible, which it has been our duty to chronicle, happened last Saturday, on the premises of Mr. Solon Kelley, about eight miles from Huntsville. There was a hog killing in progress, and two colored men Robert and Dennis Patrick, brothers, got into a dispute about each other's share of the year's crop.

A long kettle filled with water was near by. The water in the kettle had been heated to such a high degree that they were waiting for it to cool a little in order to scald the hogs in it. The water was so hot that they were afraid it would "set" the hair of the hogs. This was the high temperature of the water when the brothers began to quarrel. Dennis who was the oldest, told Robert that he would put him in the kettle if he didn't shut up, and Robert, the preacher brother, told Dennis that if he put him in the water, he (Dennis) would have to go with him.

Dennis caught Robert and pressed him backward in the direction of the kettle. He pressed him, both of them having their arms locked meanwhile, until they both went headlong into the kettle of seething water. Their piteous and awful screams and moans soon attracted others to the place, who finally extricated them from the boiling cauldron. They retained their senses when first taken out, and their intense agonies were simply beyond description. They at once complained of their hot clothes and when these were taken from their limbs flakes of boiled flesh went with them, leaving their bones exposed. Their beard fell out and their hair dropped from their heads. They had been literally cooked alive! The sight was such that those who witnessed it were well nigh paralyzed with horror.

All possible measures of relief were tried during the night, but Robert died next day and Dennis died on Monday.

FEEDING AND CARE OF HORSES

A Boston Transcript writer strikes a key-note when referring to the care of horses. It says the sundry condition powders and tonics which are often fed to horses, and produce an increase of flesh, but they must be kept up or the horse will run down, and in the end will do an injury. Regular feeding, faithful grooming, change of diet, salt always accessible, exercise, even if it be hard work, with sufficient rest, pure water, pure air in the stable, and comfort with rest, will cause almost any horse properly fed to lay in flesh, if not to become fat. A writer upon this subject, who appears to be well posted says: "Many good horses devour large quantities of grain and hay, and still continue to be thin and poor. The food eaten is not properly assimilated. If the usual food has been unground grain and hay, nothing but a change will effect a desirable alteration in the appearance of the animal. In case oil meal can not be obtained readily, mingle a bushel of flax seed with a bushel of barley, one of oats and another bushel of Indian corn, and let it be ground into fine meal. This will be a fair proportion for all his feed. Or the meal of barley, oats and corn, in equal quantities, may be first procured, and one-fourth part of the oil cake mingled with it, when the meal is sprinkled on cut feed. Feed two or three times daily, mingle with a peck of cut hay and straw. If the horse will eat that amount greedily, let the quantity be increase until he will eat four or six quarts at every feeding three times a day. But avoid the practice of allowing a horse to stand at a rack well filled with hay. In order to fatten a horse that will run down in flesh, the groom should be very particular to feed the animal no more than he will eat up clean and lick the manger for more."

It Will Sweep the Country.

[Indianapolis Sentinel.]

The Auburn Courier places Mr. Hendricks' name for president at the head of its columns with the admirable sentiment originated by Mr. Hendricks in his recent speech before the Hendricks club. It is as follows:

"No solid south; no solid north, but a solid Union."

This is all the platform needed for the next campaign with Mr. Hendricks on the ticket. It will sweep the country.

They Mourn His Loss.

The following pathetic resolutions were recently drawn up by Jim McMichael, in behalf of the "Auburn Junction Social Club," on the departure of W. W. Hoffman for brighter fields of labor:

AUBURN JUNCTION, Jan. 5, 1880.

WHEREAS, the above-mentioned W. W. Hoffman, a member in good standing of the "Social Club," by a visitation of Providence was placed in a peculiar position $19 worth by the B. & O. railroad company, and considering it expedient to withdraw his services from the above company, "The Boys," unanimously and with one voice, swear by the departed member of Mr. Picker that "Huff" is a "rattler" and should shine in the society of the ladies, as well as in societies in this and like organizations. Therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, that in losing "Huff" the boys lose a pleasant companion and genial friend, while the society of Auburn mourns the loss of one of its brightest "hoof nicdities." It is further resolved by this society to make up a lunch consisting of pickled rubber shoes, wall-eyed herring on toast, sponge frogs—a la junction—and other delicacies of the season, for the sustenance of his body in transit from Auburn Junction to Tiffin; and it is further the sense of this body that the spiritual is at Chris's, and it is resolved to investigate at once. Be it also resolved that a copy of these resolutions be printed in the several daily papers at the junction and that copies be sent to the foreign mission bureau for distribution among the unenlightened.

[Signed,] Geo. P. Smith, F. L. Clark, W. B. McClaran, J. McMichael, Will. M. Forshey, Chas. F. Wood, Fred. Sammons.

Quite a Relic.

[illegible] handed us a way-bill of the old stage-line from this place to Fort Wayne, which somebody had found amongst a bundle of old papers. It is headed "Auburn and Fort Wayne Way-Bill," and bears date of "Monday, June 28, 1856," being now nearly twenty-four years old. In a bold, plain hand are written the names of the following persons who took passage to Fort Wayne: "Mr. John Swigart, Mr. Pollard and One Stranger, Jew." The fare was $1.25 each, and was recieved by the "Ohio House;" and on the return trip to Auburn the passengers were: "Isaac Teeters, Mr. D. Kline, Mrs. Kline and Mr. Helleger," the fares for the load, $5 even, being receipted for by H. B. Garten. The document, to be sure, is not remarkably antiquated, but it presents a striking contrast to the mode of transit nowadays, when people can whirl down to Fort Wayne, over the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad, in just fifty-three minutes, making stops at six places on the way.

The Third Annual Meeting of the DeKalb County Bar Association.

At the third regular annual meeting of the DeKalb County Bar Association, held at the court house, in Auburn, the 6th day of January, 1880, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year, viz: President, Hon. Chas. A. O. McClellan; Vice-president, Wm. L. Penfield; Secretary, R. Dexter Tefft; Treasurer, Guy Plumb; Chairman of Executive Committee, R. Wes. McBride.

Among the exercises were excellent essays read by W. L. Penfield, John W. Baxter and Hon. Ezra D. Hartman, their respective topics being: "Why the common law tends to make 'Case Lawyers,'" "Limitation of Actions" and "The Law of Mechanics' Liens," in which essays the subjects were ably discussed by the writers.

The Bissell Carpet Sweeper.

No machine was ever brought to Sturgis that elicited so much admiration from both sexes, but particularly the ladies, as the carpet sweeper manufactured by M. R. Bissell, of Grand Rapids, Mich. We have had other kinds sold here before, but the valuable improvements introduced in this, renders it so perfect that it is considered by those who have it, a really indispensible article. It saves half the time and three-fourths the strength required with a broom. Our better-half uses one and says, as others do, "they are are just splendid."—Sturgis Journal.

Answers to Many Correspondents.

In reply to numerous inquiries from our readers, concerning the wonderful qualities of the Great German Remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL,—mentioned in our last issue, we would inform them that the article may be obtained from our retail druggists, or by their aid. Ask for ST. JACOBS OIL, and if the dealer does not keep it in stock, he will be able to procure it in a few days from the wholesale houses. We understand there is already an immediate demand for the remedy, which is not so very surprising when it is considered what it is daily accomplishing in the way of relief and cures, hordering, in some instances, on the miraculous.

Thanks.

MESSRS. EDITORS: By your permission we take this method of expressing our thanks to our kind friends of Auburn and vicinity for making us a pleasant visit, and a liberal donation January 1, 1880. May the Lord crown them with goodness, and may His paths drop fatness to them through all the year.

LEVI RICH,
SUSAN RICH.

—The young ladies of Waterloo, or rather, a portion of them, held a meeting Monday evening for the purpose of making arrangements for a leap year grand masquerade, which will take place in the near future. We have not yet learned the result of the caucus.

—The case of the state vs. Joseph Culler has attracted considerable attention in court this week. After a two days' trial the jury returned a verdict of not guilty. Culler was charged with stealing from Noah Long, which crime was said to have been committed about two years ago. He has been confined in jail since October last.

—Christopher Columbus Buss, after a series of disappointments, is the proud and happy father of a Christopher Columbus jr. The son of his father may never be so fortunate as to discover a continent, but he will discover when he is old enough to wear pants, that his dad's hand weighs about fifteen pounds avoirdupois. We smoke, Christ.

—Joe Abright's menagerie is rapidly developing. In addition to his imported Ohio bird-dog, he now has a "what-is-it" in the shape of a half web-footed bird, which was captured on the ice down at the creek. It is a curious "animile," and its plumage is downy and beautiful. He thinks it is a good thing to have in the family, and will consequently stuff it.

—A printed circular from President Loomis, of the Fort Wayne, Jackson & Saginaw railroad, states that "the office of general ticket-agent has been vacated by the resignation of Mr. S. K. Hooper," and that "from this date until further notice it will be filled by Mr. H. Bromley, to whom all communications intended for that department should be addressed."

—A natural orator, possessing a magnificent voice and a thorough command of language, Mr. Cumback holds an audience well and is one of the few men who closes his lecture before the audience is ready for him to stop.—Lima Gazette.

—The lecture by Hon. Will Cumback was, as we knew it would be, a most entertaining and attractive one. Every person present was delighted. All want him to be engaged in every course. By all odds, it was the best lecture of the year. Gov. Cumback stands high among the foremost lecturers of America.—Kokomo Tribune.

—A hack-load, made up of the following lovers of the giddy waltz, attended the Winifred club dance at Waterloo, last Thursday night: Fred. Clark and Miss Wunderlich, Will. Hoffman and Miss Tarney, Frank Copper and wife, Frank Zimmerman and wife, and John Robbins and wife. On the homeward trip, and when about a mile north of town, one wheel of the hack collapsed and the whole party had to "hoof it" the balance of the way, in mud up to—oh, it was "awful muddy."

—The celebrated Bissell Carpet-Sweeper, manufactured at Grand Rapids, Michigan, is being sold in nearly every house in Lagrange, and every person who uses them speaks of them in the highest terms of praise. It is a grand, good little machine, and well deserves the extensive praise and renewed fame and popularity it has gained, as also the very extensive sale with which it is meeting at every place where it is introduced. Every family ought to have a Bissell Carpet-Sweeper. Don't neglect to buy while the canvass is being made by T. V. Sebring.—Lagrange Standard.

—It affords the faculty of Indiana Asbury University great pleasure to bear testimony to the sterling merits of the lectures of the Hon. Will Cumback. He has spoken repeatedly in this community, always with the highest success. His second lecture, on "The Invisible Some People," attracted the largest house of the season. The address was listened to with the closest attention, and with every mark of appreciation and enthusiasm on the part the hearers. We heartily commend Governer Cumback to lyceums, lecture association and to any and all who may desire to employ a lecturer competent to instruct, entertain, and delight an audience.

Dr. Hulburt.

When any doctor tells you "Catarrh is incurable," he confesses ignorance of how to cure it, and does an injustice to those who can, as well as to those who are perishing from lack of a cure. Such men, "wise in their own conceit," should remember that many diseases, such as small-pox, cholera, epilepsy, etc., were once called "incurable;" and while I could not probably cure either of these, there are those who can, and knowing this they give their well-tried remedies for these complaints, with the same confidence that I give the "Sure Cure" for catarrh, for I believe this disease is just as curable as others, and have never heard a good reason why it is not.

On the other hand, when any person tells you that he or his medicines are the only cure for catarrh (or any other disease), you may set him down as a bigger fraud than he imagines the public to be "gullible," but any man or means that does cure this most common and least understood of all diseases, is entitled to the heartfelt "God speed" which I cheerfully give him or them. I wish there were more of such, for the harvest truly is great but the SUCCESSFUL laborers are few.

Impurity of the blood always accompanies catarrh. It must be treated constitutionally. Medicines which will cure scrofula or syphilis will cure catarrh—and nothing short of this will do it. By such treatment I radically cure catarrh, and it can be done by no other.

IS LIFE WORTH LIVING.

THE BABE.

Begun!—and round me glowed
Huge masks, with staring eyes—
And smiles alarmed me more—
After saw in pantomimal story.
I had no sense of time; nor overmuch
A sense of anything:
I woke!—my eyes confronted with a glory
That made them open more and more,
It seemed they'd crack to take it in:
Anon, a wall of black would supervene,
I'd try to fight it off, and cry aloud!—
The light was out!
Brief, brief candle!

THE LOVER.

Another spell—'twas not the one at school,
That taught me more than aught beside;
A being like myself,
But unlike more—a finer—fairer—
To every sense and thought a newer zest
And newer meaning.
How great had been the void
That now was brimming o'er!
What measure's depth could hold it all!
Riches untold; a world unknown before;
The idol!—and I worshiped.
'Twas burning then, was life and love—
Brief, brief candle!

THE OLD MAN.

'Tis further on; I've staying power—
For friends are gone, snuffed out
As though they ne'er had been—
Whilst I, who miss them here, live on alone!
A retrospect of graves
And just ahead—my own.
There's over all a ghostly hue—
And rosy, golden day no more
As seen with infant's, lover's eyes—
The flame of life is burning blue!
And dwindling in the final flicker!

But at its best it gives me handle
To ask if it were worth the candle?
Brief, brief candle!

A WILD GOOSE CHASE.

CHAPTER I.

"Now, yer Honor, jist lie quiet and aisy, keep the gun on full cock and all ready, but never shtir a limb till I give the curlew's cry, and then look out, for the birds'll be just within shot of ye."

So spoke Shawn, my herculean henchman, as he laid the last bunch of heather on my quivering body; and, having satisfied himself that I was perfectly well concealed from human sight, he prepared to creep off to the spot where he had seen the wild geese alight, in order to drive the unconscious victims directly over my head. I nodded as he gave his instructions, and, ere he crept away, promised implicitly to obey his commands. But I felt anything but comfortable in my novel position. My bed was the bare bogland, oozy and soft with the soaking of the heavy winter rains, my covering the half-withered heather which Shawn had uprooted from the hillside. And the month was March. There had been no snow in Storport for many weeks past; the hills all around me were black and desolate as the sky loomed above, but the little March wind came creeping over the hill and smote me with chilly hands. I lay patiently for some time, the sportsman-like ardor in my heart preventing the wind from utterly freezing my limbs, but at length my patience got exhausted, and I began to stir. Suddenly I heard the faint whistle of the curlew; two minutes after I saw a flock of wild geese pass almost directly over my head. I fired aimlessly, and missed.

Then I found that my garments were completely soaked with bog-water, and that my limbs had sunk several inches deep in the oozy ground, nay more, that they were only prevented from sinking further by some obstruction which was so hard and cold that it made my bones ache. My first care was to exhume my half-buried limbs, my next to unearth the substance which had prevented me from sinking utterly. This latter proved to be no easy matter, but, with the help of a spade which Shawn had brought with him to prepare my boggy bed, I at length succeeded in clearing away a good deal of earth and discovering that my life-preserver was a deal box some five feet long, stained almost black with bog-water, and fastened down with half a dozen rusty nails.

I had heard, during my childhood's days, of fortunate people being enriched by the discovery of buried treasures, but I need hardly add all such romantic ideas had long since vanished from my mind; and yet, as I gazed at that peculiar-looking box, I felt a cold hand had passed over me, and a succession of the wildest thoughts surged through my brain. Exhume and open it I must; and the wish became stronger within me when Shawn, who soon returned from his goose-driving, did his best to dissuade me from such a proceeding.

"Sure 'tis no affair of ours, yer Honor," said Shawn, looking, at the same time, so profoundly uncomfortable as to cause my curiosity to increase. "Maybe it's a little potheen that the boys have buried."

But I cut him short, and insisted that he should assist to exhume and open the box. Seeing that I was determined, he at length set to work; but he was too slow, and evidently so unwilling that at length my patience got exhausted. I took the spade from his hand, inserted it in the crevice upon which Shawn had been working, and, with a powerful wrench, forced the lid from the box. We both recoiled in horror and dismay—the box contained a corpse!

After the first shock of the discovery was over I looked again, and my dismay increased tenfold.

"Why, Shawn," I exclaimed, "if it isn't—"

"Yes, in troth," broke in Shawn; "sure enough it is!" and we both stared into the box again.

In order to explain the strange circumstance which enabled me to recognize this corpse, I must chronicle events which took place several weeks before I exhumed it.

CHAPTER II.

On the 15th day of February the annual winter fair was held at Portaclare. The anticipation of this day always created a good deal of excitement in the minds of the peasants in and around Storport—for it was always constituted a sort of gala day—but the announcement of the fair of 1877 brought with it whisperings of woe to many a home. The crops had been bad for that year, and the miserable, half-starved tenants had been unable to scrape together enough money to pay the rent, so the Proctor had summoned them to attend the sessions at Portaclare in order that they might show cause why they should not deliver up the whole of their worldly goods.

On the eventful day, which was ushered in with hurricanes of blinding sleet, I ordered Shawn to bring out the horses and car that we might drive into Portaclare together. By the time we started the hail had ceased to fall, but still the wind blew bitterly, freezing with its icy breath the little pools on the wayside, and when we drove into Portaclare I felt almost as if my blood was frozen. It was midday by that time, and, save for one or two decrepit old men we had passed on the road, we were the last to arrive. What a gathering there was! The streets of the little town were so crowded that it was almost impossible to make one's way along. In the market-place bevies of rosy-cheeked servant girls waited to be hired; pigs grunted and squealed as the drovers whipped them along; the shopkeepers shrieking to the passengers to buy—the agent sat in the cozy parlor of the inn comfortably enjoying his glass of wine; gazing with a smile into the wild, woe-begone faces of the creatures whom he had summoned thither, and determinedly shaking his head at every heart-broken appeal.

"Don't come to me," he said; "I'm done with ye, a lot of lazy spendthrifts as ye are. Ye'll go before them to-day as 'll make ye pay!"

I sat in a remote corner of the room and quietly watched the wretched creatures who crowded around the man; their wild eyes, their famished faces, their trembling bodies clad in the dirty rags which were their sole protection from the cold. And as I glanced from them to the frozen window-panes and the sleet which fell, covering with a thin crystal sheet the curb-stone of the street, my heart turned sick.

"Poor, miserable, half-starved wretches!" I thought, "most of you will have sore hearts to-night, for you will lose your little all, God help you! and there will be nothing but starvation left!"

Heartsick at the sight of so much woe which I was utterly powerless to relieve, I arose, and was about to leave the room, when my eye was suddenly arrested by a figure, ragged, wild and woe-begone, which crouched close up by the window. Five minutes before, I had seen this man crouched like a stricken beast before the agent, his skeleton hands outstretched, his parched lips suing for mercy.

"For the love of God, Tony Monaghan, niver be hard on a poor boy," he said; "all my potatoes had the black disease this year, and they rotted in the ground. My pig took the sickness and died. I have two little children down wid a fever, and if ye take away my cow I'll have no dhrap of milk to give them, and they'll die!"

This appeal, heart-breaking as it was, had met with the usual repulse:

"Don't bring yer lies to me. You'll go before them as 'll make ye pay!"

So the man had crept back into the shadow, and as I saw him crouched beside the window I noticed that the piteous look of appeal had left his face; his features were strangely convulsed, his wild eyes gleamed, and his hand clenched and unclenched in nervous dread.

"That man means mischief," I said as I passed out into the street.

At 2 o'clock the tenants' cases were to be called on, and as the hands of the clock approached that hour I made my way through the crowded streets in the direction of the court. The wind blew bitterly, thin flakes of snow were falling, and as I walked I felt the ice crackling and breaking beneath my feet. I noticed to my wonder that the streets through which I passed were almost deserted—presently a succession of moans and cries struck upon my ear, then I noticed that the people were running excitedly, and, following the direction which they took, I at length found myself on the outskirts of a great crowd which was collected in the principal street, before the open door of the court. Seeing my own servant among the throng, I questioned him as to the cause of the excitement, for I noticed that many of the people were wringing their hands, others moaned feebly, while others glared around them with wild eyes, and then seemed to utter sighs of relief. Instead of replying to my question, Shawn took me by the shoulders, and gently propelled me into the middle of the throng.

There I saw the cause of the disturbance.

Lying on the curbstone, his head supported in the arms of a policeman, his face open to the wondering gaze of hundreds of eyes, was the agent, stone dead. His body was surrounded by policemen—warders of the court—nay, at the cry of murder the very Judge upon the bench had stopped the course of justice and came forth.

"Good God!" I exclaimed, recoiling upon Shawn; "how did this happen?"

"He was just walkin' along the street, yer Honor," said Shawn, quietly, "when he fell, and laid his head down and died."

"Murdered?"

"Oh, God forbid! yer Honor; what for should he be kilt, at all at all?"

Nevertheless, I felt convinced that my supposition was right; nay, more, I believed that I could point out the very man who had done the deed.

That a murder had actually been committed could not be proved on the spot, but the manner of the man's death was so peculiar as to call for a Coroner's inquiry and a post-mortem examination. The body, therefore, was at once removed to the inn, and several hours after its removal the two principal doctors of the town were on their way armed with the implements necessary for their work. On their arrival at the inn a novel scene awaited them. The people, having at length solved the meaning of the awful words, "post-mortem examination," had risen up in arms and declared that no such desecration of the dead should be allowed. Before Tony Monaghan became a land agent he had been one of themselves, and, though he had been a little hard on them of late, there wasn't one man among them but would raise his voice against having the poor boy's body cut up like a beast's. The consequence was—a riot. The police were overpowered, the doctors sent packing, the inn taken by storm. For two nights the body lay in state, being waked by its wild comrades. At the end of that time the authorities, only too eager to bring matters to a peaceful issue, allowed it to be quietly buried. As the grave closed above it popular excitement seemed to die away.

But if the people were satisfied, the authorities were not. All believed that a murder had been committed, and that the subsequent riot was only an effort to prevent the discovery of the murderer. No sooner, therefore, was the unfortunate man buried than the doctors received an order authorizing them to exhume the body, and make a post-mortem examination in private. One night, two nights after the funeral, they set out on their mission with hopeful hearts. It was bitter winter weather. The night was black dark; the ground was frozen hard, and thickly covered with snow. Making straight for the graveyard, the doctors employed themselves in opening up the grave. For several hours they worked with pickax and spade; at last they came upon the coffin, raised it up and opened the lid.

It was empty!

At this piece of audacity on the part of some persons unknown, everybody was more amazed than ever, and again came the conviction, stronger than before, that murder had been done. But, try as they would, they could discover nothing. The whole country was thrown into a tumult, and popular excitement at its height, when I unwittingly solved the terrible secret by finding the body in the bog.

CHAPTER III.

Having sworn Shawn to secrecy, I assisted him to reinter the box, and forthwith sent word of the discovery to the magistrate. The box was at once removed, the post-mortem examination concluded, and the discovery made that the unfortunate man had died of heart disease. Again everybody was amazed, and this time the wonder was mixed with shame. After the examination was made, the Coroner's inquiry was hurried over, and once more, in solemn pomp and with all the rites of the church, the agent was laid in his grave.

Amid the solemn concourse which attended this second funeral I noticed the wild, wan face which had haunted me ever since that day when I had seen it by the frozen window of the inn—the face of the very man whom in my own mind I had accused of murder! For a moment I hung back ashamed; then I boldly walked forward and pressed a bank note into the wretched creature's hand. He looked from it to me in dazed amazement, then the sight of one of his ragged children seemed to make him realize what the money would do. He clutched it closer, and with one last look down the open grave he crept across the bogs toward his home.

By whose hand the corpse was conveyed from the church-yard to the bog was never discovered. It was generally believed, however, that news of the intended examination had been whispered abroad, and that the agent was exhumed and hidden solely with a view to preventing his body being "cut up."

Hindoo Care of Life.

In the early dawn next morning we drove to Kaira, a place of 12,000 inhabitants, along a fine road with sheltering trees. The town stands on the high bank of a river. From the top of the Collector's house there is an extensive view over a rich, well-timbered country. There are many monkeys, some very large, and, though they injure the crops, no one molests them. This care of life in regard to the lower creation is a principle of Hindoo religion more strictly observed than that of care of their fellow-creatures outside the circle of their own family connection. Within that circle they are wonderfully kind. Hindoos of high caste never take life. Some are strict vegetarians, and, in order to preserve life, will frighten away fish from parts of a river where they have reason to expect English officers to come in quest of them. Even the much-abused money-lender refuses all advances to fishermen. On one occasion I came upon an extensive inclosed park with shelter sheds, maintained by a native banker, into which horses no longer fit for use were charitably received and fed, that they might wear out their lives in quietness. And yet female infanticide is undoubtedly too common, sixty-four females to 100 males being not an unusual proportion in the population. A native Judge explained this to me by the great desire among the lower class to intermarry with the higher, a lower man being ready to pay a needy man of the higher order a large sum of money to induce the son of the higher rank to marry his daughter. But when the lower man has no money, as is too often the case, the female infant is apt to be neglected and allowed to die.—The Nineteenth Century.

Elephantine Affection.

A story comes from Tenbury, England, where a menagerie has been paying a visit, which illustrates the well-known character of the elephant for humane feelings in a remarkable degree. Among the animals was a very fine female elephant, called Lizzie, which was attacked with a violent fit of colic and suffered intensely. A local chemist, whose success as an animal doctor is well known, treated Lizzie, and saved the animal's life. Subsequently, on passing the chemist's shop, the elephant immediately recognized her benefactor, who was standing at the door of his shop, and, going up to him, gracefully placed her trunk in his hand. The chemist visited the exhibition at night, and met with an unexpected reception from his former patient. Gently seizing the "doctor" with her trunk, the elephant encircled him with it, to the terror of the audience, who expected to see him crushed to death, but Lizzie had no such intention, and, after having thus demonstrated her gratitude by acts more eloquent than words, she released the doctor from her embrace and proceeded with her appointed task.

A CALIFORNIA DUEL.

How Lippincott Killed Tevis, at Downieville, in 1855.

[Calvin McDonald in the Sacramento Record.]

Some time in 1855 there came to this State a female temperance lecturer, Miss Sarah Pellet, a friend of Lucy Stone Blackwell, Antoinette Brown, and that confederation of lady reformers. She was young, intelligent, good looking, and pure, and will be kindly remembered by many who shall read this sketch. The writer of this was then conducting the Sierra Citizen, at Downieville, and Miss Pellet having been scurrilously referred to by certain other papers, she there found defenders, came to Downieville, and we became fast friends. Through her exertions a large and flourishing division of the Sons of Temperance was there established, and all the respectable young men temporarily stopped drinking and became enthusiastic advocates of total abstinence. A temperance Fourth-of-July celebration was projected, and we nominated our friend Miss Pellet to make the oration, and, notwithstanding a strong prejudice against women orators, succeeded in procuring her the coveted invitation.

A short time before that Mr. Robert Tevis, a promising young lawyer, and a brother of Lloyd Tevis, of San Francisco, had come there to run for Congress, joined the Temperance Division, and was anxious to make the speech, in order to present himself favorably to the public. He was hard to be put off, and was never reconciled to the disappointment, though, to pacify his opposition to the lady speaker, he was appointed to read the Declaration of Independence, with the privilege of making some remarks on the illustrious document. The glorious Fourth shone brightly on 2,000 or 3,000 people. The celebration began with a salvo of all the anvils in town; the primitive band blew the blast of freedom through patriotic brass, and Mr. Tevis, having read, began to comment on the Declaration in a long speech, greatly to the displeasure of the gallant Sons. In order to terminate his malappropriate oration the anvils were set to firing with such a thundering and consecutive noise that nothing else could be heard, and Mr. Tevis, being very angry, gave way for the orator and sat down. The event made a great deal of talk and brought the ambitious young man into very unpleasant notoriety instead of fame.

The Democratic party had procured the use of two columns of the local paper, and had appointed as editor the Hon. Charles E. Lippincott, State Senator from Yuba county. Lippincott had a keen perception of the ludicrous, and, as Tevis was a Know-Nothing, he took occasion to roast the unfortunate young man in the Democratic corner of the paper, and it created a great deal of fun in the town. The next day Mr. Tevis came to me—I had no jurisdiction in the Democratic side of the paper—and demanded the publication of a card, which pronounced the author of Lippincott's article "a liar and a slanderer." He was white with rage, and trembling, and would not be reasoned with. Knowing the nature of the antagonist and his deadly skill with arms, I tried to dissuade Tevis from the rash and dangerous publication, and dwelt on the inevitable consequence. But he would hear nothing; he wanted to fight, he said, and would fight in the street or otherwise; and, if the card was not published, he would consider it an act of hostility to himself; and so the unconscious type gave out the fatal impress, and a challenge from Lippincott followed promptly, and was as promptly accepted.

Lippincott was a low, heavy-set man, with light hair, piercing black eyes, deliberate and resolute in his speech, and with that peculiar physical structure indicating steadiness and self-possession. He was the son of a clergyman in Illinois, and was exemplary in his habits, excepting the ordinary drinking of that time; was highly cultivated in mind, and was an exceedingly good humorous and sentimental writer. He declared he did not wish to kill his adversary, to whom he had never spoken in person; did not want to fight, if it could be avoided; but the nature of the public insult and the customs of the time compelled him to send the challenge. During a previous winter he had been engaged in hunting deer and bear, and was known to be a remarkably good woodsman. In making his choice of weapons, Tevis unknowingly selected those with which his adversary was most familiar, double-barreled shotguns carrying ounce balls.

Mr. Tevis was a tall, spare man, of a highly nervous and excitable temperament. He came from Kentucky, and possessed the ideas of chivalry and honor prevailing at the South, but too little skilled in woodcraft to know that in shooting down hill one should aim low, else he will overreach the mark.

The combatants took their places, forty yards apart; the ground was a little sloping, and the highest situation fell to the lot of Tevis. The sun was going down upon the peace and happiness of two families far away, and upon a brilliant young man's ambition and life. As his second walked away he turned toward Tevis and laid his finger on his own breast, as an indication where to aim; and Lippincott observed the gesture, and fixed his eyes on the same place. The word was given; both guns cracked at the same instant. Tevis sank down, shot directly through the heart, and a lock of hair fell from near Lippincott's ear. The fallen man had not made the necessary allowance for descending ground, and his murderous lead passed directly over his adversary's left shoulder, grazing his face. The wound was frightful, as though it had been bored through with an auger, and the ground was horrible with its sanguine libation.

After completing his term in the State Senate, Mr. Lippincott returned to his home in Illinois. At the outbreak of the war, Lippincott joined the Union armies, distinguished himself in battle by his reckless daring, and became a Brigadier General. He was afterward the Republican State Auditor of Illinois. If this brief sketch should come to the attention of his personal or political friends, let them know that his career in California was distinguished and honorable, that he was respected and beloved by his acquaintances, and that his unhappy entanglement in the duel resulted from his position and the prevailing spirit of border life. At that time a politician who would have suffered himself to be published a liar and a slanderer, without prompt resentment, would have been considered disgraced by most of his fellow-citizens. Mr. Lippincott was an intimate friend and supporter of the late Senator Broderick, and was by him regarded as his ablest advocate and partisan.

Tragic Death of a Tiger Tamer.

Scarcely three months have elapsed since the horrible fate of Karoly, the renowned wild-beast tamer, during one of his sensational performances with a huge boa constrictor, by which he was crushed to death while enveloped in its coils. We now learn that another tragedy of this character has just been enacted at Berlin. William Rice, the "Tiger King," a brother-in-law of Hagenbeck, who is well known throughout Europe as the impresario of Nubian caravans and Zulu "troupes," opened a "zoologico-anthropological museum" a few days ago in the Thiergarten, just outside of the Brandenburger Thor. This "museum," as its title denotes, contained a collection of rare animals and a variety of more or less savage men and women, who had been trained by Rice to go through elaborate performances with disciplined carnivora. Among others was an extraordinarily handsome negress, who was announced to appear in a "thrilling scene of action" with three full-grown Bengal tigers. On the opening night, the "museum" being crowded with an eagerly expectant audience, the curtain rose upon a huge cage, into which Rice proceeded to lead the tigers, preparatory to "Black Helen's" performance. Scarcely had he made his obeisance to the public than one of the ferocious animals sprang upon him, struck him on the right cheek with his left fore paw, and fastened with his tremendous fangs upon the muscles of his left arm. One of the attendants, also an Englishman, rushed to his assistance, armed with a heavy iron bar, and beat the tiger off. Rice walked steadily off the stage, and fell in a swoon as soon as he had reached the wing. Profs. Von Langenbeck, the Emperor's body surgeon, and Virchow, the eminent anatomist, were summoned, and dressed the unfortunate man's wounds. He was removed to Langenbeck's private infirmary, where he received the personal and unremitting attention of Germany's first living surgeon; but the shock to his system was so terrible that at last he died in great agony. The immediate cause of his death is officially stated to be blood poisoning. "Black Helen," whose real name is Helen Johnson, a native of New Jersey, was also bitten by a lion during the performance that took place on the evening after Rice's mishap, and lies in a precarious condition. The Berlin police authorities have closed the "museum," and prohibited any further exhibitions of wild-beast taming within the precincts of the German capital.—London Telegraph.

Casualties in Battle.

The battle of Torgau, fought by Frederick the Great in 1760, is well known to have been one of the most murderously contested actions which has ever taken place, but until lately no trustworthy enumeration has ever been given of the killed, wounded and missing on either side. In the last number of the Militar Wochenblatt, the organ of the German general staff, carefully-prepared tables are published of the losses suffered by the several Prussian regiments of cavalry and battalions of infantry engaged, and from these it appears that the fifty-nine battalions which took part in the action, and which numbered altogether 26,000 officers and men, lost a total of 15,650 officers and men, or about 60 per cent. of their aggregate effective. In the thirty-nine battalions which fought under the personal direction and immediate orders of the King, the proportion of losses was even greater, so that, after the action, the five battalions of grenadiers had to be formed into one battalion, the remnants of six battalions of two other regiments being also temporarily organized into one battalion. Of the 26,000 infantry soldiers who went into action, 3,350 were killed, 7,956 were wounded, and 3,130 were reported as missing. As a contrast to this terrible proportion of killed, wounded and missing, it may be mentioned that the loss at Gravelotte was only one-eleventh of the whole number of troops engaged on both sides, at Worth and Mars-la-Tour one-sixth, at Spicheren one-eighth, at Koniggratz one-fifteenth only, and at Magenta and Solferino one-eleventh.

A Long Hill.

A tavern-keeper on the San Bruno road was aroused one night by an antiquated old granger, who sat over the front wheels of an open lumber-wagon, and who was evidently disturbed about something.

"I say, mister," said the rustic, scratching his head with the butt of his whip; "this here's the road to 'Frisco, ain't it?"

"Certainly; but, old man, what have you done with your hind wheels?"

"Great Scott!" exclaimed the old party, rubbing his specs and looking behind him, "if I haven't gone and lost them wheels. That explains the whole thing, though, stranger; seemed like I'd been going up such an all-fired long hill I was beginning to think I had lost the way."—San Francisco paper

A bragging nobleman once said at a table that he had shot a buck through the hind hoof and the ear with one bullet, and called on his ready-witted serving man for corroboration. The servant, scratching his head, replied that the buck was scratching his ear at the critical moment, and added in an undertone to his master, "For mercy's sake, my Lud, next time don't make it so hard to make both ends meet."

HEARTSEASE.

BY L. C. GREENE.

Of all the bonny buds that blow
In bright or cloudy weather,
Of all the flowers that come and go
The whole twelve months together,
The little purple pansy brings
Thoughts of the sweetest, saddest things.

I had a little lover once;
She used to give me posies;
Her eyes were blue as hyacinths,
And lips as red as roses.
Everybody used to praise
Her handsome looks and winsome ways.

The other boys that went to school
Would make such silly speeches,
Because I took her every day
The biggest plums and peaches,
And always at the door would wait
To carry home her books and slate.

They couldn't see with pout and fling
The mighty fascination
About that little snub-nosed thing
To win such admiration—
As if there weren't a dozen girls
With nicer eyes and longer curls.

One thing they knew as well as I,
For I never could see clearly
Why more than Marian or May
I should be loved so dearly.
I asked her why was all of this;
She only answered with a kiss.

Until I teased her tell me why—
I wished to know the reason—
When from a flower-bed close by,
Where the pansies were in season,
She picked and gave a flower to me
With sweet but simple gravity.

"The garden is in bloom," she said,
"With lilies pale and slender,
With roses and verbenas red
And fuchsias' purple splendor;
But over and above the rest
This little heartsease suits me best."

"Am I your little Heartsease, then?"
I asked, with blushing pleasure.
She answered yes and yes again,
Heartsease and dearest treasure,
That round the world or all the sea
Held nothing half so dear as me.

I listened with a proud delight—
Too rare for words to capture—
Not even dreamed such sudden blight
Would come to chill my rapture;
I could not foresee the tender bloom
Of pansies round a little tomb.

Life holds some stern experience
Which most of us discover,
But I've had other losses since
I lost my little lover;
But the little purple pansy brings
Thoughts of the sweetest, saddest things.

'Tis night. The lovers lean
Upon the gate;
A nearing form is seen—
It is their fate.
A piercing scream from her
The welkin rent.
It was, as you infer,

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY persons are required in Vassar College to wait on the girls and attend to the estate. And these are but a handful compared to the number who wait on the girls outside the college with a view of attending to the estate of—of their deceased fathers.

THERE would be fewer accidents in this world if men would take their wives' advice, for we never yet heard of a man's head being blown off with a shot-gun, or his being run over by the cars, but what his wife said she had often told him to keep away from the railroad track or never touch a gun.

WHAT IS IT?

What is't that every fiber thrills,
That every sense of being fills,
That memory robs of other things,
Of other thoughts quick surcease brings?
What is't that makes the strong man weak,
That makes the robust pine and peak,
That makes the ruddy face turn pale,
That makes the heart of bravest quail?
What makes the knees together beat?
What makes one limp from head to feet?
What makes one writhe in sore distress,
And bends him up like letter S?
What causes groans with every breath?
What reconciles to instant death?
What is't that makes the baby weep?
What is't that visits him in sleep,
And prints the semblance of a smile
Upon his lips that doth beguile—
The women-folk—queer, foolish things—
And make them talk of angel-wings,
Of cherubim and seraphim—
Those creatures of that old wife's whim,
That, when in sleep a baby smiles,
The angels whisper it meanwhiles?
What makes that baby from his dream
Awake with calliopic scream?
What makes that precious baby wake?
Good friends, it is the stomach-ache!

THE recent published records of York Castle, England, formerly a fortress, but now for a long time used as a prison, show that in 1649 Isabella Billington, 33, was sentenced to death for crucifying her mother, and offering a cock and a calf as a burnt sacrifice.

NO MOTHER wearing banged hair should preserve her photographs. Twenty years from now, if her son should get hold of one, he would exclaim: "Oh! why did they put my mother in the House of Correction!"

WHY NIHILISM THRIVES.

The Horrors of Russian Despotism—Why a Newspaper Was Suspended.

The London Times prints a letter from its St. Petersburg correspondent, setting forth the reasons why the Golos, one of the most important and influential papers in the empire, was recently suspended. The letter is of remarkable interest, not alone as showing the rigidity of the press censorship in Russia, and the insufficient—or what we would deem insufficient—grounds for suspending a newspaper, but also as giving an inside glimpse into the actual misery of the people in the interior. The picture which it draws is a distressing one, and so full of the wretchedness and discontent under which the Russian people are groaning that the Government evidently feared to have the world know anything further of the sad plight of its people. The publication of the details, however, in such a paper as the London Times will carry the intelligence far beyond the narrow limits in which the Golos circulates, and, so far, the object of censorship is thwarted.

The order of the Minister of the Interior states that the supension was caused by the publication of a sort of diary, in which the writer sets forth in very graphic detail the widespread misery of the people in every part of the interior. In this diary the first complaint made by the writer is of the enormous increase of prices of all the necessaries of life. He shows that in the South of Russia the prices of grain and fuel have enormously enhanced, the latter so rapidly that the people had to burn straw in their stoves. In the North, bread has risen 75 per cent., and salt 50 per cent. in less than two years. Meat is constantly rising in value, though the peasants eat no more meat than formerly, and it can be transported at cheaper rates than ever before. He says: "Life has become dearer, and still people do not value their lives any more. Nothing but suicides by drowning, by shooting, or the knife, are reported from every side." In his entry the next day, the diarist makes a protest against the threatened abolition of the system of election of university professors and the substitution of those appointed by the Government. The next day he takes up the subject of agriculture, and shows that over a year ago new statutes were devised for the promotion of the lower agricultural schools, and that not a single step had been taken to carry out the scheme contemplated by the statutes. So far from that, a teacher of a St. Petersburg school who commenced instructing his scholars in natural history incurred the wrath of the Government and had to desist. He says, sarcastically: "A population, for example, is engaged in the iron industry, and carpentering is made compulsory in the schools, although there is probably not a tree nor a bush within miles of the settlement. For the sake of conformity, we can commence educating the population in agriculture in those districts where there is not an acre of land to plow." The next day he refers to the infamous dishonesty in financial matters practiced by the communal authorities, and complains that defalcations and embezzlements are so common that they would amount to millions if they were reckoned up. The next day he returns to the attack by charging the authorities with using threats of torture as arguments for the conversion of heretics to orthodoxy. He instances men and women who have been flogged as a means of grace, and one poor woman who was lashed within an inch of her life in the presence of 1,000 witnesses, not one of whom showed any compassion when the suffering creature cried out in her pain, "Lord, forgive them, for they know not what they do." He says in this connection:

"Nineteen years will soon have passed since the emancipation of the serfs, and during all this time the whip and stick have not disappeared from the self-administration of the peasant. Such barbarism does not harmonize with the respect due to the individual man. What do we see? The flagellation of Stundists, the burning of witches, the burning of a dumb man suspected of spreading rinderpest, the drowning of a drunkard who in his cups threatened to burn down a village. This is the way in which the commune exercises its authority over the individual. An elder directed the auto-da-fe of the witch, and an elder ordered the cruel treatment of the Stundists. Who hold the whip more tenaciously in their hands than the elders of the village communes? The first step in peasant reform is to destroy this arbitrary power over individuals."

Though the charges made by this diarist would not be deemed sufficient grounds for the suspension of a newspaper in any country having a representative form of government or not governed by a military despotism, they none the less present a very strong indictment of the Russian Government, and one which will not fail to strike the world as true in all its counts, from the very haste with which the Government strikes down the newspaper making it. The political injustice of the Government and the burdens which it imposes on the people are no secret; but, when to this is added such a fearful catalogue of social oppression and brutality, and such a wretched picture of distress and suffering, there can be no wonder that Nihilism thrives, that assaults are made upon the lives of officials, and that the people are on the verge of revolution, or that the people bitterly complain that, while the Government was willing to enter into a long and bloody war with Turkey to relieve the condition of the people of the Danubian provinces, it will do nothing for its own.

His Part.

A lady contributor to the Wayne Press tells this story: "I had been out in Westchester County on a visit, and while there I found a kitten which I brought home as a plaything for my two children. To prevent any dispute about the ownership of puss, I proposed, and it was agreed, that the head should be mine, the body should be the baby's, and Eddy, the eldest, but 3 years, should be the sole proprietor of the long and beautiful tail. Eddy rather objected at first to this division, as putting him off with an extremely small share of the animal, but soon became reconciled to the division, and quite proud of his ownership in the graceful terminus of the kitten. One day, soon after, I heard poor puss making a dreadful mewing, and called out to Eddy, "There, my son, you are hurting my part of the kitten; I heard her cry." "No, I didn't, mother; I trod on my part, and your part hollered!"

Gen. Burnside's Proposed Resignation

H. J. Raymond, Esq., the New York editor, visited the Army of the Potomac pending the premeditated second attack on Fredericksburg. Extracts from his journal, published in Scribner, shed new light on the history of the disastrous campaign of 1862-3. Gen. Burnside's plans, it will be remembered, were steadily opposed by Hooker, Franklin, Smith and others of his subordinates, and were treated with indifference by his superior officers:

We returned to headquarters at 5, and found Gen. Burnside there already. After we had joked him a little about the rapidity of his journey to Washington, he told us he had been only to Acquia creek. Before leaving camp he had telegraphed to Gen. Halleck as follows: "I wish very much to see you for an hour. Will you come down to Acquia, or shall I go to Washington?" On reaching Acquia creek he found a reply: "Use your own judgment about coming up." To which he answered at once: "Yours received. I shall not come." He seemed greatly annoyed and vexed at the apparent indifference of Gen. Halleck to the movement of the army and to his wishes, and said he should not go to Washington to see him. While we were talking Lieut. Bowen came down from Gen. Hooker's headquarters, and said that Hooker was denouncing the attempted movement very freely and without the slightest restraint; even if the weather had been perfectly good, he said, the attempt to cross would have proved a failure. Gen. Burnside said he should send to the President his unconditional resignation of his command—sending at the same time the removal of several of his field officers. I made no remark at the time, seeing that he was too much disturbed and excited to give the matter proper consideration.

In the morning after breakfast Gen. Burnside told me he had changed his mind about accompanying his letter of resignation with the removal of officers. He feared this would look too much like attempting to make conditions with the Government, which he said he had no right to do. He had determined to resign, and send his letter to Washington by special messenger. After Pope's repulse, when Washington was thought to be in great danger from the rebels, who were pushing into Maryland, Gen. McClellan had refused to resume command of the Army of the Potomac unless Mr. Stanton or Gen. Halleck should first be removed. He had not done this formally, but had told his friends that he should insist on these conditions. Gen. Burnside said he talked with him until 3 o'clock in the morning to dissuade him from making any such conditions. He found him excessively stubborn about it, and finally told him he had no right to take such a course, and that he could not possibly maintain his position before the country as a loyal man if, when the Capitol was in danger and the North invaded, he were to refuse the command except on such terms as he might prescribe. Gen. McClellan finally yielded to these representations, resumed his command, and achieved by far the most considerable successes of his whole campaign. Gen. Burnside said that half a dozen of the officers had also resolved to resign unless Pope was removed. He heard of it, got them together, remonstrated with them, and finally denounced them as disloyal for entertaining such a purpose, and in the end induced them to forego it. When they had come to their conclusion he told them Gen. Pope had been removed.

Cultivation of Strawberries.

Mr. E. P. Roe, the horticulturist, in his Scribner series on small fruits, writes as follows of a mooted question in the culture of strawberries:

I have now reached a point at which I differ from most horticultural writers. As a rule it is advised that there be no spring cultivation of bearing plants. It has been said that merely pushing the winter mulch aside sufficiently to let the new growth come through is all that is needed. I admit that the results are often satisfactory under this method, especially if there has been deep, thorough culture in the fall, and, if the mulch between and around the plants is very abundant. At the same time I have so often seen unsatisfactory results that I take a decided stand in favor of spring cultivation, if done promptly and sufficiently early. I think my reasons will commend themselves to practical men. Even where the soil has been left mellow by fall cultivation, the beating rains and the weight of melting snows pack the earth. All loamy land settles and tends to grow hard after the frost leaves it. While the mulch checks this tendency it cannot wholly prevent it. As a matter of fact the spaces between the rows are seldom thoroughly loosened late in the fall. The mulch, too often, is scattered over a comparatively hard surface, which by the following June has become so solid as to suffer disastrously from drought in the blossoming and bearing season. I have seen well-mulched fields with their plants faltering and wilting, unable to mature the crop because the ground had become so hard that an ordinary shower could make but little impression. Moreover, even if kept moist by the mulch, land long shielded from sun and air tends to become sour, heavy and devoid of that life which gives vitality and vigor to the plant. The winter mulch need not be laboriously raked from the garden bed or field and then carted back again. Begin on one side of a plot and rake toward the other until three or four rows and spaces between them are bare; then fork the spaces or run the cultivator—often the subsoil plow—deeply through them, and then immediately, before the moist, newly-made surface dries, rake the winter mulch back into its place as a summer mulch. Then take another strip and treat it in like manner, until the generous impulse of spring air and sunshine has been given to the soil of the entire plantation.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

THE latest British emigration returns show that 55,019 persons emigrated in the last quarter, of which 36,110 were English, 6,727 Scotch, and 12,182 Irish.

THE distance from Paris to Marseilles is 600 miles, which, by an improvement in the time-table, is run in fifteen hours, at a speed of forty miles an hour. This is the quickest time on any French railroad.

THE State of Texas contains 274,356 square miles of territory, being larger than either the Austrian or German empires, than the United Kingdom of Great Britain, or than France, Portugal, Belgium and Switzerland combined. And yet Texas is only a small portion of the United States.

THE Czar of Russia receives $8,250,000 per year, or $25,000 per day; the Sultan of Turkey $6,000,000 per year, or $18,000 per day; Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria, $4,000,000, or $10,000 per day; King William of Prussia, $3,000,000 per year, and the King of Italy, $2,200,000 per year.

THE number of men drafted into the army and navy of Prussia in the military year 1878-9 was 86,489. Of this number there are only 2,265 who had not received a common school education, while 78,611 had been educated in elementary German schools, and 5,613 in schools for Polish or other non-German-speaking children. Disregarding the small province of Hohenzollern, the best-educated province, judging by this military test, was Schleswig-Holstein, where only 25 per cent. were without elementary education.

THE value of the cab-horse in Paris which, from accident or age, is no longer useful for business purposes, is estimated at about $13.50, apportioned as follows: Skin, $2.72; hair, 20 cents; blood, $1.25; nails, 2 cents; shoes, 36 cents; viscera, 32 cents; tendons, 6 cents; intestines, 20 cents; grease, $1; bones, 46 cents; flesh, $7. The ultimate destination of the skin is the tan-pit, the tendons are used for glue, the feet for oil, the bones for animals black, the blood for Prussian blue, while the horseflesh finds its place as a piece de resistance in the cheap restaurants.

NOTWITHSTANDING the acceleration of the speed of the railway trains in France and Germany, the pace is still below that of several lines in England. The fastest average in France is 40 miles an hour; in Germany of 37½ miles an hour. In England, the Scotch mail which leaves Euston at 8:50 p. m. arrives in Edinburgh at 6:45 a. m., making 401 miles in ten hours less five minutes, and traveling, therefore, at an average rate, including stoppages, of 41¼ miles an hour; while the 8:30 p. m. express from King's Cross reaches Edinburgh at 6 a. m., running over 397 miles in 9½ hours, and maintaining, therefore, an average speed of 42 miles per hour. Of trains running for shorter distances those on the Great Western run through from London to Swindon, 77¼ miles, in 87 minutes, or at the rate of 53 miles an hour.

Our Verb.

A late number of an educational journal thus describes the trouble a Frenchman had with the verb "break:"

"I begin to understand your language better," said my French friend, Mr. Dubois, to me, "but your verbs trouble me still; you mix them up so with prepositions."

"I am sorry you find them so troublesome," was all I could say.

"I saw your friend Mrs. Murkeson just now," he continued. "She says she intends to break down housekeeping; am I right there?"

"Break up housekeeping, she must have said."

"Oh! yes. I remember; break up housekeeping."

"Why does she do that?" I asked.

"Because her health is broken into."

"Broken down."

"Broken down? Oh, yes! And, indeed, since the small-pox has broken up in our city—"

"Broken out."

"She thinks she will leave it for a few weeks."

"Will she leave her house alone?"

"No, she is afraid it will be broken—broken—how do I say that?"

"Broken into."

"Certainly, it is what I meant to say."

"Is her son to be married soon?"

"No, that engagement is broken—broken—"

"Broken off?"

"Yes, broken off."

"Ah, I had not heard of that."

"She is very sorry about it. Her son only broke the news down to her last week. Am I right? I am anxious to speak English well."

"He merely broke the news; no preposition this time."

"It is hard to understand. That young man, her son, is a fine young fellow; a breaker, I think."

"A broker, and a very fine young fellow. Good-day."

So much for the verb "to break."

A Lake Roofed with Salt.

No, it isn't frozen salt; and it isn't under the ground. It is in summer time, and open to the sky. And this is the explanation:

In Siberia, where this wonder is to be found, the summer heat is intense, and turns the upper part of the waters of the lake into a light mist, which floats away into the air. The change from water to mist takes place so quickly that large masses of salt are left in solid crystals, which cake together, arching slightly over the water, and forming a roof eight or nine inches thick, so strong that beasts of burden pass over it in safety, drawing their loads behind them.

Now, is this salt roof good to skate on? That is the question; but what's the answer?—St. Nicholas.

THE LAW OF THE CASE.

Plain Statement by Gov. Garcelon, of Maine, of His Action, and the Reasons for It—A Constitutional Duty Performed.

Gov. Garcelon, of Maine, telegraphed to the New York Sun a statement justifying the reversal by himself and Council of the election results claimed by the Republicans. His statement is addressed to the public, and is as follows:

Telegrams and suggestions having reached the undersigned to the effect that Gov. Garcelon and his Council owe to the Democracy of the United States in particular, and the public generally, a full, explicit explanation of exactly what they have done and why they did it, I herewith submit for general information a concise statement of the constitutional requirements in relation to elections of Senators and Representatives in this State, the action of the Governor and Council in the discharge of the duty imposed upon them by that instrument, and the statute laws in accord therewith.

Here follows the constitutional and statutory requirements, which the Governor summarizes further on. He then proceeds:

In the discharge of their duty of examining the returns and issuing certificates or summons to the parties appearing to be elected, the Governor and Council have not only endeavored to follow both the letter and spirit of the constitution and laws made in accordance therewith, indicated by their own judgment, but the advice of their duly-appointed legal officer, aided by the best legal talent in the State. And here let it be remembered that the decision of the Governor and Council is not final. The constitution makes the Senate and House of Representatives respectively the final arbiters of the election of their own members. All the lists or returns which have been confided to the Council are to be laid before the Senate and House of Representatives on the first Wednesday of July, annually, and they shall finally determine who are elected. With these directions and requirements before them, what is the Governor and Council required to do? To examine these returns, ascertain their validity, and compare them with the provisions of the constitution and the law. And,

1. They must have been sealed in open town meeting, and in presence of the selectmen, and, by necessary implication, must come into the hands of the Governor and Council in that condition.

2. They must be genuine returns, coming from bona-fide towns or plantations legally constituted and organized.

3. They must be signed by the legal officers of the towns—that is, as elected by the counts, by a majority of the municipal officers of a town or city, and certified by the Clerk.

4. They must contain a statement of the whole number of ballots cast for the officer voted for, and the office for which he was voted to fill.

5. They must contain the name of each person voted for with the number of votes against his name that were thrown for him.

6. The names of the officers signing the returns must be written with their own hands (as per judicial decision, 68 Maine, page 587).

Applying these rules to the varied returns, a tabulation of the persons voted for the different offices, with the votes each has received, determines the result.

In the inspection of returns and tabulation of the same, which has just been completed by myself and Council, it has been our purpose to apply to every return the same rule, to-wit, compliance with the requirements of the constitution and the law, without fear or favor. And if the result as to the political complexion of the Legislature is different from what was claimed by politicians interested in influencing the elections in other States, it is owing in part to the fact that the claim was unfounded, and in part to the carelessness of municipal officers in making their returns. The truth is, the popular vote was against the Republican party, and in the Representative and Senatorial districts the vote was extremely close. In addition to the fact that several persons fail to receive their certificates in consequence of "fatal defects" in the returns from their towns or cities, there are others who would have been presumably elected but for the carelessness of the voters themselves, or the ignorance of the voters themselves, or the ignorance of the candidates, or those who provided ballots at the election. The Judges of our Supreme Court have decided that ballots cast for William H. Smith and W. H. Smith are ballots to be counted separately. Several changes have resulted from this condition of things. In one county persons with as many as four different combinations of initials received the Republican vote and two the Democratic. That county was entitled to only one Senator, and there was no alternative but to give the certificate to the person having the highest number of votes.

In the Danforth district, already notorious, the name of the Republican candidate was Charles A. Rolfe. The town of Danforth voted for Charles Rolfe. The result was that his competitor received the certificate, and from like cause other changes have occurred. The great hue and cry about "conspiracy," "fraud," etc., arises from the fact that we have taken the constitution for our guide, fortified by the opinions of the Supreme Court of the State and the advice of several of the foremost legal gentlemen of the forum, and have not permitted substitution, alteration, or unauthorized amendments of the returns transmitted to us for examination, and by us to be transmitted to the Legislature for their final action. In other words, we have not resolved ourselves into a Returning Board to investigate fraud and bribery, illegal proceedings at the polls, and the thousand and one charges of corruption that are afloat, but have left this whole matter to the action of the Legislature, where it properly belongs. The Governor and Council have recognized the fact that the people of Maine have adopted a constitution and declared it to be the supreme law of the State. They have followed the requirements with fidelity and impartiality, and when an intelligent public have brushed away the mists and false colorings which enraged and discomfited politicians have thrown around our action, and the vituperation and slander that has been heaped upon us has given place to reason and fair investigation, any condemnation of our course, either by the Democracy of the nation, or any fair-minded and honorable politician of any party will be acknowledged with due submission.

ALONZO GARCELON.

A New Mode of Choosing Electors.

Some leading Republicans of New York, who fear the result of the Presidential contest at the ballot-boxes next year, are contemplating an immediate change in the mode of appointing the electors of President and Vice President. The constitution provides that each State shall appoint its electors in such manner as its Legislature may direct. Down to about 1820 the Legislatures in all the States chose the electors. Thenceforward State after State conferred the power directly upon the people through the ballot-boxes. South Carolina adhered to the old mode down to the close of the civil war.

New York clung to the ancient system till after the Presidential contest of 1824. At the close of a bitter struggle, which temporarily prostrated the Democratic party in the State, the method was adopted of choosing the electors by Congress districts, each district to choose one elector, and the whole body to then meet and choose the two Senatorial electors. The only Presidential contest under that system in this State was that of 1828, when Gen. Jackson secured twenty electors and John Quincy Adams 16. In 1829 the Legislature adopted the general ticket method, which has since prevailed.

Those Republicans who now contemplate a change fear that the State cannot be carried by their party next fall; and they propose to secure a portion, and perhaps a majority, of the electors by adopting the Congress district system of 1828, while some advocate the extreme measure of returning to the old method of appointment by the Legislature, whereby, for this once at least, they could give the Republican candidates for President and Vice President the whole thirty-five votes of the State.

It is in the power of the incoming Legislature to adopt either of these modes if it sees fit, and the Legislature is overwhelmingly Republican in both branches. Those who urge the taking of this bold step look at the subject from the two standpoints of present success and the next census. They say that the measure would certainly secure them the Presidency now, and that the apportionment under the census of 1880, by stripping the South of one-third of its power, would make everything sure in the future.

Such is the scheme in contemplation. Perhaps the Legislature will carry it through, and perhaps not.

The Only Question.

It is not necessary to waste words upon the action of Gov. Garcelon, of Maine, respecting the returns of the recent election.

The real question in the case is this: Has Gov. Garcelon acted in strict obedience to the constitution and laws of the State, or has he violated them? If he has merely followed and applied the rules laid down for him in these instruments, he has done right; if he has broken those rules, he has done wrong, and deserves punishment.

The Governor says that he has done nothing more than obey the constitution and the laws and apply them as he is sworn to do; and we have not yet seen any attempt to prove that this is not the case. But until such proof is adduced, and its conclusiveness made evident, we are bound to believe that the Governor has done right, that there is no ground of complaint against his action, and that, as a conscientious public officer, he could not have taken any other course.

Let his critics prove that he has violated the constitution and the laws of the State. Then they will have a right to denounce him, and we will join in the denunciation.—New York Sun.

INDIANA ITEMS.

THE rabbit harvest is being gathered throughout the State. It is unusually bountiful.

THE Republicans of Winchester have purchased a brass cannon to hold in reserve for celebrating party victories.

THE public schools of Shoals, Martin county, have been suspended because of the prevalence of scarlet fever in that village.

ROWENA MATHENY, a girl 19 years of age, lately attempted suicide in Evansville, by eating fish-berries. Disappointment in love.

HENRY GLORE, a colored youth of Rising Sun, ruptured himself while practicing with a horn, and died from the effects of his injuries.

MRS. SADIE L. CARNES, of Terre Haute, fell over the back of a chair, sustaining injuries that resulted in her death a few hours afterward.

COLFAX, Clinton county, is ambitious to be the shire town of a proposed new county of Colfax, to be carved out of Clinton, Tippecanoe, Boone and Montgomery.

THE roof of the main building of Earlham College, at Richmond, was burned the other day. Loss by fire and water, about $2,000; covered by insurance.

THE Council of Administration of the G. A. R., for the Department of Indiana, have decided to hold the next annual encampment at Greencastle, on Jan. 29.

A MADISON man has forwarded to the Fish Commissioner at Washington a buffalo fish weighing sixty pounds, the largest fish of the kind ever caught in the Ohio river.

THE Indianapolis Cincinnati and Lafayette Railroad Company last week received 1,000 tons more of steel rails, which they are distributing on the Western division.

THE Supreme Court of Indiana has reversed a case because the indictment against a man, charged with the unlawful sale of liquor, didn't specify that a gill is less than a quart.

A LITTLE 11-year-old daughter of Mrs. Miller, living near Urbana, was accidentally shot by a little son of John Barnes, the ball entering at the nose, passing through the left cheek into the shoulder. It will probably prove fatal.

THE annual report of the State Normal School at Terre Haute is submitted. Last year there were 783 students, and since the organization of the school, 2,385. Eighty-two per cent. of the pupils last year were from the working classes.

THE luxury of eating raw pork has proved the death of several members in a family at Plymouth, and it is probable the entire family will die with the exception of the father, who ate none of the meat. Trichina was proved to be in the pork by post-mortem examination.

WHILE a little son and daughter of Charles Lacy, of Brookville, were playing with a revolver of thirty-two caliber, it was accidentally discharged while in the hands of the little girl, the ball striking her brother and passing through his body. Recovery is impossible.

FOR many years each Grand Jury of Decatur county has reported that the Greensburg jail was unsafe and unfit to keep prisoners, but the Commissioners take no steps toward repairing the old one or building a new one. The other night all the prisoners, nine in number, escaped, and only one of them voluntarily came back.

JUDGE WARD has rendered an important decision at Crawfordsville, in the case of McComas vs. Krug, Sheriff of that county. The defendant was charged with drunkenness, and his removal asked for under a recent act of the Legislature. The Judge decided that the statute was unconstitutional, and dismissed the case. The plaintiff filed notice that he would appeal the case to the Supreme Court.

MR. SAMUEL DAVENPORT, Postmaster at Bluffton, died last week, after a lingering illness of many months, aged 52 year. Mr. Davenport was a graduate of Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pa., and held the position of Collector in the Twenty-fourth Pennsylvania district during the war, and was editor of the Bluffton Chronicle for many years.

A SPLIT in the Baptist church at Crawfordsville, and a case at law growing out of it as to the title to the church building, has resulted in a decision in favor of the majority party. The court held that a Baptist church is congregational, and a majority of the members have absolute authority under their articles of faith and rules of decorum to do as they like about allowing or disallowing certain doctrines to be preached in the church building.

Her Dowry.

At the very moment when mademoiselle makes her first appearance in the world, her frugal papa begins to think of her dot. A sum of money, however small, is immediately put away in her name. Every year he saves from his income, and these savings are added to the original sum. Any unexpected windfalls brought to him by a good stroke of business or fortunate investments are wholly or in part consecrated to the same purpose. Thus the original amount, insignificant in the beginning, being always put at interest, increases itself to a pretty little dowry by the time the little girl has reached a marriageable age. Unlike many heads of families in America, who, from the very warmth of their affection for wife and children, spend their entire days, and often evenings, toiling at counting-house and office, the French husband and father lives in the midst of his children, occupying himself constantly with their wants, their wishes and the growth of their minds. His business hours are short; therefore, he has time for walks, excursions, drives, in all of which, when possible, he makes them his companions. Thus intimate relations between parents and children are from the beginning established and maintained, the feeling between father and daughter seeming to be peculiarly beautiful. He denies himself pleasures, even comforts, that he may provide for her future. She repays this devotion by implicit obedience and unquestioning love.

VANDERBILT is not only the pauper millionaire of the metropolis—that is, not the only man of colossal fortune who "swore off" his personal taxes. John Jacob Astor pays tax on only $30,000 worth of personal property; August Belmont doesn't pay any; James Gordon Bennett on $25,000; A. J. Drexel on $100,000; Joseph A. Harper, "sworn off;" Mrs. A. T. Stewart on $500,000; Clarkson N. Potter, "sworn off;" Samuel J. Tilden on $90,000; William M. Evarts on $25,000; Peter Cooper on $110,000; Cyrus W. Field, "sworn off," and Hugh J. Jewett on $20,000.

INDIANA has the largest school fund of any State. It comprises $11,600,000 in school property and $9,000,000 in the State Treasury, a total of $20,600,000 or $70 to every child in the publi schools.

Grant as a Walking Bill-Board.

[Washington Capital.]

Our slop-fed Cæsar of Galena, who is being carted over the country to create a boom, to the utter loss of all respect and dignity, if he ever had any, is being utilized in a way that would be ludicrous in any other land than our own, by being made an advertising medium. The processions in every city through which he has yet passed have been made up mainly of wagons, carts, buggies, coaches, Indians, Turks, darkies and what not, carrying advertisements of various establishments seeking business in this way. One could read, for example, on a huge wagon covered with flags:

WELCOME THE HERO!
Medicated paper at Stimson's!

Or—

GLORY TO GRANT!
Podogogue,
Sure Shot for Rats!

Or—

CHICAGO WELCOMES THE NEXT PRESIDENT!
Try Liniment and Tar. Cures Bowel-Complaint!!!

And so on down the entire line. At the head of this the corn-fed Cæsar rides with uncovered head, bowing to the right and left with the solemnity of an owl.

How much better it would be for this great man to give himself directly to the business boom, and subject his imperial person to that high purpose. What a superb advertising medium he would be to have his highness decorated with appropriate robes—they might be of imperial cut, and in this way combine Roman grandeur with business—and then cover them with neat and appropriate announcements. As this great man, upon whose stomach depends the future of the republic, complains of being out of employ, we would suggest this as an honest way in which to make a living. We know business firms that would pay handsomely for preferred spaces—say the breast or back; and he might demand the highest sort of a premium for that part of his imperial person where the legs and the body begin. As it is much the largest part, there would be room for great display.

Try it, Cæsar—there's millions in it. With the same view of getting through the shams to the practical business, we would suggest that democrats who carry banners on these occasions should have those banners appropriately lettered. Say—

WELCOME GRANT,
and
Welcome Delano!

Or—

HAIL TO THE THIEF!
Welcome Landaulet Williams!

Or—

GRANT FOREVER,
and
Secor Robinson all the time!

Or—

THE HERO OF APPOMATTOX,
and
Stealing Made Easy!

Or—

QUEEN VIC. SHOOK HIM BY THE HAND!
Welcome Belknap!

Or—

FIRST IN WAR, FIRST IN PEACE, FIRST IN THE POCKETS OF HIS COUNTRYMEN!
Welcome Ulys. I.—Emperor.

And so on without end. The effect would not only be striking and picturesque, but true, and that is something in these times.

Grant Speaks.

[New York Sun.]

Our persistent exposure of General Grant's ambitious purpose to convert this republican government into an empire has at last compelled the silent man to speak. By implication he would seem to deny any such purpose.

Who cares for his verbal denial. His actions contradict his words.

It was at Carpenters' hall, in Philadelphia, that Gen. Grant deigned to open his hitherto sealed lips. What he said, or undertook to say, in a most awkward and ungrammatical way, was that it was hoped and he thought we had the assurance now that our republic will last as long as time lasts.

"Our republic"—what republic?

If Gen. Grant means the republican government that our fathers founded, that Washington fought for and first administered, then we have to say that this very man Grant is doing all he can to destroy that same republican government.

In what do our republican institutions consist?

In our written constitution, and hardly less in the time-honored customs observed by Washington and his long line of patriotic and illustrious successors, until they have come to be regarded as constitutional traditions.

The most sacred of these is limiting the term of one president to eight years. Grant is doing his utmost to violate this tradition, and thus to overthrow our republican institutions as they have heretofore existed.

Many believe that Gen. Grant means to go further and establish an empire. We are among the number. We fully believe this. As to his enforced and long-deferred declarations in favor of the republic, we regard them as equally hollow and unmeaning as those which that most ambitious and vilest of emperors, Louis Napoleon, made after his election as president of the French republic. After having taken his solemn oath to support the republic, he declared: "I shall support it as a man of honor." "Citizen representatives," he continued, "we have a grand mission to fulfil, to found a republic in the interest of all."

We all know how the coup d'etat followed, when twenty thousand of the best citizens of France were murdered, or banished in a single night, and the liberties of the people were trampled in blood and dust.

Grant never shuddered at the flow of human blood, however large the stream. A patriot once, ambition instead of love of country now seems to be his animating spirit. He is the only American ever born since the revolution who shows no reverence for the name and example of Washington.

A Long Speech.

The longest speech on record is believed to have been made by M. DeCosmos in the legislature of British Columbia when a measure was pending, the passage of which would have taken from a great many settlers their lands. DeCosmos was in a hopeless minority. This job had been held back until the eve of the close of the session. Unless legislation was taken before noon the given day, the act of confiscation would fail. The day before the expiraton of the limitation, De Cosmos got the floor about 10 a. m., and began a speech against the bill. Its friends cared little for they supposed by 1 or 2 o'clock he would be through, and the bill could be put on its passage.

One o'clock came and De Cosmos was speaking still; he hadn't more than entered upon his subject. At 2 o'clock he was saying: "In the second place. At 3 o'clock he produced a fearful bundle of evidence, and insisted on reading it. The majority began to have a suspicion of the truth; he was going to speak until the next noon kill the bill. For a while they made merry over it, but as it came on to dusk they began to get alarmed. They tried interruptions, but soon abandoned them, because each interruption afforded him chance to digress and gain time. They tried to shout him down but that gave him a breathing space, and finally they settled down to watch the combat between strength of will and weakness of body. They gave him no mercy, no adjournment for dinner, no chance to more than wet his lips with water, no wandering from the subject, no sitting down. Twilight darkened, and gas lit; members slipped out to dinner relays and returned in squads; but DeCosmos went on with his speech. The speaker to whom he was addressing himself, was alternately dozing, snoring and trying to look wide awake.

Day dawned, and the majority slipped out to breakfast, and the speaker still held on. It cannot be said that it was a very logical, eloquent or sustained speech. There were digressions in it; repetitions also; but still the speaker kept on. At last noon came to a baffled majority, livid with rage and impotence, and to a single man who was triumphant, though his voice had sunk to a husky whisper, his eyes were almost shut; and were bleared and blood-shot; his legs tottered under him and his baked lips were cracked and smeared with blood. DeCosmos had spoken twenty-five hours, and had saved the settlers their lands.

Special Announcement

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishishers of the STATE SENTINEL which enable us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the COURIER and WEEKLY SENTINEL one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "THE LAW OF THE FARM," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.
2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.
3rd What the deed of a farm includes.
4th The farmer's rights in the road.
5th As to farm fences.
6th As to estray and trespassing animals.
7th The farmer's liabilities for his animals.
8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.
9th Of water rights and drainage.
10th Of trespassing on the farm.
11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The INDIANA WEEKLY STATE SENTINEL is an eight-page paper, (the same as the COURIER) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the COURIER subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

AGAINST THE THIRD TERM.

A Republican Journal Speaks out Plainly.

[From the Sunday Dispatch.]

Among the more intelligent republicans there is strong opposition to the idea of a third term, and even many friends of General Grant doubt the possibility of his election should he recieve the nomination. The Dayton Journal says: "If there are men who are determined that Gen. Grant shall be the republican nominee for president, we seriously advise them to make a careful investigation of the situation in Ohio. We can heartily support Grant, but we know enough to know that there are enough republicans who will not support him to jeopardize the state." Will the gentlemen who are so enthusiastic for Grant tell us that they are certain they could carry the state of New York for him should he be nominated? We are convinced that he could not carry it—that more than the thirty thousand republicans who voted against Mr. Cornell would vote against Grant. Were Grant to be the nominee, which of the doubtful states—such as Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, California and Indiana—would he be sure to carry? To us it appears very doubtful if he could carry the electoral votes of any one of them.

Of course, we are not now talking to the gentlemen who blather politics in bar-rooms, but to the thinking men who shape the action of conventions. From what we have heard we are convinced that the nomination of Grant would be followed by disastrous defeat. The quiet republicans who do not attend primaries, but who vote at every election, are very unanimous in their opposition to making Grant the nominee, and the German republicans are utterly opposed to him. There is still a widespread regard among Americans for the tradition handed down to us from our earliest president, that it is dangerous to our liberties to give any man a third term of the presidency. Though ourselves having no fear whatever that Gen. Grant, were he elected president, would attempt to overthrow the republic, or that he would prove a Cæsar, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there are many conscientious, patriotic citizens who do so think. Would it, then, be the part of wisdom for the republicans to array this fear and those possessed of it against our party? We think it would be the very top of madness. A defeat with Grant as candidate would prove the destruction of the republican party. A defeat with any other man as our standard bearer would be but a temporary repulse.

There is another very strong reason why Gen. Grant should not be the nominee: The republican party would be put on the defensive at the beginning of the campaign. It would have to meet the charge that he had in his cabinet men who were corrupt; that he was intimate with men who were afterward convicted of defrauding the revenue; that he pardoned with lavish hand such convicts, and that his private secretary was proven to the satisfaction of the country to have been in league with them. These things cannot be disproved; and though we never entertained for a moment the thought that Gen. Grant knew of the wrongs committed by his friends, we cannot believe that the man who surrounds himself with corrupt men is the fittest man the country could choose to fill its highest office. Looking at the question of nominating Grant from all sides, we cannot but regard it as the most dangerous move which the party could make. Of all the men mentioned as candidates he would be the weakest.

M'KEE AND BABCOCK.

An Unhappy Old Man.

[Springfield Republican.]

The death of Wm. McKee, of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat and whisky-ring notoriety, revives the recollection of one of the most disgraceful episodes of Grant's administration. He died of heart disease, the doctors say; in fact it was the disgrace of his conviction and imprisonment that killed him. McKee had fought his way up in the world, and a few years ago was one of the most prominent citizens of St. Louis. He felt the natural pride of a self-made man in his success, enjoyed the front position in public enterprises and on public occasions which was awarded him, and especially valued his reputation as a "square" man. From the day he was convicted of stealing he was a broken-down man, and he has been steadily going to pieces ever since. After his pardon from the penitentiary he sedulously avoided public notice, was seldom seen outside his home, his office and the close carriage in which he rode from one to the other, and sought forgetfulness of his disgrace in drink. It is, indeed, a pitiable ending of what had been a characteristically successful western career, and will doubtless be quoted as a fresh illustration of the truth that "the way of the transgressor is hard." One needs, however, to remember the adage that the exception proves the rule when he reads that the same week this poor old man died in disgrace in St. Louis his no less guilty associate, who had only the better fortune to escape conviction, was welcomed back to Grant's confidence in Philadelphia. It is hard to say which is the more eloquent commentary on the Grant movement—the fact that it was started by a newspaper whose editor had been convicted of defrauding the government under Grant, or the fact that Grant comes back from his tour around the world to greet Babcock so heartily that this worthy is already counting upon getting back his old place upon the restoration.

MODERN MOURNING.

A Conversation Between the Envelope and a Sheet of Paper.

(Philadelphia Press.)

"Dear me," said the Paper, "I feel awfully queer, so stiff around the edges. What is this black band for?"

"Hush!" said the Envelope; "don't you know? Her husband is dead."

"Well?" said the Paper.

"Well," said the Envelope, "how stupid you are. The black is mourning for him, that's all."

"Good gracious!" said the Paper, "does she do it like this? Do you suppose it comforts her to see a black edge on her stationery? How very funny!"

"It's the proper thing to do, at any rate," said the Envelope, sharply. "You haven't seen the world, evidently."

"But it is not my idea of grief," said the Paper. "If I were sad I would go away from everybody and keep quiet."

"You are very simple-minded," said the Envelope. "Who would see you if you mourned like that? I knew a widow once who was very angry because she found a card with a wider black edge than her own. She said she had told Tiffany to send her the widest that was made, and here was one wider. She almost cried, and measured the edges to make sure. That was grief, now."

"Was it, indeed," said the Paper. "Well, times have changed, I suppose. Once when a woman lost her husband her eyes were so full of tears that she could not see how to measure black edges. This is the age of reason, I am told. All feeling is treated as weakness and smoothed away by ignatia."

"Oh! people feel, I suppose," said the Envelope, a little ashamed, "but, really, there are so many things expected of one now when one's friend passes away that there isn't much time for grief. Just look at our poor lady today. At 9 the undertaker came, upon a matter most painful. It was—well, the mountings on the casket. She was going to have hysterics, but couldn't because he was waiting for her decision. Then the florist came to know about the decorations for the house. Then Mme. Lameau, with boxes upon boxes of dresses, wraps, bonnets, etc., and although our lady did sigh when she saw the deep black—tears spoil crepe, you know, and madam quickly diverted her mind by showing Lizette how to drape the long veil becomingly. Then came the jeweler, with the latest design in jet, and her diamonds have to be re-set now, you know, in black claws. After this the mourning stationery was sent with the crest in black, and all sorts of cards and letters had to be written. Then the servants' new mourning liveries and carriage hangings were selected. When dinner was served our lady was so exhausted by all this that she felt faint and ate a really good dinner to sustain life. Now I should like to know what time she has had for grief, poor thing!"

"Don't say no time for grief!" said the Paper, rustling with indignation; "say no soul for it, and you will be nearer the truth. When a woman can choose bonnets and jewelry, her husband lying dead in the house, there is not much sadness in her heart. I see that she needs the black-edged paper to express herself. She might as well give up all this miserable farce and enjoy herself at once. Let her give a ball in place of a funeral, and show her diamonds in their new claws."

"Oh! near me, do hush!" said the Envelope. "A ball in crepe and jet jewelry; you are not very decent; you don't seem to understand things at all."

"I don't, that's true," said the Paper, "and I hope I never will. When women have got to mourning by sending out black edges and wearing the latest things in jet, I give them up. I never shall understand."

"Emotional people always make difficulties for themselves," said the Envelope, coolly. "I accept things as they are, adapt myself—Hush! she is coming, and crying, too, I declare, after all."

"Well, really, Lizette," said a voice broken with sobs, "you are very thoughtless. How should I remember in my distracted state, to say twelve-buttoned gloves? and here there are only six-buttoned; it is too bad. But every one takes advantage of me now. I am alone—forlorn—desolate," and the sobs redoubled.

"Poor thing," said the Envelope.

"What hopeless grief," said the Paper, "I pity her."

THE DEAD ALIVE.

Sequel to a Kentucky Lynching.

(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

LAGRANGE, KY., January 7.—The writer of this lived in Lockport, Ky., during the years from 1865 to 1874, and it was during that time that this country was infested by the Ku-Klux. One morning in April, 1872, John James, a farmer living a few miles from town, came to my store and informed me that his son Bealy, a lad of seventeen years of age had run off from home, and at his dictation I wrote not less than fifty letters to relatives and acquaintances, making inquiry for him.

In July, 1877, Richard Shuck murdered his father-in-law, near Gratz, Ky. He was indicted in the Owen circuit court, tried and convicted, and sentenced to be executed at Owenton in July, 1878. Before Shuck's execution he made a confession in which he said that he had belonged to an organized band of thieves, and gave the names of a portion of them, and also the names of persons they had robbed and murdered, Sam. Goodrich, Joe Goodrich, James Simons and John James had murdered the son of the latter because he knew too much. This boy is the same boy whom James had me to write the letters making inquiry about. Upon the statement of Shuck the above-named parties were arrested, confined in the New Castle (Henry county) jail, and in due course had an examining trial. In that trial a fellow by the name of David Carter turned state's evidence, he being accused of being an accessory to the crime. Carter told of the killing of Bealy James; that he had heard of it at the time; had visited the sink-hole in which the body was hastily buried, and that the band to which he belonged had done the work. James the father of Bealy James, fled the country and was never arrested, and is now, I learn, in Mexico. On a memorable night in 1878 Bob Goodrich, Sam. Goodrich, Joe Goodrich and Jas. Simmons were taken from the jail in New Castle and hung by a mob, and an excited populace pronounced the judgment of Judge Lynch as just. The affair had dropped out of the minds of those living near, although there were some people who could not excuse the action of the mob.

This morning I was standing on the platform of the depot at this place, when an acquaintance stepped from the from the train and informed me that Bealy James, the boy for whose supposed murder the Goodriches and Jim Simmons were hung by the mob, was on the train. About this time Bealy stepped out of the door, and I immediately recognized him. Bealy was an overgrown, ignorant boy, and time had not improved him to any extent. He stated to me that he had left home on account of ill-treatment by his stepmother, who, by the way, is a daughter of the James Simmons who was hung by the mob, and had made his way to Indiana, sought and found employment as a farm hand.

He had been in the state of Illinois, and had gone from there to Arkansas. He said he had not heard until last night in Louisville of the trouble in Henry county, the hanging of the unfortunate men, or that his father was a refugee and a wanderer to escape an indictment against him in the courts for his murder.

Thus it will be seen that Shuck died with a lie in his mouth; that David Carter swore to a lie against these unfortunate men, and that the action of Judge Lynch is unjust, unwarranted and should be a lesson to mob spirits.

Indiana's Favorite Son.

[New York Star.]

No citizen of that state ever surpassed Mr. Hendricks in personal popularity. None has been more highly regarded for his public or private virtues. If the possession of such qualities of heart and mind as he is acknowledged to have were to be the controlling consideration in the choice of a candidate, there is not one in the ranks of democratic statesmen to-day who would stand a better chance to achieve the honors of a nomination. We welcome Indiana's favorite son to the field. The time has arrived to consider the relative strength and fitness of candidates, and it is proper that one who has been so long identified with democratic success should early engage the thoughts of those who sincerely believe that the future welfare of the country is dependent on the triumph of Jeffersonian principles.

JESSE JAMES, OUTLAW

An Instance Where the Desperado Was Merciful—An Affecting Scene.

[Kansas City Times.]

Detective Pinkerton has given the James boys the name of being bloodthirsty wretches, who could never be moved from their purpose of killing when once they made up their minds. A gentleman from Clay county, however, related one instance to a Kansas City reporter the other night which serves to show that there was at one time at least a tender spot in the heart of Jesse. The story, as told by the gentleman, is that a few years ago a man together with his family, lived on a part of Mrs. Samuels' farm. He rented so many acres from the old lady, and the renter and Mrs. Samuels fattened a beef in copartnership.

When the beef was killed they fell out over a division of the spoils. Each claimed the hide and tallow. The dispute waxed warm, until the man, in a heat of passion said to Mrs. Samuels, "You are an old liar." The old lady, looking straight at him said, "I shall tell Jesse about this," and, turning on her heel went into the house. The next day, as Mrs. Samuel's tenant was standing in the road in front of his house, conversing with a Mr. Chancellor, of Clay county, a noise was heard in the corn-field adjoining, and in a few minutes a horse and a rider jumped the rail fence, and Jesse James stood in the presence of the man who had insulted his mother. At sight of Jesse the man turned as pale as death, and looked as if he were about to sink into the earth.

Riding close to him Jesse said: "Didn't you know that I would kill you for the language you used toward my mother? If you have any thing to say do it quickly, for you have only a short time to live."

Just at this time the wife of the apparently doomed man came screaming out of the house, beging Jesse not to kill her husband. With a stern command of "Get back into the house, Madam, quick," the woman went in weeping bitterly, and with strained nerves she awaited the dead crack of Jesse's revolver which would make her a widow. Turning to the trembling man before him, Jesse said: "Get down on your knees and ask forgiveness for your sins before I kill you."

Dropping down on his knees in the middle of the public road, the man offered up such a prayer to God as was never heard in the old county of Clay. The gentleman, an unwilling spectator of the affair, said he never heard such a touching and beautiful prayer in his life. With the tears streaming down his face, the man besecched the Almighty to recieve his soul and take care of his children and wife, soon to be without a father and husband. Mr. Chancellor, during the prayer, glanced several times at Jesse, who, with drawn pistol, sat sternly on his horse looking at the supplicant before him.

Before the prayer was concluded the stern lines upon Jesse's face seemed to relax from their wanted serenity, and hope dawned upon the mind of the gentleman that Jesse would relent from his purpose. At the conclusion of the prayer the man closed his eyes and awaited the expected shot that would send him into eternity. But he was not destined to die. The words of suppliance had touched the better chords of Jesse's heart, and the demon within him was subdued. Addressing the still-kneeling man, he said: "I ought to kill you, but for the sake of your wife and children I will spare your life. I will give you six hours to get out of this country. Go quick, before I change my mind."

The reprieved man arose to his feet and poured out such a volume of thankful gratitude that the heart of the gentleman present was melted into tears, and he wept like a child. Jesse, apparently stern and unmoved, listened until he was through, and then, motioning him away, gathered up the lines of his bridle and disappeared in the field. The man hastened into his house, and the joyful meeting with his wife upon the threshold of the door was an occasion never to be forgotten.

In less than the time given by Jesse to leave, the man, his family and their effects were loaded into wagons and going in the direction of more friendly shores.

The CHEAPEST and BEST in the World.

Too Long in Use to Doubt its Superior MERITS

No Money to Pay until Machine is Delivered to you and Examined.

It makes the shuttle, double-thread, lock-stitch, (the same on both sides of the work), which received the highest reward at the Centennial exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., 1876. And is complete with a larger assortment of attachments for fine work than any other machine, and reduced to only $25.

It is an easy and pleasant machine to operate, requires the least care, produces every variety of work, and will last until the next century begins. Strong, simple, rapid and efficient.

Use it once and you will use no other. The money cheerfully refunded if it will not outwork and outlast any machine at double the price.

Agents sell them faster than any other in consequence of their being the "best at the lowest price."

Each machine thoroughly warranted with written guarantee for five years. Kept in order free of charge; money refunded at once if not satisfactory.

It is the most solid, reliable, and satisfactory machine ever invented for all kinds of family work. It is an acknowledged unequivocal mechanical success, thoroughly tested and used in thousands of homes. An efficient, silent, rapid, reliable and ever-ready helper to the weary wife or seamstress, it will do the work of a family for a lifetime, or it will earn from $4 to $8 per day for any one who wishes to sew for a living. This machine costs less than half the price of any new machine of like quality. Has extra long, large-sized shuttle, easily removed. Extra large-sized bobbins, holding 100 yards of thread, doing away with the frequent rewinding of bobbins. It is built for strength and constant hard work. Interchangeable working parts, manufactured of fine polished steel. Will run for years without repairs; is simple to learn, easy to manage, understood perfectly in an hour, and always ready in a moment to do every description of heavy or fine work, at less cost or trouble than any other machine at any price ever did or can do. It will sew anything a needle can pierce, from lace or cambric to heavy cloth or harness, with any kind of thread, and will run off twenty yards per minute; it uses strong, straight needles and never breaks them. It cannot miss or drop a stitch, ravel or break the thread. If you have any other machine, buy this and have a better one. The ease and rapidity of its motion and quality of its work are its best recommendations. It will hem, fell, tuck, braid, cord, bind, gather, quilt, ruffle, pleat, fold, scallop, shirr, roll, baste, embroider, run up braids, etc. with elegance, ease and quickness, unsurpassed by any machine ever invented.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

The price for our new machines are less than those asked by dealers in second-hand, rebuilt and refinished machines, or those selling out old stock to close up business, many such inferior and old style machines being offered as new at reduced prices; beware of imposition and only buy new machines. There are no new first-class machines offered as low as the "FAMILY," by many dollars.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

THE annual statistics of the trade of Baltimore show an increase in the value of exports over 1878 of $28,480,000. The imports, on the other hand, decreased $7,580,000. The receipts of wheat increased 12,500,000 bushels, and of corn 5,000,000 bushels. The transactions of the Clearing House show an increase of $94,000,000.

DURING 1879 there were in New York 460 failures, with liabilities amounting to $16,-383,932.... Parnell and Dillon, the Irish land-reform agitators, have arrived at New York.

CHARLES STEWART PARNELL, the well-known Irish agitator, arrived at New York on the 2d inst. An enthusiastic reception was tendered him.... A lively disturbance was created on the New York Produce Exchange, on the 2d inst., when statistics of articles dealt in were posted in centals. The provision men tore down the tables of receipts, and the grain men refused to do business. The Board of Managers decided, some weeks ago, to adopt the cental system on the 1st of January, but the scheme received bitter opposition from the first among members.

THE death of Bishop Gilbert Haven, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is announced. He died at the residence of his mother, in Malden, Mass., after an illness of several weeks. He was conscious to the last, and died surrounded by his family (a son and daughter) and clergymen prominent in the church. Bishop Haven was 59 years old. ....Parnell, the Irish agitator, addressed an assemblage of 8,000 people in Madison Square Garden, New York. He appealed for contributions of money to be applied for two purposes, the contributor to elect as between the two—viz.: the alleviation of present distress growing out of the famine in Ireland, and the promotion of the political movement having for its object the obtaining of permanent relief at the hands of the British Government.

ONE of the New York branch post-offices was entered by burglars, who stole $1,500 in money and several registered letters. The deed is described as one of the boldest which has taken place in that city of late.... Stephen Longfellow, nephew of the poet, has been held for trial at Boston for forging the name of the latter to a check for $1,000.... The pews of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, have been sold for 1880 for $40,000.... The New York Produce Exchange has voted on the cental system again, and voted it down by a large majority.

THE WEST.

EMERY, editor of a Sunday paper at Leavenworth, Kan., who some years ago shot and seriously wounded D. R. Anthony, was killed a few days ago, in a saloon, by his partner in business.... At Alliance, Ohio, on New Year's day, a party of eight boys skating fell through the ice. Three were drowned—Harry Coates, Charles Dorman and Charles Rankin.

THE value of the mineral product of California, Nevada, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, and Dakota during 1878 is placed at $72,688,868.

DURING the first business day of the new year, the Chicago bank clearings footed up a grand total of $12,300,000, being the largest day's clearings on record in that city. ....G. M. Berry, bookkeeper for the Sheriff of San Francisco, is a defaulter to the amount of $20,000. He was a dabbler in stocks.

DISPATCHES from the West state that Gen. Hatch, of the Ute commission, left Lake City for Fort Garland on the 2d inst., having experienced no trouble since parting with the Indians at Cline's ranche except from the snow. He believes that Ouray was sincere in all his negotiations and that the murderers would have been surrendered on demand if they had not been convinced that the people of Colorado intended to lynch them before trial. The Utes have all left Los Pinos and no further developments are expected until the chiefs now visiting Washington have returned...... A Washington telegram of the 4th inst. says: "Ex-Gov. Hunt, of Colorado, last night received a dispatch confirmatory of the story already darkly hinted at—namely, that the females captured by the Utes were outraged by their Indian captors. The Pueblo (Col.) Chieftain of New Year's day contained a card, signed by Mrs. Meeker, in which the crime is charged upon the Utes."

THE mortality among the negro emigrants from North Carolina who lately arrived in Indianapolis is very great. Sixteen or eighteen of the 100 in that city died last week of diphtheria and scarlet fever.

THE Cairo and Vincennes railroad was sold at public sale by the Master in Chancery of the United States Court at Springfield, Ill., last week, to satisfy a judgment rendered in favor of the bondholders. The road was purchased by Joseph Drexel and Charles E. Tracey, trustees of the English bondholders, for the sum of $2,000,000.

A SHOCKING fire casualty is reported from San Francisco. The residence of Daniel Hoskins was burned, and Mrs. Hoskins and her daughter, aged 19, a son, aged 4, and infant babe perished in the flames.... Chicago elevators contain 7,994,287 bushels of wheat, 4,060,-740 bushels of corn, 1,134,902 bushels of oats, 259,221 bushels of rye, and 775 125 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 14,223,225 bushels, against 9,884,239 bushels at this period last year.

A TERRIBLE railroad collision took place a few days ago, near Galesburg, Ill., on the Burlington branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad. Three stock trains were following each other closely, when the last train ran into the one preceding it, causing a fearful crash. Two stock men were killed and several injured.

THE SOUTH.

THE contract for the construction of the Texas Pacific railroad from Fort Worth to El Paso, a distance of 750 miles, has been signed.... United States Senator Houston, of Alabama, died lately at his home in Athens.

A PLEASANT feature of Gen. Grant's tour through the South was his cordial reception by the people of the little city of Fernandina, Fla. He was escorted by a committee headed by Gen. W. G. M. Davis, an officer in the Confederate service, to the City Hall, which had been nicely decorated with bunting and semi-tropical plants. A large crowd of citizens, principally colored, had assembled. Gen. Davis delivered a speech of welcome, expressing the hope that this visit would result in further uniting the people of all sections, and stating that all the South held the General in good esteem as their friend. In reply Gen. Grant said:

> GEN. DAVIS AND CITIZENS OF FLORIDA: It affords me great pleasure to visit this State, which I do now for the first time. I am greatly pleased with the little I have seen of it thus far, and with the cordiality of its citizens, who have welcomed me most warmly. I am very glad to see you all. In the tour of the world which I have made I saw only that which strengthened me in my love of country, and every section of it from Florida to Maine. The freedom and liberty which you enjoy here cannot be realized by the people of the Old World.

Referring to the report which he made in 1866, he said that he believed then that the South acted in good faith, but he said then and sees now they were misled and driven into a course which produced results now so greatly regretted by all. It was not, however, their fault. Concluding, he said:

> We are now a united people, and no one more desires that we may continue so, or will do more to accomplish that result, than myself.

Three cheers were then given by the crowd for Gen. Grant, and three for Gen. Sheridan.

GEN. GRANT was cordially received and royally entertained by the people of Jacksonville, Fla. The festivities that followed embraced a reception, a banquet, a grand ball and drives through the orange groves that environ the city. From Jacksonville Gen. Grant journeyed to Palatka, where he tarried two days, and, on Saturday, Jan. 10th, sailed for Cuba.

A TERRIBLE feud occurred last week in Hart county, Ky., between a father and son named Green. The old man shot at the son, but missed, and the son rushed on his father, and a terrible fight ensued. Both were nearly killed, and the son had one of his ears cut entirely off.

GENERAL.

THE New York Public compares December, 1879, with December, 1878, and also compares the two years. The comparison shows that the volume of business has increased at every city except San Francisco and Providence, and at the latter the gains for the last two months have nearly overcome the losses of all the other months of the year.

TWO YOUNG Americans, George Green, of Texas, and Frank Contre, of Boston, were in a mail coach near Guanajuato, Mexico, when it was attacked by a band of thirty robbers with Winchester rifles. These young men fought the whole band, killed five, and wounded several, compelling the others to retreat. Green was slightly wounded.... The work of taking the census will begin shortly. Gen. Walker, the Superintendent, has his list of Supervisors almost complete—one for each of the 156 census districts into which the country has been divided.

ELEVEN survivors of the foundered steamer Borussia reached Baltimore, the other day, on the Italian bark that picked them up 250 miles off the Azores. The steamer foundered Dec. 23, and the rescued men rode out some very heavy weather in a life-boat, and were constantly menaced by sharks.

A DAY'S casualties: An explosion in a celluloid factory at Newark, N. J., killed four men and fatally injured two others; the mail-boat between Freeport and Pensacola, Fla., exploded a boiler, killing the Captain and one other and mortally scalding the engineer; the Turner Hall, in East Fourth street, New York, was destroyed by fire, and four people suffocated, several others who jumped from the windows sustaining serious injuries; at La Crosse, Wis., August Talbot, a quarryman, brought a five-pound can of powder down-stairs and placed it on a table near a lamp for use early in the morning, whereupon an explosion took place, terribly burning eight persons who were sitting around the table.

THE adoption of the cental system has been received with so much hostility by the New York Produce Exchange that the Board of Managers has resolved to recommend a postponement of the experiment until the necessary national and State legislation can be obtained, and the principal commercial exchanges agree upon a time for its simultaneous adoption.

ADMIRAL AMMEN, who had several talks with Gen. Grant before the latter's departure for the South, says that he entertains no doubt that the General will, at the proper time, accept the Presidency of the Inter-Oceanic Canal Company. He will not, however, accept until the success of the enterprise is assured.

THE Atlantic and Great Western railroad has been sold under foreclosure proceedings for $6,000,000 to a purchasing committee representing the English bondholders.

WASHINGTON telegram: "Much interest has been excited here among army men over the fact that Gen. Grant has at last made known, through the authorized statements of John Russell Young, that he was the originator of the 'March to the Sea,' and that he communicated his plan to Gen. Halleck. This matter has long been in dispute, although those who have had access to the records of the War Department have known that the plan was Gen. Grant's and not Gen. Sherman's; but this is the first time that Gen. Grant has himself in public declared the fact, though he privately communicated it to several when the controversy first arose. In the same way Gen. Grant has declared that the campaign up the Cumberland and the Tennessee rivers did not originate with Gen. Halleck."

THE sub-committee of the House Military Committee, of which Gen. Joe Johnston is Chairman, has matured a bill for the reorganization of the army. It provides for a reduction of the staff officers, and for an increase of the enlisted men to 25,000.

CHIEF JUSTICE WAITE, in the Supreme Court of the United States, last week, denied the motion of Senator Edmunds to take up the legal-tender cases out of its regular order. He added that the court would refuse to grant motions to advance cases involving important constitutional questions so long as they could not be heard before a full bench.

THE Ute Indians who received permission to visit Washington passed through Pueblo, Col., on the 7th inst., in charge of a Lieutenant. A large crowd met the savages at the depot and indulged in numerous threats of hanging and shooting, but nothing of the kind was attempted. ....The Cincinnati Price-Current's regular January report of pork-packing in the West, showing reports from all points and estimates for the remainder of the season, is out. The information furnished indicates an increase of 200,000 hogs in interior points, and a decrease of 700,000 at the six large packing cities, making a total of about 6,980,000 to March 1, against 7,480,000 last year. The average weight to date is about nine and a half pounds lighter than a year ago, and the yield of lard four to five pounds less per hog.

POLITICAL.

GOV. CORNELL, of New York, was inaugurated in the new Capitol at Albany, on New Year's day.... Chief Justice Appleton, of Maine, summoned all the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court to assemble in Bangor to consider the questions propounded by Gov. Garcelon, and the court met on the 2d inst.

THE Indiana Republican State Convention will be held at Indianapolis on the 17th of June.

FOLLOWING is the call for the National Republican Convention:

> A National Convention of the Republican party will meet at Chicago, Wednesday, the 2d day of June next, for the nomination of candidates to be supported for President and Vice President at the next election.
>
> Republicans, and all who will co-operate with them in supporting the nominee of the party, are invited to choose two delegates from each Congressional district, four at large from each State, two from each Territory, and two from the District of Columbia, to represent them in the convention.

A WASHINGTON telegram says: "Prominent Democratic politicians who have recently returned from New York say that the belief is growing there that Horatio Seymour would not only accept the Democratic Presidential nomination, but that he really is a candidate for it. The interview which was recently telegraphed all over the country is regarded as an indication that Horatio Seymour would accept the Democratic nomination if tendered him with unanimity. The attitude of Senator Kernan, Seymour's intimate friend, is referred to as strengthening this belief."....Col. Tom Keogh, Secretary of the Republican Campaign Committee, expresses the opinion that Senator Blaine will receive the nomination if Gen. Grant does not.

A CLEVELAND paper has interviewed 100 of the most prominent Republicans of that city as to the choice for President. Of these seventy-two are emphatic in their choice. Thirty-four of these latter are for Grant, nineteen for Sherman, and nineteen for Blaine. The rest are mostly indifferent as to which of the three is nominated; while several are for Garfield, one for Bristow, and one for Conkling. Several were outspoken against Grant under any circumstances.

NEGOTIATIONS between the Tilden and Kelly factions in New York have resulted in a compromise. By the terms of the agreement between the rival chieftains, the delegation from the Empire State to the next National Democratic Convention will not be committed to any candidate, but pledged, on the contrary, to vote as a unit in favor of the man seeming to have the most strength with the representatives of the other States.... The Governor of Alabama has appointed Luke Pryor to fill the unexpired term of Senator Houston, deceased. The appointee was Mr. Houston's law partner, and has never held office.... Gen. Garfield was nominated for United States Senator by acclamation by the Republican members of the Ohio Legislature, at a caucus held on the 6th inst., all the other aspirants having withdrawn from the field.

FOREIGN.

GEN. SIR EVELLYN WOOD, who figured in the Zulu war, will accompany ex-Empress Eugenie to South Africa on her mournful visit to the spot where her son was killed.

UNUSUAL precautions are now taken by the Russian Czar to protect himself from bodily harm. His Winter Palace in St. Petersburg is protected by a continuous chain of policemen. Upon the rare occasions when the Emperor drives out, he is surrounded by a numerous escort, and the route is cleared of carriages and horsemen.... A dispatch from Cabul says the military commission has reassembled to try prisoners, ten of whom have been sentenced to be hanged on the 30th inst. One was proved to have killed Jenkyns, Secretary of Maj. Cavagnari's Embassy.

REPORTS from every county in England show that last year's crops were the poorest gathered in that country in ten years. Out of the 429 returns as to wheat only four represent the yield as up to the average..... Fresh disturbances are reported in Ireland. In Galway county the peasants and police came into collision, and in Mayo county an agent who undertook the eviction of a tenant was set upon and severely beaten.

THE President of Bolivia has been deposed, and is a fugitive.... Cabul dispatches report the city perfectly quiet. Supplies are plentiful. Amnesty has been offered the insurgents. A few leaders only accepted.... Advices from Mexico state that a formidable revolution has broken out in the State of Durango. Gen. Trevino, who was ordered from Monterey to suppress the revolt, has been defeated, and urgently asks assistance. It is believed that the revolution will be a general one, as it is ably led and has hosts of warm sympathizers in all parts of the republic, who are expected to pronounce at an early day.

THE agitation against high rents in Ireland, which has hitherto been confined to farming communities, has been introduced in the cities, where it will doubtless become very popular.... The detailed reports of the Russian military preparations which come from various points on the Austrian and German frontiers are beginning to excite attention throughout Europe.... Two thousand British troops, under the command of Gen. Gough, will be kept in the citadel at Cabul for the present.... A. L. Gordon, an American citizen, who has been held as a prisoner at Iquique, Peru, since last June, on suspicion of being a Chilian spy, has been surrendered by the commandant of that city to the Captain of the steamer Alaska, of the United States navy.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

Congress reassembled after the holiday recess on the 5th inst., and both houses held short sessions. Secretary Schurz sent to the Senate the report of the Hot Springs Commission. Bills introduced: By Mr. Davis (Ill.), to establish a Court of Appeals; by Mr. Cockrell, to provide that no person on the retired list of the army, navy or marine corps shall draw a pension; also, to admit, free of duty, all articles intended for exhibition at the Millers' International Exhibition at Cincinnati in June; by Mr. Pendleton, to transfer certain claims from the Executive Departments to the Court of Claims for adjudication; by Mr. Vest, fixing the compensation of United States District Attorneys; limiting the compensation of Clerks of District and Circuit Courts where one person holds both offices, and fixing the compensation of United States Marshals and Deputies; by Mr. Coke, to provide for completing the work of improving the Missouri river at or near Kansas City. A number of private bills and petitions were also introduced and referred. On motion of Mr. Morgan, as a mark of respect to the memory of the late Senator Houston, the Senate adjourned.... A resolution was adopted in the House ordering an investigation of the Ute massacre at White River Agency. Two bills in regard to the Panama canal were referred to the select committee. The House went into committee of the whole on the report of the Committee on Rules, but no progress was made, owing to the absence of two members of the committee. Mr. Hawk introduced a bill directing the issuing of patents for land on which bounty land-warrants have been located. Mr. Forney announced the death of Senator Houston, and the House, as a mark of respect, adjourned.

In an executive session of the Senate, on the 7th inst., the following nominations were made: Marcus W. Acheson, District Judge of the Western district of Pennsylvania; James R. Karns, United States Marshal for the Eastern district of Pennsylvania; John K. Valentine, United States Attorney for the Eastern district of Pennsylvania; Jacob Wheeler, United States Marshal for the Southern district of Illinois; George W. Hazelton, United States Attorney for the Eastern district of Wisconsin; John M. Auston, Collector of Internal Revenue for the first district of California; Daniel B. Ainger, Postmaster at Washington; John B. Stickney, United States Attorney for the Northern district of Florida; Charles S. Varian, United States Attorney for the District of Nevada; Henry E. Prickett, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Idaho; E. J. Conger, Justice of the Supreme Court of Montana; E. P. Pomeroy, United States Attorney for Arizona; John J. Henry, Register of the Land Office at Leadville; Edward C. David, United States Surveyor General of the District of Wyoming; Henry M. Atkinson, Surveyor General of the District of New Mexico; Alexander G. Clarke, Register of the Land Office at Des Moines, Iowa; Isaac W. Wing, Receiver of Public Moneys, Bayfield, Wis.; Hiram W. Parker, Register of the Land Office, Beatrice, Neb.; James B. Bloss, Register of the Land Office at Detroit; Stephen H. Alban, Register of the Land Office at Wausau, Wis.; George D. Bowman, Register of the Land Office at La Mesilla, N. M. Mr. Pendleton submitted an amendment to the Bayard legal-tender resolution, as follows: "And said notes shall not be available for any of the reserves required to be kept by the national banks, and all such reserves shall be kept in coin." Referred. The Senate discussed the bill which provides for the investment of Indian trust funds in United States bonds; but took no action upon it. A bill for the reclamation of the marshes about Washington was referred. Mr. Logan introduced a bill to establish a United States Court in the Indian Territory. A short discussion in regard to a proposed new Department of Agriculture and Commerce was participated in by several Senators, and a few private bills were noticed.... In the House, a bill passed providing that an owner of a mine who wished to sell could make affidavit for the application for a United States patent by his agent. Bills and resolutions introduced: By Mr. Chalmers, to regulate coin certificates; by Mr. Townshend (Ill.), instructing the Committee on Foreign Affairs to inquire into the expediency of abolishing all Envoys Extraordinary and Ministers Resident from the United States to foreign countries; by Mr. Mills, to request the President to invite Mexico to enter into a treaty, also Brazil; by Mr. Page, to restrict the immigration of the Chinese; by Mr. Elam, to furnish additional facilities for the collection of custom dues; by Mr. Covert, for the reduction of duties on imported merchandise; by Mr. Coffroth, calling on the Postmaster General for his reasons for not complying with the law requiring him to furnish a double postal card; by Mr. Beltzhoover, to punish the sale of firearms to uncivilized Indians; by Mr. Acklen, for the regulation of inter-State freights and passengers; by Mr. Barber, to prevent the use of the United States flag for advertising purposes; by Mr. Mills, to prohibit all Indians on reservations going into Texas; by Mr. Culbertson, authorizing the recoinage of the trade dollar; by Mr. Ryan, to ascertain the losses sustained from Indian depredations; by Mr. Belford, to pay to Mrs. N. C. Meeker and others certain sums of money out of the Ute Indian annuity funds; by Mr. Brents, extending the Land laws to the Territory of Alaska; by Mr. Bennett, to establish the Territory of Pembina.

CROP REPORTS.

WINTER WHEAT.

The December crop report of the Department of Agriculture states that the preliminary investigation points to an increase of 12 per cent. in area sown in winter-wheat. The only States reporting a decline are Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas, in which the united wheat area would not exceed that of some counties of the Northwest. All the other States show an increase, especially in spring wheat. In the States of the Northwest the winter wheat acreage, however, is small, and hence their increase, even of a very high ratio, does not add materially to the breadth sown in the country; but many large winter-wheat States report a great enlargement: New York, West Virginia, Ohio, and Michigan, each 7 per cent.; Texas and Tennessee, 10; Kentucky and Indiana, 14; Missouri, 16; Kansas and Oregon, 20, and Illinois, 22. There are quite general complaints of the ravages of the Hessian fly in the early-sown crops, and of drought hindering the germination in that later sown. Yet the crop starts out, on the whole, under prospects considerably above the average, especially in the large winter-wheat States.

TOBACCO.

Final reports have not sensibly changed the November estimate of this crop. The total product of the country is within a small percentage of that of 1878, the gain being chiefly in Kentucky, Tennessee and Connecticut; and the most serious loss is in Ohio and Missouri. As a whole, the quality is but slightly better than that of last year's crop, although the improvement is quite marked in several States. The total crop of 1879 is estimated at 384,059,659 pounds, valued at $21,545,591, against 392,546,700 pounds, valued at $22,137,-428, in 1878.

OATS.

Returns of this crop made Nov. 1 are confirmed by the report of December. The total product of the country is estimated at 364,253,-000 bushels this year, against 413,578,000 bushels in 1878. The price, as returned on the 1st of the month, averaged 33.2 cents per bushel, against 24.6 last year at the same time, making the total valuation this year, $120,855,000 against $101,-945,000 in 1878.

POTATOES.

There is no change in the estimate of last month. With an increase of 3 per cent. in acreage for this year, there is a yield of ninety-eight bushels per acre, against sixty-nine bushels last year and ninety-four bushels in 1877. The total crop for the country is estimated at 181,360,000 bushels, which, at the price returned, 43.5 cents average, would make in round numbers, $79,000,000, against the valuation last year of $73,060,000.

WINTER RYE.

The area in winter rye has fallen off about 3 per cent. from last year. New England, States north of the Ohio river, and the Pacific States equal, or slightly enlarge, their last year's acreage. Texas is the only one of the Gulf States in which this crop is of sufficient importance to attract attention. It reports an increase of 19 per cent. Other sections report a diminished breadth. The falling off in the Southern inland States is fully one-fifth. The condition of the crop is about the average on the whole, being above the average in a majority of the States reporting it.

HAY.

The hay crop is about 10 per cent. less than that of 1878. New England and the Gulf States have slightly increased their product, but all the other sections have declined. The heaviest loss is in Southern inland States, which, taken together, have fallen off 27 per cent. The drought in this section has fallen with especial severity upon the grass crop. The same disastrous influence has been felt in the States north of the Ohio, where the loss is 20 per cent., and the South Atlantic States, where it amounts to 17 per cent. The Middle States, the largest hay-producing region of the country, fall off 9 per cent. In the remaining sections the losses have been much less, the Pacific States falling off but 1 per cent. The average price of hay is about $9.24 per ton, against $7.21 in 1878. The aggregate value will be over $335,000,000, against $285,543,752 last year.

A Shocking Story.

ALAMOSA, Col. J[illegible]

The excitement prevailing over the Ute trouble in Colorado has been somewhat increased lately by a letter published from Mrs. N. C. Meeker, disclosing the fact that each and all of the women who were held as captives after the massacre at White river suffered the violation of their persons through fear of worse treatment at the hands of these red devils.

The evidence was given to the commission by the women in their examination on their release from captivity, while in the Gunnison country. It was first distinctly understood by them that this evidence of their mistreatment should be used only by the commission in their efforts to establish the guilt of the Indians who had perpetrated the outrage. Each and all of the captives begged that this phase of their horrible misfortune should not be given to the public. It seems to have been in their situation as captives a choice between death or submitting to the hellish desires of their captors. The examination further discloses that they were permitted, as the last alternative, with the exception of Mrs. Meeker, to choose from among the chiefs who should cohabit with them during the terrible suspense which their captivity must have been, following the massacre at the agency.

This evidence was confined to the commission, among whose records it has lain dormant awaiting the tardy channels of justice from the Department of the Interior until the horrible suspicion was verified by the appearance in print of Mrs. Meeker's letter. The Indians, in speaking of the ravishing of the women subsequently, seemed to regard the act as in perfect keeping with the style of warfare in which they are fond of indulging.

It is known that Persune took Josephine Meeker, and came very near having a personal encounter with Douglass concerning his selection. An Uncompahgre Ute took Mrs. Price, who was afterward turned over to Johnson. Douglass says that no one took Mrs. Meeker, as she was too old, and he thought she ought not to be running around loose, without being cared for, so he took her.

THE MAINE COUNT.

Opinion of the Supreme Court Justices

Following is a synopsis of the answer of the Justices of the Maine Supreme Court to the series of interrogations submitted to them by Gov. Garcelon:

1. The Governor and Council have no authority to order a new election when no proper return is made. The House may seat members who have in fact been elected, even if no return at all is made to the Secretary of State. A Representative is not to be deprived of his seat because municipal officers have failed to do their duty.

2. The constitution calls for returns which shall be regular in all essential particulars, and which truly represent the facts they purport to set forth. But much of the constitutional requirements is merely directory.

3. While towns may have seven Selectmen, most of them have but three, and the signature of two of these is sufficient. In the case of Boards of Aldermen, a majority of a quorum, though not a majority of the whole, is competent to act.

4. It is immaterial whether the returns from a city show the vote by wards or not. It is not necessary that each candidate's name should be on the returns, provided that the votes returned as scattering, however added or subtracted, do not affect the result. Votes returned as scattering may have had that word printed on them for all the Governor and Council know. Where a plurality elects, an election is not to be defeated because the whole number of ballots is erroneously stated, or not stated at all.

5. Returns are not valid unless signed by the Town or City Clerk, but a Deputy Clerk or Clerk pro tem. would answer the purpose.

6. The Governor and Council must act on the basis of the returns as they are sent to the Secretary of State. If they purport to be made, signed and sealed in open meeting, the Governor and Council have no right to ascertain whether they were so made or not.

7. If returns are signed by two Selectmen, the Governor and Council are not to inquire whether the town had but two Selectmen or not. The signatures would be enough in certain cases, and the presumption is in favor of the return.

8. A person not a citizen may be a Selectman de facto, and bind the town as completely as if he were a Selectman de jure. So far as the public are concerned the acts of a de facto officer are as valid as those of a de jure officer.

9. In the case of marked ballots, Selectmen have the right to reject them when offered, but the statute forbids the rejection of a ballot after it has been received into the ballot-box. The Selectmen have no business to report the matter of marked ballots to the Governor and Council, and the latter have no right to pay any attention to such report or reference.

10. There can be no ground for rejecting the word "ditto" or "do" or disregarding the dots or marks that are in common use as their substitutes.

11. The Governor and Council have no right to reject returns on the ground that they are not genuine, unless objection in writing is presented to them declaring that any or all the signatures are not genuine, or that the return had been altered since it was made; then notice should be given to the parties interested, and in investigating the case the Governor and Council should be governed by the usual rules of evidence.

12. In case of duplicated returns, both in proper form, the first received must be the basis of the action of the Governor and Council. If defective, they can be corrected according to the statutes. Returns must have their full effect if they are intelligible, in spite of trivial irregularities.

MAINE.

Meeting of the Legislature.

There was considerable excitement at Augusta, Me., on the 7th inst., the day set apart for the convening of the Legislature. Dispatches state that the largest crowd that ever made its way to the State House began to move thitherward as early as 8 o'clock a. m. The police at the Capitol were without badges, and had no appearance of bearing arms. There was a perfect jam in the corridors and halls and stairways, and it was with great difficulty that those allowed to enter the legislative halls pushed their way thither. There were very many vacant seats in the House, as the Republicans carried out their programme, and kept away, a few only moving about in the rear of the hall. There was no disturbance whatever. The principal interest centered in the popular branch, the proceedings in the Senate hardly reaching a ripple of excitement. In the House, after the calling of the roll, Eugene Hale, the Republican leader, claimed that certain elected members from cities were not on the roll, and moved that they be included. He supported his motion in a long speech. Objections were made to the motion from the other side, and Mr. Hale was ruled out of order by the Assistant Clerk, who refused to put the motion, on which the Republicans withdrew from participating in the proceedings. A message was then sent to the Governor and Council, stating that a quorum of the members of the House was present, ready to be qualified. Great excitement prevailed during Mr. Hale's remarks, and uproarious applause followed. After the notification to the Governor that a quorum was present, the Governor appeared and qualified the members. He then announced that seventy-six members, being a quorum, had taken and subscribed to the necessary oaths, and were regularly and duly constituted the House of Representatives. This announcement was received with wild applause from the outside. Gov. Garcelon said he now put into their hands the opinion of the Supreme Court, as well as the petition of gentlemen from certain cities claiming seats, and invoked their careful consideration of the same.

Three cheers were given for Gov. Garcelon, followed by prolonged hisses.

The quorum is made of seventy-five Fusionists and one Republican, Eugene Hale. The Fusionists not participating are Sproul, of Veazie; Voter, of Farmington, and Snow, of Skowhegan.

The House proceeded to organize by the election of John C. Talbott as Speaker by a vote of 72.

The protest of members from five cities was presented by Mr. Hale, who moved that the House go into committee of the whole and consider the cases.

The Farmington and other cases were also referred.

Mr. Dickey remarked that the Supreme Court had nothing to do with the action of the Legislature, which drew forth a plea from Mr. Hale defending the court, and asking that constitutional barriers be not swept away. He said that the election of officers under laws passed by this body, as now constituted, would not be legal. In the Senate, there was little of interest to the enormous crowd which thronged the Capitol.

FOR eighty years a man of Orrington, Mass., has worked at shoemaking. He is now 91 years old.

A Wonderful Pig.

Mr. Ethenhausen, one of the proprietors of a copper mine at Little Bay, tells a remarkable story. A wooden house was built on sloping ground, and "shored so that there was a vacant space beneath the floor. Before this space was boarded in, a pig crept in, coiled itself in a quantity of shavings and fell asleep. The office was not immediately occupied, and the noise made by the pig, when it discovered its dilemma, was not heard. Like a true philosopher, the pig accommodated itself to its circumstances. It wrapped itself in the shavings, turned its back on the cold world, and went to sleep for the winter. This was on the 22d of November, 1878. The pig was remarkably plump, and a credit to its owner, who sincerely mourned his loss about Christmas time. The pig found a viaticum in its fat that kept up animal heat and sustained life. The office was occupied, but the tramp of feet did not disturb the sleeper.

For four months the pig slept as sound as a Pharaoh in a sarcophagus. With the genial warmth of April its vital energies returned. It rubbed its eyes, turned over, and began to grunt. The occupants of the office were mystified. The animal grunted with a gusto, and began to knock for a release. A board or two was removed, and the pig was brought to light. Its appearance was most pathetic. The ribs on each side seemed to have met. The hams had vanished, and only the hip joints stood up, gaunt and angular. The vertebræ could be counted, and the ears drooped from the large skull. The eyes looked out of the deep, bony sockets with a profoundly melancholy expression, as though their owner had been in the other world and had found hard times. For a time no one recognized the pig, but at length the woman who owned it declared, with tears in her eyes, that she knew it by a peculiar turn in its tail. It had a singularly graceful curl in this appendage—the only æsthetic point about it—and this had survived the destruction of all tissue. The poor woman's joy over the recovery of her lost pet was quite touching. The news spread rapidly. The miners gathered from all quarters to view the wonderful pig who had lived for 114 days without food or drink.

Presents flowed in. Delicacies unheard-of in the dietary of pighood were liberally supplied. Warm compounds of oatmeal and biscuit, flavored with delicious scraps and tidbits from kindly housewives, soon began to tell on the pig's condition and swell out its lean flanks. Its story went the rounds of the mines and everywhere awoke sympathy and enthusiasm. It is now as plump as ever, and the curl in its tail is even more strongly pronounced than before.—Duluth Tribune and Herald

A Primitive Nation.

The new Mexican inter-oceanic railway across the Tehauntepec isthmus is marked out to pass through the State of Chiapas, which probably contains the only population in the world that possesses no iron, nor anything in the shape of an iron industry, even of the crudest form. For the distance of eighty miles around Palenque, the capital, not a single blacksmith can be found, and the only articles in the shape of iron are axes and machetas, imported from the United States. Nails are unknown, all the wood-work being held together by cord or tendrils of the vines, and even the tortilla is prepared by grinding the maize between stones. The new railway which will run through this territory has clearly a well-defined educational, as well as commercial development to undertake.

PROBABLY you never heard of a ginger-bread barometer. A French editor has one—a General in ginger-bread. He buys one at a fair once a year and nails it to the wall at home. Damp weather softens and dry weather hardens gingerbread, and the editor can tell by touching the figure with his finger what kind of a day it is going to be.

SCRIBNER & Co. are said to have offered Ruskin $400 for a short article on the Cathedral of St. Mark's, at Venice, and $1,000 to Browning, the poet. Both refused the work.

THE committee appointed by the Governor of New Hampshire to investigate the cattle disease in that State reports that it is not pleuro-pneumonia, but that it was induced by local causes, and is not contagious.

THE extent to which Nihilism is undermining the empire in Russia, and the terror which its secret operations inspire, is disclosed by St. Petersburg dispatches announcing that it is proposed to decree especial penalties for the punishment of those who propagate Nihilist doctrines in the army.

THE active sympathy of rich residents of New York was aroused by the pitiful story of one Howard, who, having been arrested for theft, claimed that he was forced to the commission of the crime in order to procure bread for his starving family. When his story was made public the Howards were nearly killed with kindness, but it turns out that the chap was a thief, whose picture ornamented the rogues' gallery.

IT has just been learned that if the Afghan rebels had whipped the British they would have stipulated, as a basis of peace, the return of the English to India, a promise that the Ameer should be restored, and that two officers of the army should be delivered to them as hostages for the fulfillment of the pledges. The sweeping victories of the British deprived the mutineers of an opportunity to present this cheerful proposition to the invaders.

BAZAINE, of the unfortunate history, is now a man without a country. The glory of his Mexican campaign, successful so far as he was concerned, was wiped out by the surrender of Metz. Sentenced to be shot as a traitor, MacMahon spared him his life, but condemned him to prison, whence he escaped through the devotion of his wife. Now he asks permission to visit France to settle some military affairs, but it is denied him. Life is very dear, but it would have been better for Bazaine had he perished at Metz or in Mexico.

A WRITER in the New York Medical Journal, a few months ago, under the head of "Gun-shot Wounds," mentioned by way of illustration that he was in Yokohama, Japan, at the same time that Mr. Seward was there on his trip around the world, a short time before his death. The writer had occasion to examine Seward's jaw as a dentist, and found that the part of the lower jaw injured by the assassin's blow was in such a condition that it was useless for mastication. Dr. Gunning, who performed the operation on the wounded jaw of the Secretary in 1865, took umbrage at this publication, and sued for $25,000 for libel.

WHEN "Thad" Stevens was a young lawyer in the Pennsylvania courts, he once lost his case by what he considered a wrong ruling of the Judge. Disgusted, he banged his law books on the table, picked up his hat and started for the door, with some vigorous words in his mouth. The Judge, feeling that his dignity was assailed, rose impressively and said: "Mr. Stevens!" Mr Stevens stopped, turned and bowed deferentially. "Mr. Stevens," said the Judge, "do you intend by such conduct to express your contempt for this court?" And Stevens, with mock seriousness, answered: "Express my contempt for this court? No, sir! I was trying to conceal it, your Honor?"

A WASHINGTON correspondent recalls the generally-forgotten fact that to Mrs. Langdon, of New Hampshire, whose husband was a member of Congress, are the ladies indebted for permission to listen to the debates and proceedings of that body. They had been originally excluded from the galleries, but when the famous Jay treaty was brought home there were heated debates in the House for and against its ratification. One night at a party Mrs. Langdon expressed her regret to Fisher Ames, of Massachusetts, that she could not hear the arguments, and especially his speeches. Mr. Ames gallantly replied that he knew of no reason why ladies should not be permitted to hear the debates. "Then," said Mrs. Langdon, "if you will let me know when you next intend to speak, I will make up a party of ladies, and we will go and hear you." It was done, and the galleries have always since been graced by their presence.

SCANT respect was shown the memory of Nathan Hale, the American, who during the war of the Revolution, perished on a British scaffold as a spy, but for Major Andre a monument is erected by a snobbish American. Andre is represented as a pattern of the virtues, who happened to be caught in one of meanest transactions of the war, and strung up for his part in the business. He was young, adventurous and well connected, but, if a recently published letter, written at the time of the British occupation of Philadelphia, states the truth, he lacked the honesty of even a Hessian. He was quartered at the house of Dr. Franklin, to whose care some very valuable books had been sent from France for the Philosophical Society, and he carried them off in spite of the remonstrances of an Italian who represented to him the chivalric conduct of Gen. Kuyphausen, of the Hessians, who, occupying Gen. Cadwallader's house, scrupulously returned all the property which he had carefully scheduled, even to the wine in the cellar, and paid for the use of the house. The man who proposed to steal an American fort, through the treachery of a General, wouldn't hesitate to commit the larceny of a few books.

THE case of Cashier Barron, the Treasurer of the Dexter (Me.) Savings Bank, is once more thrust into public notice. It may be remembered that on the evening of Feb. 22, 1878, he was found, gagged and dying, in the vault of his bank. Much ado was made about the matter, and he was declared by the people of Dexter, and by the press of the country, to have been a martyr to his fidelity. About a year afterward the officers of the institution claimed that they had discovered that Barron was a defaulter, and that the books showed that fact. A good deal of unfavorable comment was aroused, and the prosecuting officials severely censured. Nothing effective came of the affair, however. Since then the bank officers have had an expert in bookkeeping at work, and it is asserted that indubitable evidence has been discovered that Barron was a defaulter to the amount of $4,796.82, and Barron's estate is to be sued for the amount. The case is one of the strangest in criminal history. Barron has been lauded to the skies, contributions raised for his family, and a memorial church erected in honor of the fidelity which it was believed he had exhibited. It is no easy matter to destroy this opinion of the public; still, if it is erroneous, if the man was a thief, it should be known. But, was he a rascal?

Statistics of Paris.

Paris contains 74,740 houses, besides the public buildings; these houses contain 337,587 shops, work-rooms, or offices devoted to business, and 684,952 devoted to dwelling purposes, in all 1,022,539. The annual value of the rentals is estimated at 579,887,641 francs, or 246,969,537 for premises of the first category, and 331,918,104 francs for those of the second category. The public ways, streets, avenues and boulevards of Paris have an accumulated length of 876,835 metres 18 centimetres, of which 204,562 metres 18 centimetres are planted with trees. The planted roads are provided with 36,520 metres 84 centimetres of collecting sewers, and 167,631 metres 93 centimetres of ordinary sewers. On the roads not planted with trees are 27,689 metres 35 centimetres of collecting sewers and 342,697 metres 11 centimetres of ordinary sewers. The whole length of sewers is 571,559 metres 28 centimetres. Out of the 74,740 houses of Paris there are only 22,455 which have connections with the sewers and discharge their drainage directly into the sewers. The total superfices of Paris is 7,802 hectametres, made up as follows:

	Hect.	M.	C.
Road surface	1,450	64	65
Squares and public gardens	177	26	47
Interior cemeteries	93	89	58
Seine between the parapets	222	23	00
Buildings, houses and private gardens, etc	5,857	96	30
Total	7,802	00	00

The population in 1878 was 1,988,806 inhabitants, which gives 254 inhabitants per hectare.—Parisian.

The Elephant Disappearing.

Considerable interest attaches to a question which has just been put by a Sheffield worker in ivory. He desires to know whether elephants shed their tusks, as, if not, upward of 1,280 of these magnificent beasts must have been killed to supply his manufactory alone with ivory used last year. The answer to his query is unfortunately that before the tusks can be obtained an elephant must be slaughtered, and herein is found a subject for very serious reflection. Numerous still in Ceylon, though by no means so plentiful as they were a few years ago, and without doubt existing also in large numbers in certain parts of Africa, the elephant is, however, rapidly disappearing. As a beast of burden he is unrivaled for strength, endurance and intelligence, and the services he renders in times of war, as well as peace, would alone more than reward a great effort on his behalf. Quite apart from the fact that when he goes the supply of ivory ceases, too, there is also the grave consideration of his loss as a means of locomotion and transport. It is well known that he does not breed in captivity, and it is, therefore, only in a wild state that the species can be preserved. The destruction of more than 1,200 of his kind for one knife-making firm implies a huge and serious waste.

A WOMAN at Ulysses, Neb., wrapped her baby in a sheet and left it in the warm ashes by the fire-place while she went to visit a neighbor, and when she returned the infant was burned to a crisp.

FARM NOTES.

A CANADA farmer's wife was lately butted to death by a ram.

CHOPPED onions, with a little ginger mixed in, is said to be a sure cure for chicken cholera.

AMERICAN honey in the comb has become a popular article of diet in England, and very large shipments are made.

IT is announced that the leaves of the elder strewed among grain will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil; the juice will also kill maggots. The leaves scattered over cabbages, cucumbers and other plants subject to weevil ravages effectually shield them.

FOWLS of all kinds are very fond of charcoal, and will eat it with relish when properly prepared. Pounded charcoal is not in the shape in which fowls usually find their food, and consequently is not very enticing to them. To please their palates the charcoal should be in pieces about the size of a grain of corn, and if these are strewed about their quarters they will readily eat thereof. Corn burnt on the cob and the refuse, which consists almost entirely of the grains reduced to charcoal and retaining their perfect shape, placed before them make a marked improvement in their health, as is shown by the higher color of their combs and their sooner producing a greater average of eggs to a flock than before.

FROM the discussions of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, and from information through other sources, the fact is becoming established that the bearing year of old apple trees can not be permanently changed by removing or shearing off the blossoms in the bearing year. They are found to return to their old habit in a short time. But when the work is performed on young bearing trees, and repeated if necessary, the change has become permanent. It will be observed that the labor is far less on the young and smaller trees. In connection with this treatment, top-dressing with manure and good cultivation, as may be necessary to maintain a good healthy growth, will be quite sure to result in the best success.

THE harvesting of the carrot crops can be facilitated by running a plow on one side of the rows, when the roots are easily removed by hand. The tops are then cut off, and surface moisture from the roots dried by exposure to the sun a day or two, when they may be stored in a cellar, out of doors, or in pits, like turnips and potatoes. Carrots, having a greater tendency to decay than many roots, should never be stored in great bulk, but placed in small heaps only, and kept at as low a temperature as possible above the freezing point. On the approach of warm weather they incline to sprout, if left in bulk, hence, when it is desired to preserve them longer, the crown ought to be cut off and the roots spread in a cool, dry place. Horses thrive on carrots given judiciously with other feed; they are also excellent for working cattle.

A NEW COW-FASTENER.—A humane man, says the Kansas Times, has invented an improved mode of confining cows without stanchions or stalls. He uses small posts, 4x6 inches, set up where the stanchion would be, 3 feet 2 inches from center to center. On the inside of these posts, 14 inches above the floor, a ½ staple, 12 inches long, is driven into each post. A ¼-inch cable chain, stretching from staple to staple with a ring on each end, slides up and down on the staples, has a ring in the middle into which the cow is to be fastened. A leather strap 1½ inches wide, with a strong breast-strap slipped on, is placed around the cow's neck and riveted on with three small copper rivets. The cow is brought between the two posts and the snap fastened to the ring in the middle of the chain, which holds the cow in the center between the two posts, but the slack of the chain and the chain slipping back and forth upon the neck enables the cow to move forward and backward, to turn her head, and she may lick or scratch herself from shoulder to rump. And when she lays down, it may be in the natural position with her head upon her shoulder. The cow carries the strap upon her neck, and it is not as much work to fasten her as with a rope.

RAISING CALVES.—A writer in the Waverly (Iowa) Republican says he has been raising a number of calves the past season, and gives his experience with them: "Out of sixteen head owned by us, twelve were fed from a pail, they learning to drink readily when only a few days old; their feed consisted of new milk for the first two weeks, then skim-milk was substituted. They were turned into a small pasture at the end of a month, and as soon as corn was fit, ears of green corn were chopped fine with an ax, and given them twice a day, and soon thereafter pumpkins were added, all of which they much relished. At present writing they are fed shelled corn and allowed the run of the stalk-field, and are looking thrifty and growing finely. The other four were left with the cows during the summer months, and were in good condition when removed this fall. But they did not relish the change of feed, and although great pains was taken they did not eat well, and grew thin in flesh. At present writing they are looking unthrifty, and will hardly reach a satisfactory condition before turning out to grass another year. Thus it would seem by our experience that calves do much better raised by hand and accustomed gradually to dry feed, rather then left with cow several months and then removed."

Schurz's Pitchforks.

As an example of the distinguished manner in which Indian matters are managed from Washington, it is appropriate to mention the fact that a single shipment of 1,200 pitchforks was made to the Santee Indians. As the entire Santee band at the agency does not number over 600, the people will realize the extreme generosity which the Commissioner exhibits in his dealings with these people. Through the liberality of Hayt every Santee buck, squaw and papoose will be given two pitchforks with which to make their hay. When they are using one the other can be hung in the parlor over the piano, and when the head of the family calls his flock about him for morning prayers he can point to it as typical of the goodness of this Government, and comment upon the strong resemblance which exists between the pitchfork and Carl Schurz, the lesser great father.—Yankton Press.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

SPONGE GINGERBREAD.—One cup sour milk, one cup molasses, half a cup butter, two eggs, one and a half teaspoonfuls soda, one quart flour; ginger and spice to taste.

BOILED INDIAN PUDDING.—Two quarts milk, two full cups Indian meal, one cup molasses, salt to taste. Boil two-thirds of the milk to scald the meal; then add the molasses and the rest of the milk. Stir all together, and boil eight hours.

KISSES OR DROP CAKES.—One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three-fourths cup of water, one-half teaspoonful soda, two eggs, four and a half or five cups flour; drop them on a tin, and put a lump of sugar in the center of each.

LEMON BUTTER.—One and a half cupfuls white sugar, whites of three eggs, yelk of one, grated rind and juice of a lemon and a half, or two small ones; cook over a slow fire twenty minutes, stirring all the while. Very nice for tarts, or to be eaten as preserves.

TO DETERMINE THE PURITY OF WATER.—To detect impurity in well-water, put a tumbler of it in a warm place for ten days. If free from organic matter it will remain sweet, but if impure it will begin to smell disagreeably. Otherwise a small quantity of nitric acid may be poured into a glass of the water; if organic matter is present it will become oxidized and turn brown and color the water in a few hours.

HUNTINGTON PUDDING.—One pint milk and one-half cup rice, put into a tin and set in a pot nearly half full of boiling water; keep the water boiling until the rice is steamed soft enough to yield when pressed with thumb and finger; then add yelks of two eggs, a little lump of butter, and the grated rind of a lemon; turn into a pudding-dish, beat the whites to a stiff froth, and stir in half a cup of sugar and the juice of a lemon; spread this frosting on the pudding, and put into the oven to brown.

HOW TO LIME EGGS.—Eggs are limed by packing them in a liquid made as follows, viz: One peck of fresh lime is slacked in sufficient water to make a thin paste; when thoroughly slacked, which will require twenty-four hours, water is added to thin it so that it can be strained through a fine sieve into a clean barrel, which is then filled up with water; the eggs, perfectly fresh, are laid carefully into kegs or barrels, and the stirred lime liquor is poured over them, a board being floated on top to keep the eggs under the surface. In this way the eggs may be kept six months.

A Revolution in the Cotton Trade.

We have published several statements concerning the invention known as "Clement's attachment," which promises to work a revolution in the cotton trade, agricultural and manufacturing, far surpassing that wrought by Whitney's cotton-gin. To understand the importance of this invention, a few words of explanation are necessary to the general reader.

Prior to the invention of the gin by Whitney, all cotton had to be picked—that is, separated from the seed-boll by hand. This process was slow, a few pounds per day being the product of a skilled and experienced hand. This, of course, made the production of cotton too costly to be profitable. Whitney's invention, however, produced a revolution. It provided a mechanical means for separating the cotton from the seed at little expense. This so reduced the cost of producing cotton that it made the latter the great staple product, and at the same time gave to slave labor in this country a value that it had never possessed before, and which had not been anticipated. The production of cotton has since been the great labor of the South, and, because of the cheapness of the fiber, the great cotton manufactures of Europe and America have grown to their present dimensions.

The "Clement attachment" is an invention, or perhaps a combination of several previously-known mechanical appliances, by which the cotton being picked in large quantities is fed to the machine in its natural state, and, passing through the various operations, the seed is separated from the fiber, and the latter is by the one process formed into slivers or threads ready to be spun into yarns. The cotton-gin principle is preserved, but only as a preliminary to the other processes, and the result of the operation is to dispense with the whole process of baling cotton and of compressing the cotton. The producer of cotton hereafter, instead of selling cotton in bale, will deliver to his customers cotton in slivers, thread, or yarn. —Chicago Tribune.

Death by Meteors.

Mr. Proctor writes: "I have received several inquiries, some of them rather anxious inquiries, respecting the dangers to be feared from meteoric downfall, the death of David Meisentlater having apparently suggested that such dangers may be greater than has heretofore been supposed. If we knew the average number of meteoric masses which break their way through the earth's armor—that is, through the 'firmament,' expanse of ether, pure transparent elemental air—it would be very easy to calculate the exact chance of death by meteoric downfall. As a matter of fact, we have no satisfactory evidence on this point, because most of the meteorites which fall upon the earth escape attention. I suppose, however, that if Prof. Newton, of Yale College, rightly assumes the number of falling stars of all orders to be 400,000,000 yearly, we may fairly assume that about 4,000 meteorites fall annually upon the earth's surface. This allows one meteorite for 100,000 falling stars. Now let us take the total number of human beings at any one time on the earth as 1,500,000,000. Assume the risk of persons within doors equal to that of persons in the open air—for a meteorite falling on a house would not be seriously interrupted in its course, since it would travel with a velocity of several miles per second. Again, remembering that the meteors do not fall vertically, nor, even if they did, do men always stand upright, we must take a larger surface for each person than that which he presents as seen from above when standing. We may take half a square yard for an adult, and perhaps a quarter of a square yard for the average human being. Now, the earth's surface contains about 200,000,000 square miles, each containing about 3,000,000 square yards—in all 2,400,000,000,000,000 quarter square yards—whereas the human race occupies only 1,500,000,000 quarter square yards. Thus the chance of a single meteorite striking some one is as fifteen in 24,000,000, or as one in 1,600,000; and if 400 meteorites fall per annum, the chance of one death occurring in any given year is about 1-400th. On the average one death by a meteor stroke might be expected to occur in 400 years. If it is true, as I have recently seen stated, that nine such deaths have occurred in the last 900 years, it would appear probable that 16,000 meteorites, instead of 4,000, annually reach the earth."

Statistics of the Presidency.

The following is an analysis of the occupancy of the Presidential office from the organization of the Government under the Federal constitution to the end of the present term, showing the length of service of the incumbents and the States of which they were residents:

It will be seen that the Eastern States elected three of their citizens to that high position, serving one term each. The Middle States elected two and inherited a fraction of a term by the demise of a Southern President. The Western States elected four, who, if death had not interposed, would have held the office twenty-four years, but by the decease of two early in the terms for which they were chosen a Virginian and a Tennessean reduced the period nearly eight years. The Southwestern States elected three, whose service, with nearly a full term by another inheritor, made over seventeen years.

The scepter departed from the Southern States proper when Jackson, who was more of a Western than a Southern man, was elected, but it had its rule in the chief magistracy for more than thirty-six years—every incumbent being a Virginian!

Assuming that the Eastern and Middle States bear a similar relation to each other, politically, as that of the Western and Southwestern, the latter have been the most favored and have had the President for more than thirty-three years, while the former aggregate not quite twenty-three. So, too, the Western States exceed the Eastern—sixteen to twelve. Strangely enough, the two largest States of both the other localities are the only ones favored—New York and Pennsylvania and Ohio and Illinois.

Arkansas Etiquette.

Two men from Philadelphia engaged in a quarrel at a hotel. After using all kinds of epithets, one of the men thrust his hand behind him as though about to draw a pistol, and then took it away. The quarrel terminated without damage to either party. An old man from South Arkansas shook back his long hair, and, advancing to the man who had made the hip-pocket motion, remarked:

"Both of you men are strangers here, I reckon?"

"Yes."

"Not acquainted with our little rules of politeness?"

"How?"

"Why, you put your hand behind you just now."

"Yes."

"You didn't pull a gun."

"I haven't got a gun."

"Now, young man, let me give you a piece of advice. While you are in this country, don't put your hand behind you unless you intend to shoot; don't even run your hand into your pocket for a chaw of tobacker; don't spit; don't wink, for, if you do, your pardner, if he's an Arkansas man, will jolt you. You must learn these little rules of politeness. You may know how to conduct yourself at church, but you've got a good many rules of etiquette to learn." —Little Rock Gazette.

A Suggestion for Whist Players.

In his new book on "Whist," Cavendish gives an admirable method of shutting up a nuisance who is to be met with at three tables out of four. This is the "If you had" partner, who, after every hand, informs you that "If you had done so and so, we should have made so and so." This is the remedy: "My favorite retort to him is to ask if he has ever heard the story of 'your uncle and your aunt?' If he has, he does not want to hear it again, and is silent. If he has not, and innocently falls into the trap by expressing a desire to hear it, I say, in a solemn voice: 'If your aunt had been a man she would have been your uncle.'"—London Truth.

A Syphon Boot.

Thanks to the good offices of a rich friend, a poverty-stricken young artist obtains a commission to paint the portrait of a rich young lady.

Upon going to wait upon the lady he manages to get himself up very creditably as to hat, coat and pantaloons, but his boots—ah, his boots! There is an aperture in the toe of each where the sole has parted company with the upper.

On the road to the lady's mansion a sudden and violent shower came up, flooding the sidewalks, and when he enters the drawing-room he perceives to his horror that his boots have turned into pumps and that at each step the water within them is spouted forth over the costly carpets, as if from the blow-holes of lively young whales.

He, however, is not disconcerted, but says gracefully to the lady of the mansion,

"Upon my word, madame, these syphon boots that are all the fashion and are so highly praised may be all that they are said to be for out-door use, but for wearing in the house they will never answer at all."

The Young Idea Trying to Shoot.

The traditional young idea has been trying to shoot in an unconventional way from the benches of the North Attleboro (Mass.) Grammar School. A timid lad lately left his seat in extreme trepidation, and, being reprimanded sharply by the teacher, gave this succinct explanation: "I can't sit there and have a seven-shooter pointed at me." The boy who was accused asserted that it was only a pasteboard pistol, but when his breeches pockets were searched the lie was crammed down his throat. The seven-shooter was there, with every chamber loaded.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

Frank Leslie, the publisher, died at his home in New York City, last Saturday.

The next state fair will commence on the 27th day of September, 1880. Mr. R. M. Lockhart was not elected general superintendent, as we predicted last week, Mr. Fielding Beeler, of Indianapolis, having been elected to the position by acclamation.

The delegates to the republican congressional convention of this (the 12th) district, will meet in Auburn, February 25, for the purpose of fixing a time for holding the congressional nominating convention, and to select delegates to the national republican convention.

The republicans of DeKalb county will meet in mass convention, at Auburn, February 14, for the purpose of organization for the campaign of 1880, and to appoint a time for holding a county nominating convention. At the same time delegates will be appointed to state, judicial, senatorial, congressional and joint representative district conventions.

The fifty-third issue of the Western Farmers' Almanac, published at Louisville, Ky., by John P. Morton & Co., is before us. We know of no other publication that gives as much valuable information for the practical farmer, in the same amount of space. It is full of original articles by well-known authors, and choice selections from standard works. Every farmer ought to have it.

Query Answered.

LIGONIER, IND., Jan. 12, 1880.

EDS. COURIER:—In your issue of last week I found the following:

The report of the proceedings of the meeting of the state board of agriculture shows that Messrs. R. M. Lockhart, John B. Stoll and James A. Barns were present from this congressional district when the following resolution offered by Mr. Lockhart was adopted by the board:

"Resolved, That the thanks of this delegate and state board be tendered to Hon. John H. Baker, member of congress for the thirteenth district of this state, for the efforts he is making in trying to procure the passage of a law to prevent innocent parties from being swindled by the purchase of patent articles, such as driven wells, etc."

Query: Why did not the resolution include the name of Hon. W. G. Colerick, who has also introduced a bill in congress for the purpose mentioned in the resolution?

Permit me to say in reply, that I was not in attendance when Mr. Lockhart introduced his resolution laudatory of Mr. Baker. Noticing it among the published proceedings next morning, I at once determined that justice should be done Mr. Colerick by way of taking cognizance of his efforts in behalf of innocent purchasers of patented articles. Owing to the fact that the proceedings were being conducted in conformity with a printed programme, no opportunity presented itself for the introduction of a resolution on this subject until late Wednesday evening, when I got the floor and called attention to the adoption of Mr. Lockhart's partial resolution of the day previous. I stated that if there was propriety in the meeting taking notice of bills introduced in congress, such recognition should be impartial. I further stated that perhaps Mr. Lockhart was not aware of the fact that Mr. Colerick had also introduced a bill on the patent-right question, and that if such was the case he would, I hoped, agree to do justice to "all concerned," by accepting the substitute I was about to offer. To this Mr. Lockhart replied: "Go ahead, Mr. Stoll; I am ready to reply." He did not reply, but a delegate in his immediate vicinity, with more zeal than courtesy, moved that the meeting adjourn. This contemptible attempt to smother my resolution, which I had read for information, was frustrated by Gov. Williams raising a point of order, and putting a flea into the ear of the fellow who was so anxious to adjourn. What transpired further, you will learn from the following, culled from the proceedings as published in Thursday's Indianapolis Journal:

"Mr. John B. Stoll offered the following resolution, which was adopted:"

'Resolved, That the thanks of the board be and are hereby tendered to Honorables John H. Baker and Walpole G. Colerick, members of congress from the thirteenth and twelfth districts, for their efforts in procuring the passage of measures protecting innocent parties from being wronged by the purchase of patented articles, such as driven wells, etc., and that our senators and representatives in congress be and are hereby requested to lend their earnest efforts to the enactment of such protective measures.'

The delegate board then adjourned 'sine die.'"

My resolution was offered as a substitute for Mr. Lockhart's, and as such adopted, with but two dissenting votes. Had I been at the Tuesday evening meeting, Mr. Lockhart's glorifying resolution would not have passed in the shape it did. Very Respectfully,

J. B. STOLL.

Wednesday, June 9, 1880, is the time appointed for holding the democratic state convention. The meeting of the state central committee at Indianapolis, last week, was attended by a large number of prominent democrats from all parts of the state, nearly all of whom were well pleased with the date fixed for holding the convention.

It has recently been ascertained that the white women captured by the Ute Indians, at the time of the White river massacre, were compelled to suffer disgrace at the hands of their captors, each lady being chosen by a chief and forced to submit to the lust of the redskins. Gen. Adams says:

"The women very unwillingly made a full statement to the commission of the circumstances, with the understanding that it should not be published. Mrs. Meeker, however, subsequently published the story herself. Adams said that, had he known this part of the barbarity of the savages before the commission began its work, he would have advised letting Gen. Merritt and his force punish the redskins without further delay. The women were, however, so averse to having the facts known, that they at first denied, even to the commission, that they had been foully dealt with."

Some of these same red devils are now in Washington City being interviewed by Secretary Schurz, and should not be permitted to leave the states alive. The people of this country should take the Indian business in their own hands and proceed at once to drive them into the Pacific ocean.

The ex-soldiers of Fort Wayne are circulating petitions for signatures, asking congress to pay ex-soldiers the difference between the depreciated currency in which they were paid, and gold, with 6 per cent. interest compounded semi-annually, in accordance with a bill introduced by Mr. Weaver, of Iowa. The Weaver bill will not be passed, as it is unjust in several particulars. It is not satisfactory to soldiers who volunteered in 1861 and 1862.

In another column will be found a satisfactory answer from Hon. J. B. Stoll to our query of last week as to the patent-right resolution passed by the state board of agriculture. We surmised that the partiality shown was intentional on the part of Mr. Lockhart, as Mr. Stoll's letter conclusively proves.

Senator Lamar was stricken with paralysis last Monday night at Jackson, Miss.

A Fainting Statesman.

[Cincinnati Enquirer.]

HON. JAS. G. BLAINE is one of the most captivating men in American politics. His popularity comes from several states. He was born in Pennsylvania. He taught school in Kentucky. He went to Maine to edit. He has thus brought within the immediate reach of his splendid magnetism three great sections of the country—the border land, the middle states and New England. BLAINE is bold, brilliant, bewitching. He is really aggressive. His manner is seductively abrupt and frank. He has the faculty of drawing unto himself, by a warmth and cordiality of manner, even his opponents. If a rural citizen falls once within the spell of that confidential demeanor, and feels once the hearty pressure of that soft, fat hand, and experiences once the effect of those large, dark eyes beaming on him—eyes that have added power because their youth gains picturesque interest from the hair and beard which the cares of state have touched with snow, and listens once to the anxious inquiries of the young but silver-headed senator concerning himself and his family and his section, that rural citizen is thereafter probably a BLAINE man, for BLAINE is magnetic. He wins the devotion of the young men. He attracts some of the admiration of older men. He is ambitious, exceedingly ambitious.

But he faints away.

In 1876, while Republicans from all the states were gathering in Cincinnati to nominate BLAINE for the presidency, BLAINE fainted away. He was on his way to church, and he fell on the church-steps, "overcome by the heat." This was a rational explanation, as BLAINE was in Washington and in June. But in Maine, in January, day before yesterday, he also "fell, overcome by the heat;" and it is not reported that he was on his way to the House of God. The grave question arises for the consideration of the American people in general, and the republican party in particular, whether or not the statesman from Maine, in an emergency, is subject to fits. The Washington fainting fit of 1876 was not sufficient to establish a theory. There was a crisis then, an emergency, but there was also the Washington climate, which a wit called a Congress of Climates, and the month of June and that church. Either one of these might have overcome a statesman, but then the fit was wholly attributed to the weather. Day before yesterday the conditions were wholly different. There was no church. There was no Wasington climate. There was no month of June. There was BLAINE, and there was the fainting fit. This is all. And now the serious question comes, is BLAINE a fainting statesman? When time of trial comes, does he fall in a fit? Does the uncertainty hanging about a presidential convention in June, or the loss of the legislature of our cold state in January, alike cause Mr. BLAINE to faint away or put him in a fit? Is he a statesman subject to fits? Does he habitually faint away in a trying hour?

ESSAY.

BY MISS ADA GEORGE.

The following is published in accordance with a resolution passed by those to whom the essay was read, at Concord church, Christmas eve:

ASSOCIATES.

Some one has said that "an author is known by his writings, a mother by her daughter, a fool by his words, and all men by their companions."

Intercourse with persons of decided virtue and excellence is of great importance in the formation of a good character. This being true, it follows that the force of example is powerful. We are creatures of imitation, and by a necessary influence our tempers and habits are very much formed on the model of those with whom we familiarly associate. Therefore it is better to be alone than in bad company, for "evil communications corrupt good manners," and ill qualities are catching as well as diseases, and the mind is at least as much, if not a great deal more, liable to infection than the body. Go with mean people and you think life is mean. Some one has said—and it is true—that "a man is known by the company he keeps." He naturally inclines by the force of imitation to the habits and manners of those by whom he is surrounded. Vice stalks in the streets unabashed, and children copy it. This being true, should not all try and associate with the good? Should not parents try to influence their children in this direction and teach them good morals? Witness the urchin seven years old trying to ape his seniors in folly by smoking the cigar stubs which have been cast aside. In time, when his funds improve, he will wield the long nine and be a full-fledged loafer. This faculty is usually more active in the young than in adult life, and serves to lead them to imitate that which their seniors do, before their reasoning powers are sufficiently developed and instructed to enable them to reason out the proper course of action. Thus by copying others they do that which is appropriate, right or wrong, without knowing why, or the principles involved in their action.

The awfully sad consequences of evil associations are exhibited in the history of almost all criminals. The case of a man named Brown, recently executed in Toronto, Canada, is an example. He was born of poor but good parents, both were members of the church of England and were much respected. This criminal, in a sketch of his life, written at his dictation, attributes his downfall to early disobedience and bad companions which led him to dissipation and finally plunged him into association with the most dissolute and lawless characters. They led him on in transgression and in sin, which ended in his being brought to the scaffold. On the scaffold he made the following speech: "I hope this will be a warning against bad company. It was that that brought me to my last end here to-day, though I am innocent of the murder I am about to suffer for. May the Lord have mercy on my soul! Amen."

Bad company is like a nail driven into a post which, after the first or second blow, may be drawn out with little difficulty, but being once driven in to the head the pinchers cannot take hold to draw it out, which can only be done by the destruction of the wood. You may be ever so poor, you cannot associate with bad companions without falling into bad odor. Evil company is like tobacco-smoke—you cannot be long in its presence without carrying away a taint of it.

One need not ask a merry face or a sad one whether it hath come from joy or grief. Tears and laughter tell their own story. Should one come home with fruit we say "You have come from the orchard." If with hands full of wild flowers, "You have come from the field." If one's garments smell of mingled odors we say, "You have walked in the garden." So with associations—those who walk with the just, the upright, have the sweetest incense that has ever annointed man. "Let no man deceive himself."

The father of our country was wont to say, "Be courteous to all, but intimate with few, and let those few be well tried before you give them your confidence." It should be the aim of every young man to go into good society. We do not mean the rich, the proud and fashionable; we mean society of the wise, the intelligent and good. Where you find men that know more than you do, and from whose conversation you can gain information, it is always safe to be found there.

It has broken down many a man by associating with the low and vulgar, where the ribald song and the indecent story were introduced to excite laughter. If you wish to be respected, if you desire happiness and not misery, we advise you to associate with the intelligent and good. Strive for mental excellence and strict integrity, and you will never be found in the sinks of pollution and on the benches of the retailers and gamblers. Once habituate yourself to a virtuous course—once secure a love of good company and good society, and no punishment would be greater than by accident to be obliged for half a day to associate with the low and vulgar. If you have chosen the right one, you will always cherish and honor him. How you will curse those associates who tried to drag you down to ruin and destruction, and how love to repeat the names of old friends. "Old friends!" How we will cherish the memory of "old friends." How often we will think of them when tempted or tried. At these times their faces will be pictured in our minds and we will ever love them for the examples they have given us. Some of them may be buffeting the billows of time's stormy sea in distant lands. Though they are absent, our thoughts are often with them.

Charles S. Garfield and J. B. Newcomb, prominent stock dealers of Williams county, Ohio, who were recently indicted by the grand jury of this county for complicity in the attempted robbery at Spencerville, having been arrested and confined in jail, were released on bail of $1,000 each. Col. Wm. Stough, of Bryan, Ohio, endorsed for Garfield, and Hon. Jas. S. Collins, of Columbia City, for Newcomb.

Among the useful papers promised for the February St. Nicholas will be one on the Audiphone, that recent and admirable invention by which persons, so deaf that they have never heard a sound in their lives, can be made to hear music, the human voice, and all the beautiful sounds of nature. This paper will doubtless be of interest to old and young.

No less than three farmers will contribute articles on outdoor topics to the Midwinter Scribner. The papers are, the fourth of Rev. E. P. Roe's series on "Success with Small Fruits," devoted this month wholly to a southern strawberry farm; a chatty paper on "New England Fences," by Rowland C. Robinson; and an interesting collection of miscellanies, by John Burroughs, under the caption, "Notes of a Walker." Additional topics of a similar interest will deal with "Flour from Chestnuts," "New Fruit Press," "The Mechanical Extraction of Cream," and (in a paper on John Bright) with the famous Corn Laws of England.

Mrs. Burnett's new story in Scribner will begin in the Midwinter (Feb.) number and will consist of four monthly parts, for each of which Mrs. Foote has drawn an illustration. The opening scene is at a North Carolina summer resort, and the theme is one which Mrs. Burnett seems fond of treating, viz: An affair of the heart between two people in widely different ranks of life. The contrasts of city and country life are strongly made in the characters, who are Miss Ferrol, a quasi-literary woman from New York in search of "new types," her brother, Lawrence Ferrol, who has a tendency to regard everything as "literary material," and "Louisiana," a simple-hearted country girl, ignorant alike of Ruskin or of Worth, and who is said to be one of the most attractive of Mrs. Burnett's characters.

The author of "That Lass o' Lowrie's" will contribute to the February St. Nicholas a story, called "Editha's Burglar," which is announced as one of the very best short stories ever written by Mrs. Burnett. Though written especially for children, it will, the editors say, interest old and young alike, by its plot, descriptions and dialogue. A little girl's interview with a burglar is made the chief theme, and some idea of the interest of the conversation may be gleaned from the fact that among the favors which she asks, are these: "If you 're going to burgle, won't you burgle QUIETLY?" and "If you 'd let me know your name and address, I'm sure papa would aid you to some other profession." The burglar happens to be a good-natured fellow, and only gives to the latter proposition the disappointing answer: "To think o' me a forgettin' my card-case, an' a leavin' it on the pianner when I come out! I might hev knowed I'd a wanted it!"

—Buy the Excelsior axe. It is fully warranted and for sale only by W. H. Kiblinger. 1-tf.

—The best ham-sausage sold in this market is made by Mitch Houston with his steam chopper.

—Call at W. H. Kiblinger's and see the Iron Mountain cook stove, the best in the market. 1-tf.

—If John Leasure has good luck, he will be married on the thirty-first of February. Now guess.

—Wanted, by W. H. Kiblinger, 4,000 feet of ½ or 1 inch dry bass-wood or cotton-wood lumber.

—Children's, boys' and men's overcoats, men's, boys' and children's clothing at McQuiston & Ralston's.

—Mrs. Fanny Kelly, who was captured by the Indians in 1864, will give a lecture in Auburn this evening.

—Clyde Moore has taken another change of base, and is now attending school at Notre Dame, near South Bend.

—Mitch Houston is prepared to furnish ham-sausage and bologna by the ton. Try it and you will use no other.

—Have you headache, pain in the back, coated tongue, or dizziness? If so, take "Sellers' Liver Pills," and be cured.

—Harry Yesbera attended a party at Fort Wayne, Friday evening, at the residence of Mrs. Henderson on east Main street.

—You bet, when coughs and colds are flying about like gnats in a storm, "Dr. Sellers' Cough Syrup" is a sure cure.

—For the small sum of 35 cents you can hear Hon. Will. Cumback at the Presbyterian church next Tuesday evening.

—Ellsworth Draggoo was conveyed by Dr. Spooner to the house of correction last Tuesday. He is seventeen years of age.

—Gentlemen, protect yourselves from the cold with one of those splendid fur beaver overcoats, to be had at McQuiston & Ralston's.

—Geo. Grund thinks the Lord must be on his side, as this weather is in beautiful conformity with the condition of his wardrobe.

—Ladies, buy your husbands, brothers or your sweethearts one of those fine moustache cups or shaving mugs at McQuiston & Ralston's.

—The lumber has been secured for a sidewalk along the south side of Seventh street from Ensley's corner east to Eckhart's carriage factory.

—Lawyers Ryan and Clutter, of Hicksville; Eells and Welker, of Albion, and Judge Collins, of Columbia City, were in the city last Tuesday.

—We are under obligations to Bro. Kist, of the Butler Record, and Bro. Loveland, of the Corunna Headlight, for teachers' institute proceedings.

—Buy your kerosene oil of McQuiston & Ralston, and they will give you a new Acme wick, and then you will have no more trouble with poor lights.

His Malice Gets the Better of His Common Sense.

The writer in last week's Republican, who gets a diarrhea of words and grinds out a column of cuteness concerning the names of parties who are interested in the publication of the Courier, gets badly off his platform, and he and the subscribers to this paper know it. Probably by the time the Republican gets within a couple of hundred as many subscribers as the Courier now has—if fortune should smile upon it to such an extent in the course of future years—it will learn that there is a class of readers in this region of country who cannot be made to believe that the moon is made of green cheese, just whenever it is optional with that paper to so misrepresent. Every intelligent subscriber in this community knows that the Courier has but two editors and proprietors, and that they alone write the matter contained in its editorial and local columns, with the exception of an occasional article which bears the signature of the writer. Has the Republican little enough regard for veracity to make a similar statement? We presume it has. The author of the above-mentioned column of bosh also insinuates that the Courier is furnished for $1.50 a year when we "can't get $2.00." As far as this is concerned, we simply defy the Republican, or any of its brilliant editorial contributors, to prove the assertion. The Courier endeavors to be courteous to all and partial to no person; its invariable subscription rates are $1.50 in advance, inside the county, or $2.00 per annum if paid at the end of the year; and with one single exception, where a subscriber claimed a misunderstanding and refused to pay but $1.50,—in which case we accepted his explanation and cut him from the list,—we have adhered strictly to this rule.

Further than this we do not care what unwarranted statements the Republican may make, one way or the other, and its editor may chew on the above facts to his heart's content.

A Debased Wretch.

The most depraved of human beings, from our standpoint, is that man who, by promise of marriage, wins the confidence of a young girl, effects her ruin and eternal disgrace, and then deserts her. The severest and fullest penalty of the law is too mild a punishment for such fiends, yet their acts are passed by comparatively unnoticed, while the poor girl who has thus trusted and been led astray by the man she loves, must carry her shame to the grave.

From a conversation overheard a day or two since, concerning a transaction of this character at Hicksville, we learn of a case which, if true, exceeds anything we have heard of in this region for supreme hellishness. It appears that a young couple living near Hicksville, Ohio, had made preparations to go to Defiance last Monday and be married, but, owing to some difficulty in procuring a license, they did not go. They did go to a hotel, however, where the deceiver registered as man and wife, and they were assigned a room together. In the morning the young man got up, steered his worthless carcass into the nearest saloon, got drunk and left for parts unknown. The young lady, thus abandoned, is about distracted, and the case assumes a more deplorable aspect from the fact that she is said to have been a girl of excellent character and good qualities, belonging to a most respectable family in that neighborhood. Our information concerning the affair cannot be deemed strictly reliable, and we trust it may not be; yet the gentleman from whom we heard the story told it in good faith. If true, we hope to hear of the capture of the sneaking scoundrel who perpetrated it, and of his final and everlasting condemnation.

Happy Souls,

Which now have but a single thought, their hearts having been made as one during the last month in the old year of 1879. Here they are in pairs:

Wilson Countryman and Maggie Maxwell, Benj. E. Ellinwood and Caroline Cissell, David D. Rineholt and Francelia Knott, James Pomeroy and Libbie Moore, Francis Leeson and Mary E. Stearns, Leonard D. Cahow and Melinda Coy, Albert Cherry and Anna Squares, Jacob D. Keeler and Diadem Monroe, Ira A. Richmond and Ida Porter, Francis M. Haverstock and Mabel A. Kelley, Alfred Haines and Viola Moore, Theodore Cattell and Lydia Freidt, Patrick Loague and Isolina L. Sheets, J. D. Edwards and Elva Gable, David Kagey and Mary Dawson, Ira J. Shook and Nellie Daniels, Levi Wise and Hannah R. Hathaway, Levi B. Showalter and Olive Dixon, Melvin Reynolds and Amanda Wagner, Chas. W. Kaley and Cyrelia A. Widney, Jacob Baltz and Ellen O. Carey, John L. Horn and Nettie Bair, Benj. F. Hostetter and Rebecca M. Ellenwood, Wellington H. Hollister and Ella Abbey, Wm. Working and Catherine Beck, Daniel Becker and Dennie Smith, David M. Ball and Zelma L. Bradley, Wm. Imler and Martha Yarde, Ammi Turney and Caroline Gonser.

That's all; and it wasn't a very good month for tieing up, either.

Must Be Sold.

One of the most desirable and best located residences for a business man in Auburn. Come early if you want to secure a bargain. Thos. H. Sprott.

—Frank Wolke and Wm. Stevens, of Fort Wayne, were sauntering around our streets yesterday. Frank is the same frank fellow on all occasions.

—The proceedings of the teachers' institute held at Corunna, and the monthly report of Richland school No. 10, will appear on the first page of next week's Courier.

—Hon. Will. Cumback will lecture at the Presbyterian church next Tuesday evening for the benefit of the public schools. Subject: "Invisible Some People."

—Dr. T. G. Matheny attends lectures and chopping bees at the medical college of Fort Wayne every week. He spent the greater part of last week in the city.

—The unusual number of witnesses required by cases in the circuit court this week has made things unusually lively. At the hotels guests have been "thicker'n four in a bed."

—Judge Picker has paid up all the old scores he ever owed Sam. Pommert, and he is more than even. Ask Sam. to tell you about it, and he will probably (not) do so.

—The Auburn Young Ladies' Christian Temperance Union (gee whiz, we're out of breath!) will give a social, to-morrow (Friday) evening, at the residence of J. A. McKay, where a good time can safely be counted on.

—All who received sample copies of Scribner and St. Nicholas, a few weeks ago, are reminded that they were sent at solicitation of Willis & Co., who will furnish you all magazines and periodicals at lowest rates.

—Mrs. F. P. Copper is at present visiting relations and friends at her old home in Fostoria, Ohio. Frank—well, he says he doesn't want any more in his'n; can't stand the bachelor business now as he used to.

—Hon. John Jenkins, of Concord township, and Homer M. Hemming, Esq., of Smithfield township, have traded farms, and in order to make the bargain more binding we smoked—at the expense of the traders.

—Max Rosenthal, the popular cigar man from Fort Wayne, was in this place this week, supplying his numerous customers. Max sells more hand-made cigars than any dealer within 100 miles of Fort Wayne, judging from the amount he sells in Auburn.

—List of unclaimed letters remaining in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., for the week ending Jan. 10, 1880: Mrs. Bridenhoof, Saly Bace, W. D. Gick and C. S. Lawton. Jos. Rainer, Postmaster.

—There is a probability that Mrs. Emma Molloy, the well-known and eminent worker in the temperance cause, will soon deliver one of her interesting lectures here, as she is now in communication with parties interested at this place.

—Information concerning the condition of the roads between this place and Waterloo will be cheerfully furnished by Alva Potter and Byron Rainier, who went up Saturday evening with return tickets and walked back Monday morning.

—Dick Edgerton and Will. Tyler, of Fort Wayne, spent a few hours in town Monday, the former on his way to Hicksville, Ohio, and the latter in the interest of Geo. S. Fowler, the Fort Wayne shirt-tailor, for whom Will. now travels.

—Miss Dora McBride, whose pleasant countenance used to shine in Sherm. Hollister's restaurant, is Dora McBride no longer. She began the new year by writing her name Dora Wade and opening housekeeping on her own hook.

—The appearance of the witness room in the court house, during its occupancy last Tuesday night by the delegation from Green and Noble townships, Noble county, indicated that whisky and tobacco are the chief commodities of that benighted part of Noble county.

—The admiration of the horsemen of Auburn is a large, well-made, 5-year-old gelding, recently purchased by Mr. Oscar Allen. The horse is a model coach-horse, and the man who furnishes a match for him can demand his own price and make a sale.

—Papers don't cost much in Montana. The Messenger, a little two-by-four hand-bill, published at Sheridan, Montana, every Saturday, only costs $3.50 a year, while the advertising space is valued at $200 a column. Great Christopher!

—The success of recent numbers of Scribner has been so marked, that the edition of the February number has been placed at 125,000. This number will contain the first part of Eugene Scuyler's illustrated life of Peter the Great, which is said to be graphic and interesting to an unusual degree.

—Tuesday afternoon, as Hank Altenberg, the well-known mail man on the B. & O., was sailing up one of our icy thoroughfares, with a valise in one hand and a basket of provender in the other, an idea struck him; it struck him with such forcible effect that Hank tossed his grub-basket over the nearest fence, fired his grip-sack out in the mud and laid his body, with remarkable celerity, at full length on the sidewalk. His athletic performance resulted in an injured knee-cap, though we are glad to state that the profuse application of arnica has thus far prevented anything serious.

—A very interesting surprise-party was given Miss Frankie Ford, by her numerous friends, last Monday evening—and it was a surprise, indeed, as she knew nothing of it until they marched in and took her by storm. It was given in view of her departure next day for Warsaw, where she will spend several weeks visiting her sister, Mrs. Geo. Patterson.

The two child songs by Alfred Tennyson, written especially for St. Nicholas, are to appear in the February issue. Both songs have been set to music under Mr. Tennyson's supervision, and one of the musical accompaniments forwarded by him will also be given in the same number.

—Willis & Co. have moved their large stock of books, stationery, news, notions, etc., into the room in the McIntyre block, formerly occupied by H. H. Stamets, where they will be pleased to see all their old patrons and as many new ones as may wish anything in their line. Come one and all, and we will make it to your interest to come again. 8-4t.

—A tramp, claiming to be from Pittsburgh (shoot the h), went to sleep on the St. Mary's river bank at Ft. Wayne, last Sunday, while overloaded with a cargo of benzine, and foiled off. Only for an old snag in his way, he would have taken a bath in the raging waters, and his own father couldn't then have recognized him as a native of Pittsburg—h. (Nearly forgot the h altogether that trip).

—The election of officers for the First National bank, held at the office of the bank last Tuesday, resulted as follows: Directors:—Jacob Walborn, C. A. O. McClellan, C. L. Luse, Isaac Hague, Ephraim Berry, J. E. Shilling, Guy Plumb, J. H. Ford and Wm. McIntyre. The board of directors elected the following executive officers: Jacob W[illegible], president; C. A. O. McClellan, vice-president; Wm. McIntyre, cashier.

—S. R. Mosher, commonly called "Sig.," who formerly resided in the suburbs of the classic village of Columbia City, where he left an unenviable reputation, was sentenced in the circuit court, last Saturday, to two years in the penitentiary with a fine of two dollars; and his accomplice, Wm. H. Butler, got six months in the county jail, all for feloniously appropriating sundry articles consisting of skunk-skins etc., at Waterloo. They will go and skin no more.

—From the Rockport (Ind.) Banner: There is no medicine in the world which has gained such fame as St. Jacobs Oil; this is, however, not in the least astonishing, when we consider its truly wonderful curative powers. Mr. F. Rodenburg, of Grandview, called at our office last week, and related the following circumstance: "I suffered with rheumatism for over six years; consulted many physicians and tried hundreds of remedies, but without avail. Having seen St. Jacobs Oil advertised in your paper, and heard of some astonishing cures, I sent to Rockport for a bottle of the Oil, and used it according to directions. The relief I felt was almost "electic." I got better at once, and now there is not a trace of rheumatism left in my body."

Dr. Hulburt.

When any doctor tells you "Catarrh is incurable," he confesses ignorance of how to cure it, and does an injustice to those who can, as well as to those who are perishing from lack of a cure. Such men, "wise in their own conceit," should remember that many diseases, such as small-pox, cholera, epilepsy, etc., were once called "incurable;" and while I could not probably cure either of these, there are those who can, and knowing this they give their well-tried remedies for these complaints, with the same confidence that I give the "Sure Cure" for catarrh, for I believe this disease is just as curable as others, and have never heard a good reason why it is not.

On the other hand, when any person tells you that he or his medicines are the only cure for catarrh (or any other disease), you may set him down as a bigger fraud than he imagines the public to be "gullible," but any man or means that does cure this most common and least understood of all diseases, is entitled to the heartfelt "God speed" which I cheerfully give him or them. I wish there were more of such, for the harvest truly is great but the successful laborers are few.

Impurity of the blood always accompanies catarrh. It must be treated constitutionally. Medicines which will cure scrofula or syphilis will cure catarrh—and nothing short of this will do it. By such treatment I radically cure catarrh, and it can be done by no other.

Sturgis Medical Dispensary.

A Complaint.

Editors Courier: I desire to call the attention of the school authorities to the noisy manner in which the pupils of the high school conduct themselves on our streets. It is simply a disgrace to civilization, and it seems to me education should embrace the teaching of good manners as well as that contained in books. The streets most frequented by this mob are occupied by law-abiding people who have done nothing to bring down this affliction. Screaming, yelling, hooting and thumping over the sidewalks is no very pleasant amusement, especially where sick people are confined. It is to be hoped that if there is a sufficient controlling influence it will be exercised so that common decency will be observed. Peace.

Special.

I have for sale at a sacrifice, one of the most desirable residence properties in Auburn. "First come, first served." 3-tf. Thos. H. Sprott.

A Grand Little Machine.

It saves money, it saves labor, it saves time, it saves strength and health, and gives pleasure to all families that use it. It is the Bissell Carpet Sweeper. Sold by T. V. Sembrig.

Notice of Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the Patrons of Husbandry of DeKalb county, Indiana, for a special purpose, Saturday, January 17, 1880, at Ensley's hall at 10 o'clock a. m.

By order of the deputy.

Notice to Tax-Payers.

Notice is hereby given that the warrant for the collection of the town tax of Auburn, Indiana, for the year 1879, is now in my hands. A prompt response is desired.

2 3w T. P. Scott, Marshal.

Appointment.

Dr. Hulburt can be consulted at his rooms in the Swineford house, Auburn, Ind., Monday, Jan. 19, in the afternoon, and Tuesday the 20th all day. We hope the afflicted will not lose this opportunity of consulting him. 3 2w

Lecture To-Night.

Mrs. Fannie Kelly will lecture on her captivity among the Sioux Indians this evening. Her subject will embrace: The attack, capture, march into the wilderness and massacre of child; attempts to escape, detection and punishments; life among the Indians, her ransom and release. Lecture will take place at the Methodist church. Doors open at 7½ o'clock; begin at 8. Mrs. Kelly comes endorsed by official [illegible] from the war and other departments of the U. S. government, by the church, etc.

Spencerville.

—Will. Stoffer's new edition—a boy.

—Frank Lancaster is visiting his parents at Muncie.

—Mrs. Minerva Sanders, of Pierson, Mich., is visiting her friends near town.

—W. W. Silberg is the happiest man on the river. Cause:—New daughter.

—Rumor has it that John Beams has bought H. H. Fales' interest in the furniture business.

—This community holds in possession a mean, contemptible saloon louse who has not spunk enough to attack an equal, but delights in beating his wife, upon whose labor he depends for the principal part of his support.

St. Joe.

—Mark Barney and B. Erick were among the visitors last Sunday.

—Rev. Oviatt, of Newville, preached to our people Sabbath last.

—Wm Dilley and Miss Martha Case commenced to travel in double harness Thursday.

—Mart. Jenkins, of Iowa, is visiting his father, John Jenkins, better known as Capt. Jenkins.

—We learn that Mr. Dilley lately purchased a farm out west, whither he will take his better half in a few days.

—Geo. Howey, formerly a resident of this vicinity, but now of Bryan, Ohio, is visiting with his son-in-law, M. D. Engle.

—Wm. Hamilton, who has been in Idaho for the past fifteen years, has returned and will settle down in the suburbs of Orangeville.

—J. A. Culbertson, deputy-sheriff, came here Friday night and arrested a man hailing from Bryan, Ohio. It is hardly fair, Jim, to take a man when he is unhitching his team and has his back turned.

—Judging from the number of Newvillians in town Saturday, there must be another railroad in view, and some of the boys were out locating, in the hope that it will not strike the farm of O. H., as he charges too much for the right of way.

—Frank Mitchell, of the firm of Mitchel Brothers, druggists, returned Friday last to his home in Butler. He has been troubled with a lung disease which makes it necessary for him to have more outdoor exercise. Frank has made many warm friends here, by his gentlemanly conduct, who will wish him a speedy recovery. A. A. A.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

CONSISTING OF WILMINGTON, FRANKLIN, TROY AND STAFFORD TOWNSHIPS—HELD AT BUTLER JAN. 9-10, 1880.

Exercises opened by county superintendent, by reading a portion of the Scriptures and a preliminary speech. His remarks were commented on by Prof. Fyke and Miss Christie Blaker. Addressed by Mr. Hawkins upon the best methods of conducting spelling classes, followed by remarks upon the same subject by several teachers. Mr. Tomlinson conducted a reading class with considerable ability. There were some criticisms upon emphasis by several of the teachers. Questions answered by Mr. Fitters, in a manner which showed his ability in a school-room. Primary teaching was discussed, with a great deal of energy, by Miss. Baxter and Miss Shoub. Miss Christie Blaker discussed the causes of the French and Indian wars. Recitation by class, and instruction by the superintendent. Mr. French delivered a lecture upon writing which was good. A number of teachers explained their method of teaching writing. Recitation with class by Miss Jennie Baxter—subject, geography. A lively discussion followed, which brought out some good ideas about the manner of teaching primary geography.

EVENING SESSION.

Exercises opened by a song. After that, a reading class, conducted by Mrs. A. J. Baxter, with pupils selected from the teachers present, which was followed by a song. Prof. Fyke delivered an able and interesting lecture upon "Essentials to success." The session closed with a song.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Exercises opened with reading by the superintendent, followed by a song. Instruction given in arithmetic, by Mr. Bell of Stafford. Instruction given in writing by Miss Scovill, of Stafford. Mr. Baxter, of Franklin, lectured [illegible] recitation by class. Mr. Coder, of Stafford, explained his method of conducting a recitation in geography. Mr. Walters, of Wilmington, manner of teaching arithmetic, or "The definition of government bonds." J. J. Eakright, discussion of application of per centage and class exercise. Afterwards an essay by Frank A. Brink "How to secure good lessons." Noon.

AFTERNOON.

Exercises opened with music. Mr. Rugsley, of Wilmington, illustrated the manner of teaching grammar and the manner of analyzing sentences. Mr. Whitzel illustrated his manner of teaching geography. Miss Mary Brundage, essay on "Programmes of recitation." Class exercise by Mrs. Jones, who illustrated her manner of conducting reading class. Mrs. C. C. Bowden gave her manner of securing the most work in the least time. Mr. Houser gave his manner of conducting a reading class, also the use of the diacritical marks. Mr. Calvin Maxwell: Subject—"History; the civil war, its causes and decisive battles." Mr. A. Beard, of Franklin: "Duties of teachers before entering the school-room." Judson Kiser, of Wilmington, discussion on physiology. Mr. Jennings, "What circumstances make teaching pleasant." Miss Allie Shoub: Essay—subject, "Advantages or disadvantages of a code of rules." Miss Jennie Blaker, grammar, correction of errors and formation of sentences. Mr. Sawvel illustrated the manner of preventing whispering in school. Miss Sarah Allen: Essay—subject, "The duty of teachers to parents and trustees." Mr. Carmon showed his manner of conducting a class in written spelling. Report of the committee on resolutions was then presented and the following passed:

Resolved, That we tender our heartfelt thanks to the people of Butler for their hospitality.

Resolved, That teachers be furnished with proper apparatus, and that the house and surroundings be properly arranged.

Resolved, That we regret the absence of a part of our fellow-teachers.

Resolved, That those who were unable to meet with us should be excused for such absence.

Resolved, That we, as teachers, have derived great benefit from this institute.

Resolved, That we thank the trustees of Butler graded schools for the use of the school building.

Resolved, That we show our appreciation of our superintendent's untiring energy by our co-operation with him.

Resolved, That we, with profound sorrow, hear of the dangerous illness of J. C. Bowersox, to whom many of us owe so much educationally, and that we extend our heartfelt sympathy in his present affliction.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this institute be published in the county papers.

Allie E. Shoub,
Christie Blaker,
J. J. Eakright,
Calvin Maxwell,
Almon Jennings,
Committee.

—After a few remarks by the superintendent, the institute adjourned.

DEATH OF KING OLD YEAR.

BY C. L. MARION.

The day was one of bleak December's;
Of this month's days it was the last;
The wind was bold, and blew so cold
That even the grate's glowing embers
Appeared to feel the howling blast.

Each member of the family
Drew closer 'round the cheerful hearth,
Father, mother, I and brother
Composed the group quite fair to see,
Though sadness reigned instead of mirth.

For mournfully the town church-spire
Poured forth that night a funeral knell;
The old elm groaned and [illegible] moaned,
It sounded like a muffled lyre,
This solemn tolling of the bell.

It tolled the death of one more year,
Hied way upon the winter's blast.
How with soft tread was borne the dead,
On its shapeless, shadowy bier,
Silently to that great vault—the Past.

This thought occurred: I'll stay and see
The New Year in and the Old expire;
But my brother, sire and mother
Cared not in this to join with me;
"Greet him for all," they said, "we'll retire."

I drew my chair close to the grate,
And watched the time-piece near the door,
Each quick second clearly beckoned
The Old Year closer to the fate
That years on thousands met before!

And, as I pondered o'er that thought,
Knocks at the door came faint and slow.
Somewhat afright I took the light
To see who had our cottage sought
For shelter from the drifting snow.

How I drew the bolt I scarce can tell;
The door flew back with sudden jerk,
And across the mat—sad sight was that—
A white-haired stranger prostrate fell.
Where death, I feared, had done his work.

Alarmed gazed father in his face;
"Girl!" he cried, "'tis, 'tis King Old Year!
His wraps exchange, the couch arrange,
Then quick! some wine from yonder case;
But that he'll live I have no fear."

'Twas true: our Liege soon oped his eyes,
Then sat erect and glanced around.
"Oh! King, what tide," my father cried,
"Has launched thee here as from the skies?
Pray is thy head to be uncrowned?"

A wealth of silvery hair he bowed,
Or swept, methought, then heaved a sigh,
[illegible] raised his head and sadly said,
"[illegible] Time is strict, of strictness proud;
Soon I'm dethroned—aye!—doomed to die!"

"No, no, good King! you must not die,"
We all exclaimed in earnest tone;
"None can complain; you justly reign;
Oh live, great King, the foe defy,
And unrelenting hold [illegible]."

"Ah, words will naught avail," he said,
"No might on earth can save me now;
My time has come, and I must home—
Must pass the portals of the dead,
And there before the Maker bow.

"Most dreadful thought! Yet none need fear
Who do not God's commands o'erlook;
But woe to those that join His foes;
Best now they check their base career,
And a new leaf turn in life's great book.

"See!" he cried, pointing t'ward the clock;
"When those two hands reach twelve to-night,
Sounds Gabriel's horn, then I'll be home
To join at once the spirit flock,
And leave King New Year to his right."

Gazed all eyes upon the dial;
But moments few had he to stay;
That death he met with some regret
Is, methinks, beyond denial—
With mournful sobs he passed away.

Clang, t-wang—twelve the clock was striking;
With a start I woke, chilled well-nigh through;
The fire was out beyond a doubt;
Old Year, too, was not much lacking—
Just in time I woke to greet the New.
BLOOMINGTON, Ill.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

We were tired of boarding, my husband and I; had been tired of it for some time, and this morning of which I write matters had reached a crisis. The steak was burned, omelet flabby, coffee weak. The last thing my husband said to me as he was about to leave the house was:

"You had better look around to-day, and if you can find a nice flat or part of a house, for $50 or $60 a month, secure it."

So behold me an hour later, diligently perusing the columns of the Herald. Ah! what is this?

AT WILLIAMS' BRIDGE—A cozy, partly-furnished cottage of ten rooms, surrounded by fruit-trees, one acre of ground. Rent, $50 per month. Only five minutes' walk from depot. Inquire of the blacksmith for keys, particulars, etc.

That advertisement was very alluring to me. Visions of a hammock under shady trees, of clucking motherly hens and little downy broods of chickens; of a broad piazza, gay with hanging baskets of beautiful plants, and made comfortable by low, broad-armed rockers, and a soft, wooing, perfume-laden breeze, which should always wander through it.

Visions of all these delectable things ran through my head, and I sprung to my feet, donned dress, bonnet and gloves, and then I remembered I had forgotten to ask hubbie for money, and I had very little in my portemonnaie. Ah, well! never mind. There was enough to take me to Williams' bridge and back, and with that comforting reflection I started out.

It was a beautiful morning in early spring, and I was gorgeous in a new suit of Bismarck brown, bonnet and gloves to match. I would not hide its glories by a wrap of any kind, and indeed I did not feel the necessity of one, so soft were the breezes abroad that morning, so warm the sun.

I took the cars at the Forty-second street depot, and soon arrived at my destination. I found the blacksmith without any difficulty, and stated my business.

"Will you walk or ride over, ma'am?"

"Why, I will walk. It cannot be far."

"Well, ma'am, I don't mind going over with you to show the house; but unless you're a purty fast walker it'll take you nigh onto two hours to go and return."

"Oh!" I said, "not that house; this one—see?" showing him the advertisement. "Only five minutes' walk from the depot."

"Yes, I know that's what it says, and I've often said it wasn't just the thing for Seth Howard to lie so like thunder about that house. Will you ride over, ma'am?"

What a disappointment! There was no use in looking at a house so far from the depot.

"No, I thank you. When does the next train leave for the city?"

"At 3 o'clock, ma'am."

Three o'clock. And it was but 12 now. My fine new frock, that had been so comfortable in the sheltered city streets, was uncomfortable enough here. The wind came sweeping over the vast open space around me. I shivered with cold. The blacksmith seemed to take pity on my forlorn condition.

"If you don't want to wait that long, [illegible] my boy'll drive you down to the Four Corners for 50 cents, and from there you can take the horse-cars to the city."

I gladly accepted this proposition, and ten minutes later "the boy"—a shock-headed, sleepy-eyed person of 25 or so—drove up for me, and we started.

Oh! that drive to the Four Corners—shall I ever forget it?

The wind painted my cheeks and nose, threw dust in my eyes, and went straight through my shivering, defenseless body. At last the gentle youth at my side drove up before a little one-storied structure, and informed me that we had reached our destination. I saw no car in sight, and said so.

"Well, ye see, ma'am, they don't run very often—every half hour or so. Maybe you won't have long to wait. Gee up, there."

And he was off without more ado.

The little dwelling was the only house in sight. It's paper shades bore the legend, "Oysters and billiards."

It was very cold. I opened the door.

It opened on a narrow passage, with a door on either side. To the right was a kitchen; to the left the saloon. Two men were seated at one of the tables therein. A big, raw-boned Irish woman stepped to the door of the kitchen and asked what she could do for me. I told her I was very cold, and asked permission to stand by her stove a minute while waiting for the car.

"Certainly, ma'am. Walk right in here, ma'am."

And she dusted a chair with her apron and placed it by the stove for me.

At the same time she snapped her fingers, and a huge mastiff, who was lying under the table, arose, and stretched himself across the threshold of the door.

Something in the action struck me as being queer.

I glanced at the two men in the saloon. The one facing me was talking in a low tone to his companion, who was looking over his shoulder at me. Two more villainous faces I never beheld. I was alarmed. No one knew of my visit to Williams' bridge. How easily I could be murdered in this lonely place.

I looked at the woman. Her face was broad and stolid, and she was looking sharply at me from under beetling brows, with little, beady, black eyes. I glanced with a sinking heart at the dog. His head was stretched out between his huge paws, his eyes, red and horrible, gazed at me most steadily. I shuddered.

"Is it afraid of the dog ye are, ma'am? Ah, thin, niver fear. Sure he'll not touch ye unless I give the word, and thin I'd not give a groat for yer life. Ah, he's a good dog, is Rory. Perhaps ye'd like to know how that same dog saved me life, ma'am?"

And then, not waiting for an answer:

"Ye see this is the only place of the kind for three miles round, and I does a nice little business here. But Saturday is me day. I gives a nice little lunch of chowder, and bread and cheese, and that brings 'em all here. You may be bound I rakes in a nate little pile of silver.

"Well, one Saturday night, after a roaring business, I closed me house at 12 o'clock, as is me custom, and then went up to me little room under the roof to count me money. Ye wouldn't think there was a room up there, would ye, ma'am? Well, there is, thin. It's little enough, but it's there, with a little windie and a shed under it that slopes nearly to the ground. Well, I seated meself at a little table, and I took out me money. I put the dollars (there wasn't many of them) by themselves, the half dollars by themselves, the quarters by themselves, and so on.

"Well, there it was, all out on the table, a shinin' most beautiful, when—holy mother of Moses! what should I see on the floor forninst me, but a man's shadow! I turned, and he clutched me. He was a strong man, but I am a strong woman, and a desperate one then, too. I had worked long and hard for that money, and I fought for it. I was holding me own pretty well, when the comb fell out of me hair. Down it come, and before ye could say Jack Robinson, that villain twisted his hand in it. He pulled me head back, I saw the gleam of a knife, and I just closed me eyes and put up a little prayer to the Virgin, and in that instant there came a crash of glass, a rushing sound, and that dog had me gintleman by the throat.

"Well, ma'am, I held on to the hand that held the knife and called 'police!' and for once they came when they were wanted. And that man's in the penitentiary now, serving out a term of years. But tell me, ma'am—was it the Virgin, think you, sent Rory?"

"I have not the slightest doubt of it. And now, my good woman, I am very grateful to you for the seat at your warm fire, and if you will allow me to give you a trifle you will please me very much. Unfortunately, I have but a small amount with me. See," opening my portemonnaie wide—"only 50 cents. You are quite welcome to half of it."

She came and looked in the portemonnaie as I held it open, one of the ill-looking men in the adjoining room slouching to the door and looking also. She took the money, snapped her fingers again, and the huge beast arose and left the threshold clear.

With a beating heart I left the room, and once more stood free and unharmed but in God's pure sunlight and fresh air.

And now was I in any danger, I wonder, or did I only imagine their faces were sinister and their actions strange? Well, I shall never know now, for I have no desire to visit the Four Corners again in order to ascertain.

A Serpent in a Cider Cask.

A farmer living near Salem, Pa., purchased a barrel of cider from a neighbor, of which he and one of his sons took a drink. Shortly after both became violently ill, and exhibited undoubted symptoms of having been poisoned. It was not known then that the cider had been the cause of their misfortune, until the farmer who had sold it to them examined and tasted it, when he, too, became ill. All three were confined to their beds for several days, and in the meantime the speculation was rife among the other farmers of the neighborhood as to what had poisoned the cider. When the sick ones recovered, the head of the barrel, whose contents had created so much trouble, was knocked in and the cider run out, when those present were horrified to find the body of a large black snake firmly pressed against the bottom of the vessel.

Between Life and Death.

A New York paper refers to some well-known cases where some persons who were supposed to be at the point of death, and, after having been given up by physicians, have rallied and are now living and well. Charles C. Waite, of the Brevoort House, was reported for some time at the point of death, and his death was announced by telegraph all over the country. The report was contradicted the day following, but everybody supposed that it was merely premature; it would be true within twenty-four hours. His physicans had given him up; his death was a foregone conclusion; his friends and kinsmen already mourned him as no more. But there was a favorable change. He has steadily improved, and now he is pronounced out of danger. Dr. Quackenbos has been pronounced, within a fortnight, to be near his end. There was, his medical attendants said, not a vestige of hope; those near and dear bade him farewell, and awaited, with such resignation as they could command, the last sad scene. He, also, has well-nigh recovered; his friends almost regard him as one risen from the grave. Thurlow Weed has had, during the last ten years, divers illness and accidents, any one of which, it was supposed, might prove mortal. And still Weed is seen walking almost daily in Lower Broadway, not very nimbly, perhaps, but quite as nimbly as he has moved any time since the civil war. Not many months since James Watson Webb was regarded by a number of doctors to be dying. For days his end was hourly expected; but he is still on the planet, and in very good condition, considering that he has worked hard all his life, and is on the eve of 78. Charles O'Conor's minutes were presumed to be numbered several years since. Every preparation had been made for his funeral; the eminent barrister had been relegated to the past. But he refused point-blank to take the medicines or follow the treatment prescribed, and he is seen to-day in his old haunts, his mind undimmed by the untiring labors of seventy-six years.

Remarkable Statement.

The following, from Maj. W. W. Nevin's letter in the Philadelphia Press, from Glasgow, Scotland, is a remarkable statement to make:

I close with a Scottish note of to-day which illustrates how thoroughly the old Scotch spirit of integrity—the spirit which willingly sacrifices itself for right; the spirit which utterly refuses compromise or half-way settlement with wrong, is alive and burning in Scotland to-day. It is one of the principles of the United Presbyterian Church not to accept money for sacred uses from unclean hands. They decline to take for God, as His agent or minister, money that, as far as they can see, has not been honestly made.

When the great Glasgow bank failure took place here some of the directors were members of the Union Presbyterian congregation of the city, and one or more of them were large givers—almost the support, I am told, of their particular churches. When, by the judgments of their civil courts, they were declared to have been guilty of systematic fraud for some years back, their liberal donations were all returned to them, although it more than crippled the congregations who did it.

This fact was told me not by any of themselves, but by a learned clergyman of the Established Church of Scotland, who bore honorable testimony to their devotion to principle, and their own profession. Match it.

A Cat Story.

A first-rate cat story has come to our notice from an entirely authentic source. The scene is laid in the village of Yarmouth. An aged gentleman and his housekeeper constitute the family, and their old cat finds the lines are fallen to her in pleasant places. Family prayers are the rule each evening in the household, and the cat fell into the habit of regular and punctual attendance. No other of the cares that proverbially crowd a cat's life were ever allowed to crowd this religious duty. At the signal for prayers she would even leave a mouse half caught, or give a doomed bird a longer lease of existence, and decorously compose herself in the lap of the housekeeper, with an air of attention to the service that was highly edifying. At the final "amen," she went friskily about her business. But in an evil day there came a kitten that was deemed superfluous, and sentence of death was passed upon it. The head of the family undertook the execution of the sentence, and, unknown to him, the cat was a witness to the scene. From that day the cat refused to attend the morning service, and can not now be induced to listen to the prayers of one who had so shocked her sensibilities. She faithfully performs all other duties as before, and socially purrs for the family on all secular occasions, but seems to say, "Let my religious hours alone."—Portland (Me.) Transcript.

AT Santa Rosa, Cal., Dr. Ruth gave an exhibition of his skill with the rifle, breaking ninety two glass balls out of 100. He also performed numerous other experiments—shooting a cigar out of his assistant's mouth, breaking a glass ball held in his assistant's fingers and on his head, shooting an apple out of his mouth, etc. He also broke several balls behind his back, sighting without a mirror, and among the most extraordinary feats was hitting a 5-cent piece tossed in the air at a distance of ten paces.

THE TAY BRIDGE.

A Marvel of Engineering Skill.

The Tay railway bridge crosses the river Tay about one mile above the city of Dundee, and in some ten miles inland from the ocean. Starting from the Newport side, or south end, the bridge crosses the river almost due north and south for about three-fourths of the distance, when it makes a curve to join the land line, which runs at right angles.

The bridge carries a single line of rails, is about 10,360 feet long, and contains 85 spans, 11 of which are 245 feet long each, and the remainder are from 67 to 227 feet long. They are all lattice girders except one of 166 feet, which is bowstring girders.

The roadway is carried on the bottom booms of the girders of the eleven 245-foot spans and two 227-foot spans, which allows a clean water-way of 88 feet for the passage of vessels.

The piers are of varied construction, but in most cases the foundations are formed of iron cylinders filled with brick and concrete. Fourteen of the piers are all brick; 33 are brick for 5 feet above high-water mark, finished with a stone belting upon which are carried groups of cast-iron columns braced together. Twenty-eight consist of groups of cast-iron columns braced together, starting from the cylinders, and are incased with brick to 5 feet above high water. Two are cast-iron cylinders throughout and filled with concrete, and the others are of cast-iron.

The bridge is slightly arched, the rise from the south end to the highest point being 1 foot in 365, and from the north end to the highest point it is 1 in 74. Looking at the bridge from Dundee to Newport it had a very graceful appearance, and was universally regarded the handsomest structure of the kind in Great Britain.

The first public expression of belief that such a bridge was practicable was made in the Dundee Advertiser in November, 1863. In October, 1864, the same paper announced that a bill would be applied for to sanction its construction, and the bill was presented in Parliament in December of that year.

From this time forward almost innumerable obstacles had to be met and overcome, and the act of Parliament under which it was constructed was not obtained until 1870, and on the 8th of May, 1871, the North British Railway Company entered into a contract with Charles De Bergue & Co., of London, Cardiff and Manchester, for the execution of the work, the contract price being $1,085,000, and the time specified for its completion 3 years. Six years were, however, required in which to do the work, and the total cost was $1,750,000—the obstacles in the way being in several respects much greater than was originally anticipated.

The ceremony of laying the first foundation stone took place on Saturday, July, 22, 1871. At first but about seventy men were employed on the work of constructing the piers, but this force was rapidly increased until some 250 men were regularly employed.

The ordinary plan of constructing piers, by forming coffer-dams, was not attempted, but, instead, the piers were built on shore and floated out to their destination. The plan first adopted was to build and sink separately the two cylinders composing each pier. Each cylinder of wrought iron was in the first place filled with lining of brick up to the lower-water level, leaving an opening in the center, and, when finished to this extent it was floated out by means of pontoons and sunk in its permanent position. The weight of each of the first or smaller piers was about forty tons. Having been sunk in its proper position, the water was forced out of the cylinder by air compression. Workmen then descended the shaft, and, as they excavated the soil the pillar settled down until rock was reached, which was usually at from 8 to 15 feet below the bottom of the river. The foundation was then properly adjusted, and the shaft filled with concrete, so that the pier formed one solid mass of brick-work and concrete, incased in iron.

Owing to the narrowness of the base of the cylinders (9¼ feet) much difficulty was found in sinking them, as it often happened that one side would be resting on a huge bowlder while the other was sinking through the quicksand. In consequence of this unusual settling there were three instances in which they toppled over and were lost.

In consequence of this difficulty it was finally decided to construct each pier in one complete structure instead of two separate pillars. For the construction of one of these combined piers there was provided a wrought-iron base 3 feet high, 22½ feet long, and 10 feet wide, with flat sides and circular ends. The base was surrounded with a conical cast-iron of 5 feet length, furnished with a top flange 2½ feet wide, the base and sub-base constituting a hollow chamber 8 feet high, sufficiently large for 12 men to work in. On the broad flange of the sur-base brick work was carried up to the level of low water in 2 circular towers 9¼ feet in diameter, surrounded by iron cylinders of ¼ inches of metal, a shaft 4 feet in diameter being left in each tower for the descent of the workmen to the chamber at the bottom. To transport this mass weighing 140 tons from its temporary resting-place to the bed of the river, 10 pontoons, each bearing 2 iron girders, besides hydraulic rams, each capable of lifting 60 tons, were floated, so as to bring the pier into proper position. The rams were connected with the base of the pier by wrought-iron links which were provided with vertical-suspending bars. To these were connected a pair of balancing crosshead plates by a central bolt, the hydraulic rams being similarly provided with crosshead plates, while the upper and lower rests were attached to the wrought-iron links. The rams had a stroke of 12 inches, and the links, which passed through the slot-holes in their base, were perforated with holes 12 inches apart, corresponding to the stroke of the ram.

Being fixed to the pier at low water, the girders gradually lifted it as the rising tide raised the pontoons, and the whole mass was subsequently towed out at high water, the weight of the pier, which was submerged eight feet, being carried on steel pins, passing through the holes in the links and resting on bearings provided on the base of the rams.

To lower the pier the crossheads on the rams were connected with the links at the top of the stroke. Then the hydraulic pumps with a few strokes raised the pier an eighth of an inch, when the steel pins were drawn out and placed a foot higher up. By means of cocks the water was then let out of the rams—first on one side and then on the other—and the pin was lowered until the steel pins rested on the bearings again. The crossheads were then disconnected and the rams pumped up again to the top of the stroke. As the lowering proceeded links were added, and the whole apparatus, though weighing 140 tons, was under complete control. After the pier was in place temporary caissons were provided, and the brickwork completed.

There was used in the construction of the bridge 9,801 tons of iron, 90,600 cubic feet of timber, 4,350,000 bricks, and 26,350 cubic yards of stone.

The Tay bridge was formally opened May 31, 1878, in presence of an immense concourse of people, which included a great number of distinguished persons and leading railway officials, since which time it has been in constant use, and has been of great value to the city of Dundee, and to that entire section of the country.

IN one of our sleeping-cars in America there was an old bachelor who was annoyed by the continued crying of a child and the ineffectual attempts of the father to quiet it. Pulling aside the curtain and putting out his head, he said: "Where is the mother of that child? Why doesn't she stop that nuisance?" The father said, very quietly: "The mother is in the baggage-car in her coffin; I am traveling home with the baby. This is the second night I have been with the child, and the little creature is wearying for its mother. I am sorry if its plaintive cries disturb any one in this car." "Wait a minute," said the old bachelor. The old man got up and dressed himself, and compelled the father to lie down and sleep, while he took the babe himself. The old bachelor stilling the cry of that babe all night was a hero. Italian Postal Curiosities.

The distribution of letters is, in fact, one of the weakest points in the Italian postal system. Except in large towns the postoffice does not profess to make any house-to-house distribution at all, except on the payment of a small fee, generally a sou for each packet delivered to the postman; and in the large towns the delivery is done in a very careless manner. The postman rarely takes the trouble to climb the stairs to the different apartments, except just before Christmas, but contents himself with leaving all the letters for a house with a porter, who delivers them whenever he happens to be going up-stairs; if the porter is not in the way the letters go back into the bag until the next round is made, or are even sometimes left at a shop near. No wonder then that letters frequently miscarry without such willful intention as the postman showed who was discovered one Christmas stuffing all his letters into a sewer grating that he might get the sooner to his Christmas dinner. The excuse for non-delivery is that with houses of five or six stories the work is too hard for the postman; but the remedy for that is obvious. It is only fair to say that the postoffice does not recognize this haphazard distribution; but complaints only remedy the evil for a time, and somehow one's letters seem to miscarry more frequently after making them. As a consequence most business houses pay a small fee to the postoffice to have a box of their own, into which all of their letters are put, and withdrawn by a messenger.

The difficulties put in the way of cashing postoffice orders (and also, it may be added, of obtaining registered letters) are most vexatious. You must produce some one to identify you who is known to the officials, and it is easy to see how difficult this may often be; otherwise a notarial certificate is required, and that is only removing the difficulty a step further.—Pall Mall Gazette.

BY THE HEARTH.

BY ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS.

You come too late!
'Tis far on in November.
The wind strikes bleak
Upon the cheek
That careth rather to keep warm
(And where's the harm?)
Than to abate
One jot of its calm color for your sake.
Watch! See! I stir the ember
Upon my lonely hearth, and bid the fire wake.

And think you that it will?
'Tis burned, I say, to ashes.
It smolders cold
As graveyard mold.
I wish, indeed, you would not blow
Upon it so!
The dead to kill.
I say, the ghosts of fires will never stir,
Nor women lift the lashes
Of eyes wept dim, howe'er you're shine or love her!

Ah, sweet surprise!
I did not think such shining
Upon the gloom
Of this cold room
Could fall. Your even, strong, calm breath
Calls life from death.
The warm light lies
At your triumphant feet, faint with desire
To reach you. See! The lining
Of violet and of silver in that sheath of fire!

If you would care—
Although it is November—
I will not say
A bitter nay
To such a gift for building fires,
And though it tires
Me to think of it—I'll own to you
(If you can stir the ember)
It may be found at last, just warm enough for two!

The Government Clerk.

So enervating is the life in the department, through little work and sure pay, that the young man who has once experienced its relaxing influence loses all good for active business life. Not long ago a gentleman acquaintance of mine tried to secure the services of a young fellow employed in the Interior Department. The latter once had been noted for his energy, quickness and activity; he had taken care of himself since he was a boy. His early life had bred in him unusual habits of self-reliance, confidence and energy. Three years ago he was one of the most faithful, untiring workers. A little over a year ago he secured, through a friend, a place in the Interior Department, at a salary of $100 a month. It is a place where he has not the remotest chance of promotion. Through this year of non-action the lad has been thoroughly ruined for active business. When offered the other day a business place with equal pay, with chances of promotion, but coupled with a slight risk, so far as responsibilities are concerned, he refused to come out of his snug nest, where he has nothing to do and no responsibilities, to take the chances that a little over a year ago he would have snatched at eagerly as the foundation of future fortune.—Washington letter.

The Word.

Voice of the Holy Spirit, making known
Man to himself, a witness swift and sure;
Warning, approving, true, and wise, and pure,
Counsel and guidance that misleadeth none!

The myths and parables of the primal years,
Whose letter kills, by Thee interpreted
Take healthful meanings fitted to our needs;
And, in the soul's vernacular, express
The common law of simple righteousness.
Hatred of cant and doubt of human creeds
May well be felt; the unpardonable sin
Is to deny the Word of God within!

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

How Martin Luther Was Cured.

Ordinarily the great reformer Luther was less liable to doubts and gloom of spirit than his friend Melancthon. But he was a man of terrible impetuosity; and when he did fall into a fit of darkness he drove all before him.

At one time, when danger threatened, and nothing seemed to prosper in the mighty work he was doing, he became so despondent that his friends were alarmed. He did not sit and mope as other men do when they are melancholy, for Luther was not one of the silent kind.

It was this fact that made his mood dreadful. He was like a strong steed running with a broken rein. His strange actions and bitter words led some to fear that his great labors and burdens had shaken his reason.

His fellow-reformers and his best friends (some of them rich and powerful ones) shook their heads and said, "We must get Doctor Martin out of the way. He needs rest. Who knows but he'll say or do something to wreck the whole cause?"

This time, however, they were puzzled to know how to manage it. Once they had shut him up a year in Wartburg Castle to save his own life. It seemed absurd enough to think of shutting up Luther to save the reformation. But they must do something. It was hardly safe now, as it usually had been, to let him alone till his grand faith worked itself out of its eclipse.

Finally they concluded to try a method common among the old prophets, who often taught and rebuked great men by enigmas and parables. Luther's wife, the good and gentle Catherine Bora, was taken into confidence, and her love and solicitude for him made her, no doubt, the best person who could have been chosen to administer medicine to the gloomy man's mind.

The next time Luther went to his house, he found it silent. To miss his welcome at the door was a surprise to him, and changed the current of his thoughts a little. Men in sour humors will say there is nothing bright, but they never like to be taken at their word.

He went through the rooms seeing no one, till he reached the parlor, and there his wife sat dressed in deep mourning, and weeping as if her heart would break.

"Why, Kate, what is the matter?" asked Luther, now thoroughly startled.

No answer but sobs and tears.

"Is the baby dead?" thinking of his youngest child, who had been ailing.

"No—worse than that—a great deal worse—I thought you knew," and then a fresh burst of tears.

"Kate—wife! what in the world can you mean? Tell me quick!" exclaimed the astonished reformer.

"O husband, hasn't the awful news reached you? Haven't you heard that our heavenly Father is dead, and His cause in the world has all gone to ruin?"

The horrified expression on Luther's face changed at once. He stood a moment looking at his wife, and then he began to shake with laughter. He laughed as loud, and as long, and as heartily, as he had ever laughed in his life—and that is saying much, for naturally Martin was a very merry-hearted man.

"Ah, Kate, Kate, my good wife," he said presently, "I read your riddle. God is not dead, but I have acted as though He were. You have taught me a good lesson."

And Martin Luther never forgot the lesson his wife taught him, when she showed him his black fancies in their own absurd funeral dress.

The Second Commandment.

The second commandment not only forbids worshiping graven images, but it forbids making them. At the time when the commandment was given the tendency to the worship of images was so strong that even the making of them could not be allowed. That danger having passed away from us, the prohibition has passed away for us, for the divine precepts are not arbitrary, but reasonable. When a dangerous road has been repaired, the sign, "No passing here," is taken away. So we read the commandment, "Thou shalt not make any graven image;" we respond, "Lord, incline our hearts to keep this law;" and we fill our houses with statuary. The spirit of the law has passed into other forms, prohibiting idols of the imagination, idols of the intellect, especially all religious views, practices, notions and doctrines that are unworthy of God, or dishonorable to Him.—Dr. J. M. Whiton.

Resurrection.

We believe that Christ was not only buried, but rose from the dead the third day. He rose with a material body identical in a true sense with the body as it was before He died, and yet omnipotently changed to incorruptibleness and power, and fitted for the fullness of the Spirit and a state of glory. We believe that Christ will come again the second time in that very resurrection body, and raise up His people with a like literal real body of incorruptibleness and power, controlled by the Spirit and fitted to the final state. "We look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body." The fall of man brought ruin to body as well as soul. Salvation is not complete till body, as well as soul, is redeemed.—Church Helper.

"I Am Not Dead."

A little 4-year-old son of Joe Lang had been "borrowed" to personate the consumptive child of Lady Isabel in "East Lynne," in the touching death-scene at the close of the act representing the wretched mother's return from her self-imposed exile. While the audience were being moved to tears by the impassioned agony of the fond mother, poured out at the bedside of her dying child, and just at the moment that all emotions were intensified to the utmost by the unspeakable anguish depicted in her countenance as she exclaimed, in broken-hearted accents, "He is dead!" the little rooster, who had up to this point been kept quiet with difficulty, could stand it no longer, and instantly resented the accusation by exclaiming, in a voice distinctly heard throughout the house, "I am not dead!" The effect can be readily imagined.—Elko (Nev.) Independent.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

THE eight principal French banks have increased their deposits the past ten years from 1,060,000,000 francs to 1,886,000,000 francs.

THE proportion of people in the leading nations unable to read or write is as follows: In Russia it is 91 per cent., in Spain 80 per cent., in Italy 73, in Austria 49, in England 33, in France 30, in the United States 20, and in Germany 12 per cent.

BROOKLYN has only one church for every 1,721 of population, while Washington has one for every 932. Cleveland has one for every 1,044; New Orleans, one for every 1,846; Cincinnati, one for every 1,350; Baltimore, one for every 1,412, and Boston one for every 1,666. St. Louis has one for every 1,852 of population. The proportion in New York stands one to 2,613.

FROM the criminal statistics just published by the Government of Italy, it appears that in the first nine months of 1879 there were no fewer than 2,900 murders or attempts at murder committed in the kingdom, being an average of ten and two-thirds a day. In the same period of three-quarters of a year there occurred 1,900 cases of robbery on the highway; of the perpetrators of which as many as 800 had entirely escaped the hands of justice.

FROM a statement prepared by the Central News, showing the number of separate speeches made by thirty-five public speakers in the United Kingdom from Jan. 1, 1872 to Oct. 1, 1879, it appears that Mr. Gladstone heads the list, and distances all competitors in the number of speeches (34) and words (215,000). Mr. Bright comes next, with 24 speeches and 129,300 words. He is followed by Lord Hartington, with 25 speeches and 113,700 words. Sir Stafford Northcote has made 26 speeches and 100,900 words; Mr. Forster, 32 speeches, 91,100 words, and the Earl of Beaconsfield 24 speeches, with 90,300 words.

THE corn crop of the United States amounted to 1,388,218,750 bushels, of which Illinois produced 225,932,700 bushels. The average yield per acre was as follows: In Maine, 40 bushels to the acre; New Hampshire, 39; Vermont, 41; Massachusetts, 36; Rhode Island, 32; Connecticut, 29; New York, 36; New Jersey, 36; Pennsylvania, 35; Delaware, 25; Maryland, 23; Virginia, 17; North Carolina, 13; South Carolina, 9; Georgia, 11; Florida, 9; Alabama, 12; Mississippi, 13; Louisiana, 19; Texas, 26; Arkansas, 24; Tennessee, 19; West Virginia, 27; Kentucky, 22; Ohio, 24; Michigan, 37; Indiana, 32; Illinois, 27; Wisconsin, 37; Minnesota, 38; Iowa, 37; Missouri, 26; Kansas, 33; Nebraska, 42; California, 34; Oregon, 33; Nevada, Colorado and the Territories, 30.

For Young Men at Church Fairs.

The following bits of advice, culled from the leading magazines of the day, are intended for the eye of the young men who attend church fairs: Be pleasant, and smiling, and cheerful. When they offer you the seductive bowl of oyster soup, bend over it, affect to examine it critically, smell it, then rise up, shake your head sadly, and with a sweet, suggestive smile, say, "No, thank you, I guess not." This adds greatly to the happiness of the silver-haired, motherly old lady who made the soup.

Lie boldly to the first girl who wants you to take a chance in the parsonage cake. Tell her that you have already two chances. This will make it easier for the next lie. Then, when she looks over her list and says she can't find your name, tell her you bought your chances of the other young lady. Then, when she says she is the only person selling chances in this cake, tell her then it must have been in the other cake. Then, when she says this is the only cake they are raffling on, brace up, look her right in the eye, and tell her, "O yes, you remember now—it must have been in the cake last year." She can't deny this, and you can look triumphant. But remember, my son, if you start a thing of this kind you will have to keep it up.

If you pick up any pretty little article on the fancy tables ask the price of the same, and, when you are told, drop it from your nerveless fingers, and, as it falls upon the floor, exclaim, in tones of amazement, "Well, I am ——," and leave the audience to imagine what you are. This never fails to please the young lady who has charge of that table. She will mention you to her friends.

Affect a pleasant, but natural and undisguised, horror of the tidies, and designate the worsted work as "stuff." Wonder what the lambrequins are for, and laugh a short, explosive sardonic laugh when the ladies tell you. If some girl has sent a water-color or oil-painting of her own to the fair, affect to mistake the road for a river, and wonder why people are driving along the top of the water in a wagon. Also, try to spell out the name of a hotel on the elm tree in the foreground, affecting to mistake it for an old-fashioned swinging country inn sign.—New Orleans Times.

A PET dog fell into the hands of the professors at the Detroit Medical College, who used him for vivisection. A part of the skull had been removed and some of the brains taken out, when his master found him. The brute was put under curative treatment, and is recovering, but will never know so much as he did before the operation.

THE CANVASS IN MAINE.

The Ground of Action—Report Upon Which Returns Were Rejected.

Following is an abstract of the report of the committee on Maine election returns, made in the Council:

Your committee, in submitting this report, deem it necessary to state specifically certain facts connected with returns from many of the towns, cities and plantations which have materially affected the result of canvassing the votes returned. There are many returns which, owing to fatal defects, cannot be counted; but we shall specify only those which have affected the result. Article IV., part I., section 5 of the constitution regulates the manner of electing Senators and Representatives to the Legislature, and also the process of transmitting to the Governor and Council the process by which they are to determine who have been elected. This section provides that in case of towns and plantations municipal officers shall, in open town and plantation meeting, at the close of election day, sort, count and declare the votes cast, and form a list of all persons voted for, and after the name of each person thus voted for shall write the number of votes received by him. This list shall be recorded in open meeting by a clerk, and a copy of this recorded list shall be signed by the Selectmen and attested by the Clerk and sealed up in open meeting. This copy of the recorded list thus attested is to be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State within thirty days thereafter. A section of the Revised Statutes requires that, in addition to the foregoing specific and mandatory provisions of the constitution, the return shall state the whole number of ballots cast at the election. The same section of the constitution requires that the Governor and Council shall open and compare the returns thus transmitted and from them determine who appears to be elected, and the Governor is to issue to such persons as thus appear to be elected summons to take seats in the Legislature. Of course the first requirement is that the returns shall be made and sealed up in open town or plantation meetings. We understand this is required in order that the electors may be present and see that the returns are made in accordance with the facts, and we are of opinion that returns not made up in open meeting are not legal returns and cannot be counted; and we have acted upon this belief in making our tabulations. Several protests accompanied with affidavits to support them against the counting of returns specified therein have been considered by us. These protests allege that said returns should not be counted because they were not made up in open town meeting, but were made after the meeting closed, in some private office or store, when only a portion of the municipal officers were present, and in some cases only the clerk. This condition of things in several cases has been proved to our entire satisfaction, and we have rejected returns thus defective in our tabulations. In the case of the town of Stoneham an affidavit, signed by two Selectmen, establishes the fact that they signed returns in blank, and the Town Clerk took them home and filled them up, and the Selectmen have no knowledge of what the returns contain. For the foregoing reasons we have rejected in our tabulations Representative returns from the towns of Jay, Stoneham, Lisbon, Webster and Farmington. The return from the town of Searsport has also been rejected, because it was not sealed up in open town meeting. By means of these rejections a few persons will receive seats in the Legislature who would not have been thus seated had the returns from the aforesaid towns been made up as the constitution requires. These are: James O. White, of the Jay district; Louis Voter, of the Farmington district; N. Bredbury, of the Stoneham district; Joshua E. Gordon, of the Searsport district, and Leonard H. Reale, of the Derham district.

The Supreme Court has held that municipal officers shall sign returns with their own hands or make their marks; otherwise the returns cannot be counted. We have found several returns fatally defective in this particular, and have accordingly rejected them. By this rule, laid down by the court, the New Sharon returns have been by us rejected. This rejection affects the election of one Representative.

We found several returns fatally defective because they were not attested by the Town Clerk. The Supreme Court held that such are not returns, and we have rejected them. They are quite numerous, but we shall specify only such as affect the result of the election. The Representative return from the town of Lebanon is one of them. Its rejection affects the election of one Representative, viz., Stephen V. Lord. Vanceboro and Albany are like cases, and the rejection of returns from these towns affects the election of two Representatives.

Representative districts, in most cases, are composed of several towns. In some of the towns the full Christian names of candidates seem to have been used, in others only initials, and we hesitated as to whether we could count initial names with full names. On examination of the law we find the Supreme Court [Vol. 64, p. 56] has held that the Governor and Council must count them as distinct and separate persons. By adopting this rule laid down by the court elections of five Representatives seem to be affected, viz.: F. W. Hill, of Exeter; Alex. Woodcock, of Danforth district; J. H. Hart, of Newcastle; John Brown, of Hagden district, and John W. Brighton, of ——— district.

The Revised Statutes require that in the case of plantations, in addition to the forms required by towns, a list of voters of plantations be sent into the Secretary of State; otherwise, that returns from such plantations shall not be counted. We found returns from seven of the plantations irregular in this particular, and we have specified them on our tabulation. It will there appear that rejection of those returns affect the return of two Representatives.

The State requirements of setting forth in returns the whole number of votes in many cases was not complied with. We find it has been the practice of the Governor and Council for many years to reject such returns, and we have not deemed it safe to deviate from this long-established interpretation of the law, so fully recognized by our predecessors; and in making our tabulations have omitted all such returns. It will be perceived these rejections affect the election of several Representatives in the county of Washington.

One candidate for the Senate seems to have been voted for in some of the towns of his county by the name of John T. Wallace, Jr., and in others by the name of John T. Wallace, but we have tabulated the votes as thrown for two different men, as we have no legal knowledge that the same person is meant.

Two sets of returns were sent on to the Secretary of State from the town of Fairfield, each of which contradicts the other, and it was impossible, from the contradictory character of the returns, to determine the result of the election in that town. We have, therefore, rejected the returns from that town in our tabulations. The rejection affects the election of one Representative.

Accompanying and attached to the Representative returns from the town of Skowhegan, there was a statement signed by the Selectmen, that a certain number of ballots were protested as illegal, under section 29, chapter iv., of the Revised Statutes. One of the ballots objected to was attached to the returns. The Selectmen in their certificate alleged how many of the ballots were thrown, and in this certificate they informed the Governor and Council that they make the return subject to the legality or illegality of that kind of ballot. The ballot was in the form of an ordinary sheet of paper folded to make two leaves. On one of the pages half the candidates' names were printed, and on the next page the remainder of the names of candidates appear. We are fully satisfied that that kind of ballot is clearly in violation of the letter and spirit of the foregoing-named statute, and we have accordingly rejected a number of ballots in making our tabulations.

A protest was filed against counting returns from the town of Cherryfield, on the ground that the officers who attested the returns were not legal officers. Affidavits presented with the protest establish the fact that not one of the legal Selectmen presided at making out returns and receiving votes. One of the Selectmen was a foreigner, and could not legally hold the office of Selectman. The Superior Court has held that a Board of Town Officers consisting of less than three is not a legal board. Acting upon this opinion we have rejected returns from the town of Cherryfield. This affects the election of one Representative.

Several protests and affidavits to support them were referred to us, asking the rejection of returns on account of bribery and intimidating voters, and on account of legal defects in calling the town meeting, also on account of an improper check list. The copy of the record presented to us from the town of Skowhegan shows that for the election in that town only one copy of the warrant was posted, and the record does not show that one was posted in the town.

Objection to counting the vote of the city of Auburn was made because voters' names were added to the check-lists in three of the wards, in violation of the law, while voting was going on, on election day. Affidavits filed fully establish that fact. Other affidavits plainly show the same condition of things in other cities. We consider these facts as not legally cognizable by the Governor and Council as a canvassing board, and we have disregarded them in our tabulation. We recommend reference of all such papers to the Legislature.

The returns from Portland are defective because they do not comply with the constitutional requirement, which provides that the names of all persons receiving votes shall be stated in the returns. A large number of votes were returned from said city as "scattering," and there was no possible means afforded by the returns to determine for whom such votes were thrown.

The returns from the cities of Saco, Lewiston, Bath, and Rockland are fatally defective, because they were not signed by a majority of the aldermen. Under the statutes and by decisions of the court such returns cannot be counted, and we have been obliged to reject them. It will devolve on the House of Representatives to determine in the first instance and finally who has been elected to the House from these cities, as we have no legal evidence before us to determine that question.

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION.

Attempt of the Maine Republican Leaders to Bribe Members of the Legislature—Indisputable Evidence of the Damnable Scheme.

The subjoined affidavits require no comment. They tell a story of attempted bribery and corruption by the leaders of the party of great moral ideas in Maine that no pen-coloring can exaggerate or magnify. The hand of James G. Blaine is plainly at the bottom of this dirty business. Indeed, it is openly asserted at the capital of Maine that the bribe-money can be traced right into the house of that "honorable man" and representative Republican.

Following is the affidavit of Thomas B. Swan:

I, Thomas B. Swan, of Minot, hereby on oath make the following statement: On the evening of the 5th of January I was informed by a reliable person that he had been offered $1,000 by one of the agents of the Republican party to resign his position as Representative to the Legislature of Maine, and not act with the Greenback or Democratic party. I therefore consulted with the leading members of the Greenback party, and informed them I would have it hinted to said agent that my resignation could be effected with money, and if I was offered the $1,000 I would take it and sign the papers that they should request, and then expose their plan to defeat the will of the people by bribery. The party whom they endeavored to bribe on the evening of the 5th was informed of said plan, and half past 10 o'clock on the 6th was appointed for me to be at the Court House, sign the resignation, and other papers. I went there at the time appointed, and met the agent whose name I now suppress. A trade was made, and said agent paid $1,000 in cash. Said agent informed me they had got three of our men to remain away from the House of Representatives, so we could not have a quorum present. I was required to copy in my own hand papers which they had prepared before I came to said Court House for my signature. I now have the $1,000 in my possession, and have shown it to several parties.

THOMAS B. SWAN.

KENNEBEC, ss., Jan. 6, 1880.

Personally appeared Thomas B. Swan, and made oath that the above affidavit by him subscribed is true. Before me,

E. H. GOVE, J. P. and Q. for the State.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 5, 1880.

I, Thomas B. Swan, in the presence of Hon. Solon Chase and Hon. E. H. Gove, make the following statement: I have this day been approached, by an agent of the Republican party, to resign as a Representative, for money. I am going to take the money to-morrow, and thus show to the people the fraud and corruption of the Republican party. I expect to have another party, also, take the money for the same purpose.

THOS. B. SWAN.

This is a true copy of the paper I now hold, and which copy was made and signed near morning, Jan. 5 to 6, by Thomas B. Swan, in the presence of Hon. Solon Chase and myself.

AFFIDAVIT OF MOSES HARRIMAN.

I, Moses Harriman, of Kennebunk Port, on oath depose and say that, during the evening of Jan. 5, 1880, I learned to my satisfaction that efforts were being made by Republicans to bribe opposition members of the House to refuse to act, and thereby prevent a quorum on Wednesday. I therefore determined to test the question and get proof, if possible, to lay before the public and thwart the purpose of those who were resorting to such criminal means for the accomplishment of their ends. I managed to get into communication with parties negotiating the purchase, and entered into an agreement to meet a man, whose name I for the present suppress, at the Court House in Augusta at half-past 1 p. m., on Tuesday, and did meet him there at the time and place appointed, and there received from him $1,000 in hand in consideration of my copying, in my own hand, and signing certain papers presented, declaring that I should not accept a seat in the House, disapproving of the action of the Governor and Council, approving the opinion of the Judges of the court, etc. I was also assured that after the Republicans succeeded in getting full control of the House I should be seated and should be well provided for. He left the Court House to go after the money, said he would be gone half an hour, and would give a signal of three raps at the door. He returned in just about that time and gave the signal. I unlocked the door, let him in, and he delivered the money. I have shown the money to several persons, and now have it in my possession. I was told that the papers I signed would be published to-morrow morning.

MOSES HARRIMAN.

AUGUSTA, Jan. 6, 1880.

STATE OF MAINE, KENNEBEC, Jan 6, 1880.
Personally appeared Moses Harriman, and made oath to the truth of the above statement by him. Signed before me,

E. H. GOVE,
Justice of the Peace for the State.

We certify that Moses Harriman, of Kennebunk Port, exhibited to us, this Tuesday afternoon, a package of money and requested us to count it. We did so, and made it $1,005, which he said he had received as set forth in his affidavit.

A Parrot Scattering Railroad Passengers.

At the Henry House, Meadville, there is a parrot which is a source of great annoyance to train-men. When it sees a freight train coming it will yell at the top of its voice: "Switch off! Switch off!" The enunciation is so distinct that it not infrequently happens that the train will be switched off to avoid a supposed danger. The same bird, when it sees a passenger train, will yell, "All aboard?" and thereby cause a scattering among the passengers, who, after sitting in the cars for ten or fifteen minutes, will discover that they have been sold.—Pittsburgh Leader.

GOV. WILLIAMS has appointed to the vacancy on the bench of the Supreme Court, John T. Scott, of Terre Haute, a warm, personal friend, and, like himself, six feet three inches in height. Judge Scott is a Kentuckian, aged 68. He came to Indiana in 1853, as a civil engineer on the Indiana and Illinois Central railroad. He began practicing law in 1856, at Montezuma; was elected Prosecuting Attorney in 1860, and moved to Terre Haute. He was on the bench of the Court of Common Pleas from 1868 to 1874.

ONE and a half miles northeast of Newcastle, the county seat of Henry county, along a tributary of the Blue river, is a most remarkable collection of mounds, of such construction and arrangement as to strike any beholder with astonishment. No one can see them and doubt for a moment that they were constructed by men who were far more advanced in civilization than the North American Indians. The principal mounds number ten, and border an open space of about forty acres. They are all surrounded by what seems to be a ditch and a wall.

An African Empire.

The Paris Figaro has just published a further installment of Count de Semelle's report of his travels in Central Africa. He was highly delighted with the Sultan Amrou, who resides in a fortified city, and who can place in the field 50,000 horsemen and 100,000 foot soldiers. The greater portion of this force, however, is only armed with bows and arrows, the rest having only flint muskets. The Sultan, says the Count, exercises absolute power, and treats travelers with the greatest hospitality. He found his Majesty aware that there was another country as powerful and as rich as England—France—and adds: "Besides, Amrou is tired of that English policy which tends to restrain his power, and he is very willing to welcome the French and to facilitate their commercial relations with his people. Before my departure he gave me a letter for the President of the republic (the great warrior who had almost finished the conquest of North Africa), and which on my return I handed to M. Grevy." The Sultan "possesses to a high degree the sentiment of equity, and his empire is admirably administered." Theft, we are told, is almost unknown in Nuppe—probably owing to the matter in which it is punished. The accused are brought before the Sultan, in presence of the people, and the prisoner found guilty of a first offense has his hand cut off and is paraded through the empire; a second offense is followed by the gouging of the left eye, and the third conviction entails the pain of death without sepulture. The following anecdote respecting this well-administered country makes heavy demands on the reader's faith. All the Sultan's police come from a place called Haoussa, and these Haoussas parade the empire in small detachments, "arresting evil-doers and inquiring after people afflicted with contagious maladies. When any such are discovered, they are seized, put to death, roasted, and devoured. Such is the example reserved for lepers, which are numerous enough in this part of Africa." In connection with the police, the Count tells another anecdote, more easily accepted than the last. The market, he says, is close to the Sultan's palace, and forms an immense square, the center of which is occupied by the police and the barbers. The reason is that the barbers of Bidda are as talkative as those of Paris; and that the Haoussas, by keeping their ears open while shaving is going on, acquire plenty of useful information. There is a wonderful chapter on the horses of the country, some of which reach the price of £6,000. Sultan Amrou made the Count a present of such an animal, and he rode him one day 110 kilometres; he galloped four hours at a stretch, was contented with very sober fare, and only drank once a day, at sunset.

Playing Hen.

One of the strangest stories of somnambulism, from the Milwaukee Sentinel, which has ever been narrated: The parties to the wonder are two brothers, one a little boy, the other a young man, both living in that city. They sleep together, and seem both addicted to sleep walking, the older one in particular. The other night the mother was awaked from a sound sleep by a tremendous racket, and, rushing to the room where the boys slept, found them chasing each other around like dog and cat.

"What are you doing —— ?"

"Chasing the hen—after the hen," the older one said.

The younger one gave much the same answer when questioned.

It was some minutes before they could be quieted. When they got up next morning neither of them remembered any particular of the peformance. Come to find out, however, each was impressed with the idea that he had turned into a hen, and was chasing round another. Which performance any one who has haunted a barnyard has seen a great many times.

A QUAKER shopkeeper once met a Quaker customer of his going home with her bundles. He had been absent from his place, and had a notion in his wise head that she had been trading with a rival whom he did not much love. "How much did thee give a yard for this, Mary? One dollar! Why, I am surprised at thee! I could let thee have it for 75 cents. And how much for this? Two dollars! Why that was unreasonable. I could have let thee have it for $1.50. Why will thee go away trading with strangers, and world's people, Mary?" "I don't know what thee is talking about, friend John," she said; "but I did buy all these things at thy store, and if thee says the truth thee must owe me considerable money."

Cedar Creek Chapel.

[Fort Wayne Sentinel.]

The entertainment given at Cedar Creek chapel, Butler township, New Year's eve was listened to and appreciated by a large and respectable audience.

Exercises—Music, song. Essay, "Welcome," by Miss Sadie Fitch; well written and read with elegance of manner. Tableau, "The Nun's Prayer," very devoutly represented by five ladies. Music by orchestra. Recitation, "Will the New Year come to-night?" ably rendered by Miss Emma Fitch. Music. Recitation, "The Execution of Montrose;" one of the ablest exercises of the evening, rendered by Miss Lula Stoner, with her usual grace and eloquence; her delivery is good. Duet, by Miss Stoner and Miss Emma Fitch. Scenes, "From the courtship of Miles Standish," performed by Messrs. Hall, Keeran, Miss Sarah Fitch and others; the performers acted well their parts, especially Miss Fitch at the spinning-wheel, etc.; all were highly interested. Recitation, "Reck of the Hesperus," very gracefully rendered by Miss Ida Fitch. Vocal solo, Miss Emma Fitch, the music flows softly and smoothly from her lips, reflecting credit upon her choice of profession. Pantomime, "Only One Pair of Stockings to Mend," by Ida Fitch and an "Old lady and gentleman" (?); these scenes were very interesting and laughable. Violin solo, by Mr. Hogue; he plays excellently. Recitation, "Hiawatha's Wooing and the Famine," by Misses Stoner and Ida Fitch; this selection was quite lengthy, though well rendered. Music by orchestra. Tableau, "Midnight Prayer," represented by five ladies; a solemn scene. "The Old Year and the New Year;" the close of an old man's life of trouble and care represented the close of the "old year;" his daughter, pointing to new beauties and aspiring to future happiness, represented the "new year;" performed by Miss Stoner and Mr. Keeran. The only criticism that can be offered on the evening's exercises is that more drill on the part of some of the performers, would probably have made the work more easy to themselves. The music furnished by the Hogue brothers was certainly better than is usually heard on such occasions.

New Era, Ind., Jan. 7.

Editors Courier: Notwithstanding the opposition met with, the entertainment given at Cedar Creek chapel New Year's eve was listened to by a large and appreciative audience. It was falsely represented by a number of busy-bodies in this neighborhood, who always have opposed everything that has been gotten up for the benefit of the church or for the benefit of society, that there was to be a dancing theater given in the church—"Ten Nights in a Bar-room," etc. So wide-spread were their representations that a number came from a distance through mere curiosity to satisfy themselves of the wickedness of the young people of the Cedar Creek community. They went away, however, happily disappointed, and were highly pleased with the entertainment in every respect, and much chagrined at the false representations of their friends. Oh, ye enemies! hereafter when you wish to vent your spleen on something or somebody, wait and first know what you are opposing, and then go ahead with some regard for truth. A. B. F.

Depth of Sowing Wheat.

(Record and Farmer.)

Farmers who are wide awake and given to investigation don't sow so much wheat per acre as they formerly did, and they don't sow it so deep. The heavy harrows of 10 or 20 years ago are not now employed by them in covering seed, and the drill, which can be depended on better, is becoming universally popular. In broadcast sowing, after the ground is thoroughly prepared, the Thomas smoothing harrow covers the seed deep enough. A Wisconsin writer gives the result of an experiment in planting at different depths on the surface—one-fourth inch, one-half inch, three-fourth inch, and so on to several inches. That on the surface lay two weeks before sprouting; that one-fourth to three-fourth inches deep came up in four or five days, and so on, getting later as the depth increased. The last to come up was planted three and a half inches deep, and was 14 days in reaching the surface. None planted deeper ever reached the surface. At the end of six weeks that planted one-fourth to one-half inch deep stood far ahead of the rest.

Comparative Value of Woods.

It is a great convenience to know the comparative value of different kinds of wood for fuel. Shellbark hickory is regarded as the highest standard of our forest trees, and calling that 100, other trees will compare with it for real value as fuel for house purpose as follows: Shellbark hickory, 100, pignut hickory, 92, white oak, 81, white ash, 77, dog wood, 75, scrub oak, 73, white hazel, 72, apple tree, 70, red oak, 67, white beech, 65, black birch, 62, yellow oak, 60, hard maple, 59; white elm, 58; pine, 39. It is worth bearing in mind that in wood of the same species there is a great difference according to the soil on which they grow. A tree that grows on wet, low, rich ground will be less solid and less durable for fuel, and therefore of a less value than a tree of the same kind that grows on a dry and poor soil. To the ordinary purchaser, oak is oak, and pine is pine, but for house use the tree grown on dry upland, and standing apart from all others, is worth a great deal more.

Special Announcement.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishers of the State Sentinel which enable us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the Courier and Weekly Sentinel, one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "The Law of the Farm," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.
2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.
3rd What the deed of a farm includes.
4th The farmer's rights in the road.
5th As to farm fences.
6th As to estray and trespassing animals.
7th The farmer's liabilities for his animals.
8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.
9th Of water rights and drainage.
10th Of tresspassing on the farm.
11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The Indiana Weekly State Sentinel is an eight-page paper, (the same as the Courier) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the Courier subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

Pause, Ponder and Peruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infintesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company, Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, New York, New York, 43-1y.

ABOUT PENNIES.

Where They Circulate and By Whom Most Used---Places Where One Cent Pieces are Strangers.

[Philadelphia Record.]

Pennies are scarce and the mint can not turn them out fast enough to supply the demand. Coins of this denomination are turned out only at the United States mint in this city, and from here the whole country is supplied. The penny is a most important factor in the commerce of the country, much more than most people imagine. The mint is six weeks behind in its orders for the supply of these small coins, which is in part owing to the fact that all the available machinery is being used for other purposes, and but a small part can be put to penny making.

"Where do all the pennies go?" asked a Record reporter of a mint official yesterday.

"Well, the horse-car companies take a good part of the supply, but we limit each company to $20 worth per day. Then they are obliged to patch out with three-cent pieces, of which they also secure large quantities. But the merchants make the heaviest demands upon us, the great retail dry goods houses taking all they can get, and then crying for more."

"Where are all the pennies used?" questioned the reporter.

"Well, there is no part of the United States hardly, where they are not used," was the reply; "but there are some sections where they are strangers, and as rare as gold dollars are here. In the south the penny is almost unknown, the smallest coin being a five-cent piece. Recently, however, there has been some demand for them from merchants in Georgia and Alabama. In the far west there is but little call for the penny, but when one gets to St. Louis, or east of that point, then the penny becomes a familiar friend. Wherever there are six-cent fare on the street-cars, then there is a demand from that city for pennies. Now Louisville seldom if ever calls upon us, while Cincinnatti is continually crying for the one-cent piece. New York consumes a big lot, and so do the eastern states. The two-cent piece was a good help to us for a time, but none of them have been coined for ten years, and all that are sent in and redeemed are recoined into one cent pieces."

"It is a somewhat remarkable thing, but such is the fact," continued the official, "that competition in trade induces and increases the demand for pennies. Whenever trade is briskest, then the penny is needed most—that is, retail trade. What the banks take from us, although large, does not fluctuate like the calls from the tradesman. The eastern states are the great penny centers, and it is only as the population of the west increases that it wants pennies. The five-cent piece is the standard coin in the west, but the penny is making inroads on it, and great ones too."

A New Double Baby.

[From the Times of India]

There is at present in Bombay a living object that may be classed among the most curious phenomena of nature. At a house in Mazagon may be seen a pair of female twins, separate in every respect but from the breast bone to the lower part of the abdomen, which is closely joined. The upper breast bone of each infant linked into the other, the outer skin covering both trunks. The twins are joined front to front; shoulders, arms, lower limbs and feet perfectly formed, and development healthy, while the heads are well shaped and the faces really pretty, with beautiful eyes, large and bright. The twins are six months and twenty days old, are in perfect health and measure twenty inches in height, one appearing—but in a very trifling degree—larger than the other. Both have vigorous appetites, and kindly to the feeding bottle, are extremely lively and appear good-tempered. The pulses beat in unison, they generally fall asleep or keep awake together, and their actions are unusually simultaneous, though some times one would cry while the other was quietly drawing at the mouthpiece of its bottle. The strangely united pair were born at Dapooli, in the Ruthagherry Collectorate, the father being a Mohammedan and a seafaring man, while the mother has besides a pretty little daughter about ten. According to the former's account, he called in a native doctor at Ruthagherry whose opinion was that there was a connection internally between the abdomens, so that of whatever sustenance the one took a portion passed to the other. However that may be, the infants feed separately, each having a bottle to itself, and draw vigorously at their nourishment. This same doctor also declared it would be imposible to seperate them without extinguishing life. The twins have up to this time never been ill, and to every appearance are likely to grow up.

NOT FOR GRANT.

Organization of an Anti-Third-Term Club at Albany.

New York Tribune.

ALBANY, JAN. 6.—An anti-third-term club was organized here to-night, and ex-Senator Mathew Hale was elected president, Dr. John Swinburne and ex-Postmaster Filkins made speeches in opposition to the movement looking to General Grant's renomination for the presidency. The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, A number of republicans are advocating the nomination of Gen. Grant for a third term; and

Whereas, A club has already been organized in this city to promote such a nomination; and

Whereas, The re-nomination of Gen. Grant would be a violation of the well-known principles of the Republican party, as expressed in convention and at the polls; therefore be it

Resolved, That we re-affirm the wise and true doctrine promulgated in the platform of the New York Republican convention of 1875, as follows:

Republican platform, New York state, adopted Sept. 8, 1875:

8. Recognizing as conclusive the president's public declaration that he is not a candidate for re-nomination, and with the sincerest gratitude for his patriotic services, we declare our unalterable opposition to the election of any president for a third term.

Resolved, That we re-affirm and indorse the sentiments expressed in resolutions of the republican state conventions of Pennsylvania, Massachusetts and Ohio as follows:

The Pennsylvania republican platform, adopted May 26, 1879:

"That we declare a firm, unqualified adherence to the unwritten law of the republic, which wisely, and under the sanction of the most venerable of examples, limits the presidential service of any citizen to two terms, and we, the republicans of Pennsylvania, in recognition of this law, are unalterably opposed to the election to the presidency of any person for a third term.

Massachusetts republican convention, 1875:

That sound reason, as well as the wise and unbroken usage of the republic, illustrated by the example of Washington, requires that the term of the chief magistrate of the United States should not exceed a second term.

Ohio republican convention, 1875:

The observance of Washington's example in retiring at the close of a second presidential term will be in the future, as it has been in the past, regarded as a fundamental rule in the unwritten law of the Republic.

Presence of Mind.

Many railroad accidents are prevented by a presence of mind on the part of engineers. The "Car Builder" relates the following as among the recent evidences of presence of mind on the part of locomotive engineers:

A passenger train on the C. P. & Q. road was rounding a sharp curve, just under a piece of small timber. The watchful engineer saw a tree lying across the track 60 feet ahead of the locomotive. The train was running at a rate of 35 miles an hour, and to check its momentum before reaching the obstruction was out of the question. The engineer took in the situation at a glance. He threw the throttle wide open, the engine shot ahead with the velocity of an arrow, and with such tremendous force that the tree was picked up by the cow-catcher and flung from the track as if it had been a willow withe. A man with not so cool a head would have made the best possible use of those 60 feet in the way of checking the speed of the train. That would have caused a disaster. Bradford, an engineer, was bringing an express train over the Kankakee line from Indianapolis. As the engine shot out from the deep cut and struck a short piece of straight track leading to a bridge, a herd of colts was discovered running down the road. The distance to the river was only a hundred 100 feet.—Bradford knew he could not stop the train, and also knew that if the colts beat the locomotive to the bridge they would fall between the timbers, and the obstruction would throw the train off, and probably result in a frightful loss of life. It took him only half a second to think of all this. The other half was utilized in giving his engine such a quantity of steam that it covered that 100 of track in about the same time that a bolt of lightning would travel from the tip of a lightning rod to the ground. The colts were struck and hurled down the embankment just as they were entering the bridge.

Not in the Grant Line.

A messenger boy came to the door of the lobby in the rear of the House chamber one day last week bearing a package and a letter addressed to Speaker Randall. The package and letter were delivered, and the messenger left the building. He was hardly out of sight before the Speaker's page ran out of the House to the doorkeeper who had received the package from the boy, and placed in his hands the box which had just been opened. It contained very choice stationery, letter files, &c.—"Here," said the page, "give this box to the fellow who brought. The Speaker is not accepting gifts from business houses in Washington. Randall's name is not Grant."

THAT PARTNERSHIP.

EDITORS COURIER:

In a late "Republican" I notice a whole column devoted to an alleged partnership which the "Republican" asserts I sustain with you and others in your paper, under the firm name, or style, of "Bobbie Lowry, Theodore Reed, Bill Dills, C. K. Baxter & Co." To make matters more than doubly certain, the article asserts at least five times, that the COURIER means the above firm. Now, whereas, I am not ashamed of my associates as the "Republican" names them, unless the tail end, "Co." represents some person by the name of Weamer.

But let me say parenthetically that the use of nick-names is generally considered evidence of low breeding, illiteracy and venom, and no cultured, christian gentleman will indulge in their use.

I cannot permit the "Republican" in the above manner to place me in a position to injure or antagonize, as it claims, the business interests of my personal friend Mr. Peter Bishop, whom I have known over thirty years, whom I know to be a gentleman and I believe to be a christain, and whose family for their social and other excellent qualities I regard in a higher degree than the "Republican" will ever be esteemed by its party in this county under its present management.

Why the proprietors of the "Republican", whom I have deemed my personal friends, will assert that I would be a party to, what they claim to be, an untruthful article for publication, I cannot understand, for they well know that all articles that have eminated from my pen, and were published in the "Republican," of which I admit there has been a few of a non-partisan character, containing nothing but the truth, and especially those written at the request of said proprietors, who furnished the facts about which to write, and for which they have paid me in full like little men. Therefore I cannot think that they believe I would write for publication an untruth, but will say that if such has been the case, the "Republican" has done the publishing and based upon the authority of, and at the request of these same proprietors of the "Republican."

As to the Bishop matter I never knew anything about it until you published the article complained of.

In conclusion will say that I think it is a fact that locally I have an undeserved reputation of writing up for publication any exposure, a great deal of the meanness and villainy occuring in our midst, and whenever such exposure is made, the villains, or the exposed, always say "Bill Dills" wrote it; but the law abiding, intelligent and good people in our midst, sometimes credit it to

WILLIAM H. DILLS.

Teachers' Institute.

The teachers of Richland and Fairfield townships met at Corunna, Jan. 10th, for the purpose of holding a township institute. In the absence of the county superintendent, J. W. Squires acted as president of the meeting. The meeting was called to order by the president after a few miscellaneous remarks.

A recitation in geography was conducted by Prof. Hersh by means of the globe and map; the lesson proved to be very interesting and instructive.

Next on the programme was a class in reading, conducted by Mr. McCullough; following this a few remarks on the subject of reading by different members of the institute. Adjournment for dinner.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Institute called to order by president. Penmanship taught by M. L. Hoffman, which was very good, and showed the teacher to be well acquainted with his subject.

After which a question box was passed and several good questions propounded, to be answered by the various teachers.

Next Prof. Hersh gave a brief description of the Wyandotte cave. Mr. Squires gave us his method of conducting spelling classes, which was good, and if all the teachers would use the method he gave, would find themselves benefited by it.

Next Mr. Shull discussed the manner of teaching physiology. His remarks were good and to the point.

Following this a class in arithmetic taught by Arthur McIntyre, class consisting of the different teachers present.

Mr. J. W. Squires then discussed school government at length, touching points that will be of interest to teachers.

The institute was a success, and after following the programme for the day adjourned to meet at some time in the future.

A CHILD'S BATTLE WITH AN EAGLE.—The following comes from Lake county Minn.: "While August Burr, aged 7 years, was playing with his sisters—one five years old and the other three—near his father's house, an enormous eagle pounced down upon them, throwing the two girls to the ground. It immediately attacked the younger one, grasping one of the child's arms with the claws of one foot, while the claws of the other foot were deeply buried in the child's face; and it attempted to carry the child off, but was prevented by her struggles. Little August seeing that he could do nothing with his own hands to help his sister, ran quickly to the house, got the butcher knife, and came out and hacked away at the eagle's legs, cutting one of them severely near the foot, whereupon the savage bird let go the little girl and attacked the boy, knocking him over, tearing his pantaloons, and giving him some severe scratches. In the meantime the children brought out their mother, whereupon the eagle flew off to the barn, on which he sat and looked as though he would like to renew the contest, should an opportunity offer. A neighbor was called who shot the bird. It measured seven feet from wing-tip to wing tip.—The little girl was very badly scratched but not seriously hurt."

How Nutmegs Grow.

Nutmegs grow on little trees which look like small pear trees, and are generally over 20 feet high. The flowers are much like the lilly of the valley. They are pale and very fragrant. The nutmeg is the seed of the fruit, and mace is the thin covering over this seed. The fruit is about as large as a peach. When ripe it breaks open and shows the little nut inside. The trees grow on the islands of Asia and in tropical America. They bear fruit for seventy or eighty years, having ripe fruit upon them at all seasons. A fine tree in Jamaica has over 4,000 nutmegs on it yearly. The Dutch used to have all this nutmeg trade, as they owned the Banda Islands, and conquered all the other traders and destroyed the trees. To keep the price up they once burned three piles of nutmegs, each of which was as large as a church. Nature did not sympathise with their meanness. The nutmeg pigeon, found in all the Indian islands, did for the world what the Dutch determined should not be done—carried the nuts, which are their food, into all the surrounding countries, and trees grew up again, and the world had the benefit.

THE NEW STYLE
$25 FAMILY SEWING MACHINE
THE USUAL $65 MACHINE REDUCED TO 25.

$150 per Week Made Easy.

Horse and Wagon Free to Agt's

The CHEAPEST and BEST in the World.
Too Long in Use to Doubt its Superior MERITS

No Money to Pay until Machine is Delivered to you and Examined.

It makes the shuttle, double-thread, lock-stitch, (the same on both sides of the work), which received the highest reward at the Centennial exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., 1876. And is complete with a larger assortment of attachments for fine work than any other machine, and reduced to only $25.

It is an easy and pleasant machine to operate, requires the least care, produces every variety of work, and will last until the next century begins. Strong, simple, rapid and efficient.

Use it once and you will use no other. The money cheerfully refunded if it will not outwork and outlast any machine at double the price.

Agents sell them faster than any other in consequence of their being the "best at the lowest price."

Each machine thoroughly warranted with written guarantee for five years. Kept in order free of charge; money refunded at once if not satisfactory.

It is the most solid, reliable, and satisfactory machine ever invented for all kinds of family work. It is an acknowleged unequivocal mechanical success, thoroughly tested and used in thousands of homes. An efficient, silent, rapid, reliable and ever-ready helper to the weary wife or seamstress. It will do the work of a family for a lifetime, or it will earn from $4 to $5 per day for any one who wishes to sew for a living. This machine costs less than half the price of any new machine of like quality. Has extra long, large-sized shuttle, easily removed. Extra large-sized bobbins, holding 100 yards of thread, doing away with the frequent rewinding of bobbins. It is built for strength and constant hard work. Interchangeable working parts, manufactured of fine polished steel. Will run for years without repairs; is simple to learn, easy to manage, understood perfectly in an hour, and always ready in a moment to do every description of heavy or fine work, at less cost or trouble than any other machine at any price ever did or can do. It will sew anything a needle can pierce, from lace or cambric to heavy cloth or harness, with any kind of thread, and will run off twenty yards per minute; it uses strong, straight needles, and never breaks them. It cannot miss or drop a stitch, ravel or break the thread. If you have any other machine, buy this and have a better one. The ease and rapidity of its motion and quality of its work, are its best recommendations. It will hem, fell, tuck, braid, cord, bind, gather, quilt, ruffle, pleat, fold, scallop, shirr, roll, baste, embroider, run up braids, etc., with elegance, ease and quickness, unsurpassed by any machine ever invented.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

The price for our new machines are less than those asked by dealers in second-hand, rebuilt and refinished machines, or those selling out old stock to close up business, many such inferior and old style machines being offered as new at reduced prices; beware of imposition and only buy new machines. There are no new first-class machines offered as low as the "FAMILY," by many dollars.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

The Treasurer of the New York Produce Exchange, Benjamin C. Bogert, a defaulter to the extent of $30,000, died suddenly the other day, and it is believed he committed suicide.

A family consisting of a mother and three children were fatally poisoned by eating sauerkraut and pickled eels in New York city.

Parnell and Dillon, the Irish agitators, were warmly received by the Philadelphians, and treated to resolutions of a liberal character....Frank Leslie, the well-known New York publisher, is dead.

There have been in all seven deaths resulting from the recent explosion in the celluloid works at Newark, N. J. The verdict of the Coroner's jury mildly censures the proprietors for carrying on dangerous experiments in a room crowded with workmen and supplied with imperfect means of escape.

THE WEST.

The buildings used as the wood department of Mitchell, Lewis & Co.'s extensive wagon manufactory at Racine, Wis., were totally destroyed by fire last week. Loss estimated at $75,000; insurance about $50,000.

There is said to be much suffering among the negroes who have emigrated from the South and settled in Kansas. There are about 15,000 refugees in the State at the present time, and from twenty to fifty coming in every day. About one-fifth of these were able to buy a little land, and the rest were in almost a starving condition. There are over 700 destitute negroes in barracks at Topeka, and disease and destitution are rapidly reducing their numbers....Prof. Wilkinson, leader of the band at the Milwaukee branch of the Soldiers' Home, fatally shot his wife and himself, the tragedy growing out of domestic troubles caused by whisky and incompatibility.

Maj. Morrow, in command of the detachment of cavalry pursuing Victoria's band of hostiles in New Mexico, had an engagement with the savages, on the 12th inst., in which he routed them.

A terrible wind-storm recently passed over Oregon and the adjacent Territories. The gale is described as the fiercest that ever visited the Pacific coast, and the damage is estimated at over $500,000. Considerable loss of life is reported.

THE SOUTH.

Senator Lamar, of Mississippi, was stricken with paralysis at his home in Mississippi on the 12th inst....An oyster war has broken out on the Rappahannock river in Virginia, and the people living on the shores of that stream have made a requisition on the Governor for arms. An outside vessel, the crew of which is supplied with long-range rifles, is the cause of the trouble.

A fire at Augusta, Ga., destroyed a warehouse containing 1,500 bales of cotton. Loss, $80,000.

Since the 1st of January, when navigation of the Mississippi river was resumed between St. Louis and New Orleans, more than 1,000,000 bushels of corn have been started for Europe by way of the Gulf of Mexico. More grain would have been shipped this way but for the scarcity of barges.

GENERAL.

The troops of the United States and Mexico stationed near the boundary between Chihuahua and New Mexico are co-operating in the hope of annihilating Victoria and his band of eighty-five savages, who have been on the war-path since 1879.

Charles Stewart Parnell has issued an address to the people of America asking for contributions to alleviate the distress in Ireland, and stating that all subscriptions collected for relief purposes may be forwarded to the treasurers, Drexel, Morgan & Co., of New York, who will forward the money to the Treasurers of the National Land-League in Ireland.

The steamship Aragon, which it was thought had been lost at sea, arrived safely at New York last week, after a rough voyage of twenty-three days....Victoria and 100 Apache warriors, who were driven into Mexico some months ago by American troops, have just crossed into the United States, hotly pressed by Mexican soldiers. The Federal and Territorial forces are co-operating with the Mexicans.

News comes from the West Indies of terrible floods on the island of St. Kitts, by which 200 lives have been lost, property to the extent of $250,000 destroyed, and the whole island wasted. St. Kitts has known of no such calamity since 1792, when a terrific hurricane nearly destroyed the island.

WASHINGTON.

The House Committee on Indian Affairs has agreed upon a bill providing for negotiations with the Utes, the Warm Spring, the Umatilla, and some other tribes for the extinguishment of their titles to their reservations, and their removal and consolidation upon other reservations to be established.

The annual report of the National Board of Health, containing an account of the operations of the past year, has been transmitted to Congress. The work of collecting information and advice from the principal sanitary organizations and sanitarians of the United States as to the best plan for a national public-health organization, including the subject of quarantine, both maritime and inland, is reported as having been quite successful, and, after carefully examining data thus collected, the board is of opinion that the conclusions heretofore published by the American Public Health Association at the meeting of that body at Nashville in November, 1879, may be taken as fairly representing the opinions of leading sanitarians and the most important sanitary organizations of this country. It has been decided by the board that for the present complete quarantine establishments are only needed at Boston, New York, Philadelphia (near the mouth of the Chesapeake bay), Charleston, Savannah, near Brunswick, Ga., or Fernandina, Fla., near Ship island, Miss., and at some point on the Texas coast. It is the opinion of the board that if, during the present winter, at all points where fever had prevailed during the past summer, care be taken to obtain thorough ventilation and exposure to cold of all the houses and inclosed spaces, and all bedding, clothing, etc., and if local sanitation be vigorously and properly carried out, there will be little danger of epidemic yellow fever next year from causes now existing in the country.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections has resumed the taking of testimony in the Kellogg-Spofford case.

POLITICAL.

The Democratic members of the Maryland Legislature, at a caucus held on the 8th inst., nominated A. P. Gorman for United States Senator, to succeed William Pinckney Whyte.

The Indiana Democratic State Convention will be held at Indianapolis on the 9th of June....The Greenback Conference at Washington issued a call for the Convention of the National Greenback-Labor party to be held in Chicago, commencing on Wednesday, June 9, one week later than the Republican Convention.

The election in the Seventh Missouri district to choose a Congressman to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of A. M. Lay has resulted in the election of Col. John F. Philips, Democrat, over ex-Gov. McClurg, Republican and Greenback candidate.

Gen. Garfield, United States Senator-elect from Ohio, was given a reception at Columbus last week. He made a speech, in which he recalled many incidents of his public life and feelingly thanked the representatives of the people for the honor conferred on him. Before concluding he paid a high tribute to Mr. Thurman, whom he styled one of the broadest-minded, fairest, and most generous men Ohio had ever produced.

FOREIGN.

A battle was recently fought between 3,000 Montenegrins and 12,000 Albanians, and resulted in the victory for the former....A Berlin dispatch states that Bismarck is so unwell he cannot come to Berlin....The ill-treatment of the servers of ejectment writs in Ireland is becoming rapid. Riots have occurred in the Tubercurry district, County Sligo, in which the police repeatedly charged the mob before they could be quelled. ....The health of the Queen of Spain has received a severe shock, owing to the attempted assassination of Alfonso she has been attacked with epileptic fits, to which she was not previously subject.

A dispatch from Calcutta says the particulars of the proceedings of the court-martial in Cabul, on the Afghans implicated in the attack on the British Residence in September last, show that all of the fifteen men who had been executed were either concerned in the massacre of Maj. Cavagnari and his staff, in the murder of wounded soldiers, or had taken part in treacherous attacks on the British. All the other prisoners will be released.

Advices from Afghanistan report that Mohammed Jan, a chief of more than usual ability, has placed himself at the head of affairs and is raising a large new army, having recently been reinforced by several thousand of Shere Ali's men. He is acting in the name of Musa Khan, whom he claims to be the rightful Ameer, and has sent emissaries to Turkestan to stir up the people there.... It is reported that Austria and Germany will ask Russia why she is concentrating troops in Poland, and if the answer is unsatisfactory they will mass troops along their eastern frontiers.

Russia having been questioned by Germany relative to the concentration of troops in Poland, replies that as there is no longer any danger of a collision with Turkey, the soldiers are put in Poland as a more convenient district than Bessarabia....The distress in Ireland is increasing. Five hundred people in the county of Limerick are on the brink of starvation. Stringent orders have been given to the police to suppress bread riots.

Arrangements will be made to expedite the voyage, so as to enable the ex-Empress to arrive at the scene of the Prince Imperial's death by the 1st of June, the anniversary of that event.

Madrid advices foreshadow a change in the policy of Spain toward Cuba. The Cabinet, among other things, has authorized the submission to the Cortes of a bill for the modification of import duties on sugar and molasses from Cuba.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

The Sergeant-at-Arms brought to the bar of the Senate L. T. Smith, Levi Wilson and E. B. Purcell, on the 8th, to answer to a charge of contempt in not obeying the summons to testify in the Ingalls case. After considerable discussion the prisoners were discharged. A joint resolution giving the Hot Springs Commission sixty days more time was passed. Bills and resolutions introduced: By Mr. Kernan, allowing Northern men who had their property seized by the Confederacy to sue the United States for the same; by Mr. Plumb, to create an additional land district in Kansas; by Mr. Jones, to repeal the twenty-second section of the act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road. In executive session, Worthy S. Streator was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the Eighteenth Ohio district....In the House, Mr. Garfield was congratulated, on his appearance, on account of his election to the Senate. After several committee reports, the bill on the revision of the laws was passed. After the morning hour the whole day was passed in committee of the whole on the revision of the rules.

The Senate was not in session Jan. 9. The special Senate committee appointed to investigate the negro exodus consists of Messrs. Voorhees, Vance and Pendleton, Democrats, and Windom and Blair, Republicans......In the House little was done, the body being in committee of the whole on the private calendar most of the day. Among the bills introduced and referred was one by Mr. Ryan, admitting, free of duty, clothing and other articles destined for the relief of colored immigrants; by Mr. Hayes (Ill.), granting a pension to each survivor of the Mexican War who was not engaged in the late rebellion, or who did not abet the same. A number of private bills were reported to the House and passed. Representatives Blackburn, Blount, Cannon, Clymer and Hawley were appointed a sub-committee to investigate the Star Route service.

Bills were introduced in the Senate, on Jan. 12, as follows: By Mr. Paddock, to find out by a commission the losses to citizens by Indian depredations; by Mr. Sanders, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to allot lands in severalty to the Indians; by Mr. Butler, to inquire as to the expediency of establishing a Territorial Government for Alaska; by Mr. Davis (Ill.), authorizing the payment of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad for mail transportation in 1876. The Vice President laid before the Senate an estimate of $77,494 for the construction of officers' quarters at Omaha. The Military Academy appropriation bill was passed, as were several private bills....In the House, bills and resolutions were presented: By Mr. Warner, to limit the paper currency of the country to its present volume; also, that the United States notes shall be of denominations not less than $1 nor more than $1,000, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem best, but not more than 15 per cent. of such notes shall be in denominations larger than $100; also, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report when and how the treasury became a member of the New York Clearing House; also, whether or not that Clearing House accepts to assure certificates payable in silver coin in settlement of the balances; by Mr. Ballou, to reduce the tax on deposits subject to payment with persons and associations engaged in banking business; by F. Wood, to facilitate the refunding of the national debt; by Mr. Forsythe, to increase the circulation of national banks, and to relieve them from the payment of a tax on circulation, to liquidate the national debt, and to strengthen the public credit; by Mr. Shelley, for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War department; by Mr. Davis, to restrict Chinese immigration; by Mr. Updegraff, fixing the time for counting the vote for President and Vice President; by Mr. Caswell, for the issuing of certificates of the denomination of $1 and $2 and 50 and 25 cents; by Mr. Crittenden, for a national jail and prison; by Mr. Cox, relative to a monument to Thomas Jefferson; by Mr. Clymer, exempting from taxation promissory notes issued for wages; by Mr. Willis, for the erection of a monument to Zachary Taylor; by Mr. Dibrell, declaring all public roads postal roads; by Mr. Springer, repealing the law for the issue of "request" envelopes; by Mr. Gunter, to equalize homesteads, also, to graduate and reduce the price of public lands to actual settlers; by Mr. Willits, extending the jurisdiction of United States Circuit and District Courts over crimes committed by Indians; by Mr. Upson, to prohibit and punish the sub-letting or transfer of mail-lettings; by Mr. Sapp [illegible], to create a Mineral Bureau; by Mr. Knott, conferring upon United States Circuit Courts jurisdiction in war claims; by Mr. Clardy, to put salt on the free list; by Mr. Ellis, subsidizing a mail route to Scotland; by Mr. Hunckle, for a monument to Baron De Kalb. A resolution was adopted providing for the appointment of a special committee of seven to examine into the method of the payment of pensions. The resolution directing the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department to investigate the facts relative to the Consulate at Hong Kong was adopted.

A communication was laid before the Senate from the Postmaster General, Jan. 13, asking a deficiency appropriation of $102,000, and a number of petitions on various subjects were presented. Mr. Morrill offered the following resolution, which was laid on the table, and he announced his intention to speak upon it on Thursday: "That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire as to the practicability of refunding the national debt at a less rate than 4 per cent. interest, and also as to whether or not some effective provision can be made whereby bona-fide subscriptions for sums in moderate amounts may be available, and report by bill or otherwise." The bill in regard to certain Ohio courts was passed. A recommendation from the Secretary of War for an increased appropriation for copying the Confederate records was referred. Bills introduced: By Mr. Morrill, regulating the authentication and use of proxies in meetings by National Bank Associations; by Mr. Saulsbury, to preserve the secrecy of telegrams; by Mr. Plumb, to establish an additional land district in Kansas; by Mr. [illegible], to prohibit Clerks of Federal courts from taking fees for copying records in common-law actions in the book called the "Final Record." Mr. Bayard, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the bill to admit free of duty articles intended for the Millers' International Exhibition in June. Passed. Official nominations: Land officers, William D. Lambert, Receiver of Public Moneys at Norfolk, Neb.; Edward S. Butler, Register of the Land Office at Norfolk, Neb.; Thomas M. Gibson, Register of the Land Office at Dardanelle, Ark.....In the House a bill was reported to regulate the manner of counting Presidential votes, and it was made the special order for Jan. 28. The Hot Springs Reservation bill was passed, as was an appropriation for furniture for the House, and for the purchase of works for the library. A number of executive communications were laid before the House and referred, among them one from the Postmaster General as to the use of the mails for lottery purposes. The House then went into committee of the whole on the rules, and a long debate was indulged in. Afterward the following bills were introduced: By Mr. Shallenberger, authorizing the refunding of the national debt, reducing the annual interest thereon and improving the public credit; by Mr. Willis (Ky.), for the relief of depositors in the Freedmen's Bank.

A large number of petitions for a constitutional amendment giving the suffrage to women were presented in the Senate on the 14th inst., by Messrs. Davis (Ill.), the Vice President, Williams, Allison, Kirkwood, Baldwin, Ferry, Davis and Pendleton. Petitions in favor of the Bayard resolutions on the currency, and for a temperance commission were also presented. A bill to relieve the United States Treasurer from the amount now charged to him and deposited with the several States was reported; and the bill to increase the pensions of totally-disabled soldiers and sailors from $50 to $72 per month was passed. A bill was introduced by Mr. Hoar, providing that the States which have claims against the United States shall present them before the Court of Claims by the 1st of March, 1881, or be forever barred. Mr. Voorhees presented a bill to carry into effect the treaty with the Osage Indians. The following nominations were sent in: B. Pomeroy, United States Attorney for the Territory of Arizona; Elihu A. White, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Second district of North Carolina; Henry M. Atkinson, United States Surveyor General for New Mexico. Registers of Land Offices—Isaac H. Wing, Bayfield, Wis.; Stephen H. Alban, Wausau, Wis.; H. W. Parker, Beatrice, Neb.; Joseph B. Bloss, Detroit, Mich.; Samuel W. Malloy, Camden, Ark.; Felix G. Clarke, Des Moines, Ia....In the House, the bill for the free importation of classical antiquities was passed. Mr. Buckner, Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, reported a bill that the National Bank act be so amended as to require every banking association to keep in gold or silver coins one-half of the reserve fund now required by law. The bill remitting the duty on an altar from Rome for Indianapolis was passed, as was a bill allowing free importation of articles for exhibition at the Cincinnati Millers' Exhibition. Bills and communications introduced: By Mr. McCoid, to establish a Board of Commissioners of Inter-State Commerce; from the President, a report of board for testing metals; from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to tobacco dealers; from the Secretary of the Navy, asking for $10,000 to complete Vinnie Ream's statue of Farragut.

THE MAINE MUDDLE.

But little of interest or importance transpired at Augusta on the 8th. Both branches of the Legislature held brief sessions. In the House, the Republican members holding certificates, sixty in number, presented themselves and asked to be sworn in, but the Clerk refused to administer the oath just at present, as he did not exactly know the extent of his powers in that direction, but should inform himself.

"In statu quo" expresses the condition of affairs at the Maine capital on the 9th. The House was in session all day without a quorum at any time. Not a single Republican member appeared on the floor. Messrs. Swann and Harriman, the members who made affidavit that attempts were made by the Republicans to bribe them, gave details of their negotiations with the corrupt solicitor, from their seats in the House. The man who paid the money was stated to be William R. White, of Winthrop. Gen. Chamberlain, of the militia, issued a proclamation, notifying the people that he had taken charge of all public property, and would faithfully guard it until a Governor and other State officers had been elected.

Matters wore a quiet look at the Maine capital on Saturday and Sunday, the 10th and 11th. The House adjourned early on Saturday for want of a quorum, all the Republicans being absent. The State Treasurer refused to pay out any money, and declined to honor two orders passed by the Senate. Eight armed men were discovered in the library of the State House, apparently concealed, and guarding a quantity of arms and ammunition. At the demand of the police authorities these men were removed. The arms taken from Bangor to Augusta were returned. William R. White, of Winthrop, who was charged by Representatives Swann and Harriman with attempting to bribe them to stay away from the Legislature, issued a card making a positive denial of any such transaction. James D. Lamson, President of the Senate, assumed the duties of Governor pending the election of a successor to Garcelon, whose term expired on the 9th.

Gen. Chamberlain, commander of the State militia of Maine, issued a proclamation on the 12th inst., refusing to recognize the President of the Senate as acting Governor of the State. He also issued a proclamation creating "the military division of Maine," designating himself as Commander-in-Chief, warning all armed bodies of men not regularly enrolled as militia to disperse, reproducing the order of ex-Gov. Garcelon, in which he authorized Chamberlain to protect the property and institutions of the State until his successor was duly qualified. The Republican members of the Legislature were greatly encouraged by these two manifestoes, and in the evening they filed into the Capitol and quietly took possession of it. Both houses were duly organized, and resolutions passed in each appointing a committee to wait on the Supreme Court and ask its opinion as to the legality of the proceedings.

The Fusionist Legislature had a brief session on the 13th, but made no attempt to transact business. The Republican members were not in session, having adjourned at an early hour in the morning, after an all-night session, until the 17th. The Fusionist committee appointed to investigate the bribery charges met and took considerable testimony. A cousin of William R. White swore that an effort was made by the latter to bribe him, and that he himself told White that Swann could be bought. White refused to obey a summons to appear before the investigating committee, alleging that it was not legally organized, and had no authority to administer oaths or compel the attendance of witnesses. Maj. Gen. Chamberlain was formally called on to recognize the authority of Acting-Gov. Lamson, but refused, basing his action on the order of Garcelon directing him to take charge of the institutions and property of the State. O. D. Baker, counsel for the Republican Advisory Committee, delivered an opinion to the effect that there was no Acting Governor, as Lamson, the claimant, was not President of a constitutional Senate.

The situation at Augusta was virtually unchanged on the 14th. The Legislature met at the usual hour, the Republicans remaining away. The Bribery Committee met, but transacted little business. The Election Committee reported in favor of unseating Dunnell, Republican member from Westbrook, and the seating of Sules, Democrat, on the ground that Dunnell had but two majority, and three men at least voted for him who had no right to do so. Action on the report was postponed.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

Annual Report of the Commissioners.

The Southern Claims Commissioners have sent to Congress their ninth general report, a synopsis of which is herewith appended:

The number of claims decided since their last report is 2,290. In each of these cases a special report is submitted, with the petition, evidence and all papers relating thereto. The reasons for the allowance and disallowance of the claims are therein set forth. The Commissioners are unanimous in all their reports.

Annexed is a table setting forth the amounts allowed and disallowed in the States wherein the Commissioners have jurisdiction:

States.	Total amount claimed.	Amount allowed.	Amount disallowed.
Alabama	$ 483,654	$ 21,400	$ 462,254
Arkansas	1,056,231	31,076	1,025,155
Florida	57,081	3,470	53,611
Georgia	785,856	37,663	[illegible]
Louisiana	[illegible]	12,471	[illegible]
Mississippi	1,168,928	34,201	1,134,727
North Carolina	128,025	14,784	113,241
South Carolina	174,618	5,910	168,708
Tennessee	685,482	43,677	641,805
Texas	61,218	1,880	62,338
Virginia	1,027,258	29,699	997,559
West Virginia	86,737	5,677	81,060
Total	$8,698,460	$241,611	$8,456,849

The whole number of claims decided this year is 2,290
Number allowed 553
Number disallowed 1,737
2,290

The amount of claims disposed of in this report is $8,698,460.56
Amount allowed $ 241,611.22
Amount disallowed 8,456,849.34
8,698,460.56

Of the whole number of 2,290 claimants, fifty-three were bankrupts, whose claims were disallowed pursuant to the decision of the Commissioners that, as in bankruptcy the property of the bankrupt passes to his assignee, the bankrupt was not the owner of the claim, and could not be allowed therefor.

Of the 553 claims allowed, fifty-five of the claimants were in the Union army and three in the United States navy during the war.

Of the 1,737 claims disallowed, 238 of the claimants were in the Confederate military service, twenty-nine were in the Confederate civil service, seventy voted for the Ordinance of Secession or for separation, nineteen took the oath of allegiance to the Confederacy, and one signed the Ordinance of Secession—in all 357.

Whole number of claims presented 22,298
Number heretofore presented 14,306
Number now reported 2,290
16,596

There remain 5,702

Of the 5,702 not yet reported, there are about 250 in the hands of the Commissioners, some of which are in the hands of agents for investigation, and others so recently closed and submitted, or still open for rebutting evidence, that the Commissioners have not been able to include them in this report. These 250 cases will all be decided and reported to Congress by the time the term of this commission ends, on the 10th of next March.

The rest of the 5,702 cases not yet reported are claims in which no evidence whatever on the part of the claimant to sustain the claim was filed by the 10th day of March, 1879. The act of Congress of June 15, 1878, provides, in regard to all such claims, that "they shall be barred forever thereafter, and the Commissioners of Claims shall report all such claims so barred to Congress at its next session thereafter." In compliance with this act of Congress the Commissioners are preparing a list of all such claims, which they will report to Congress at the present session.

Eccentricities of the Olden Time.

Mr. J. Underwood, who died in 1733, left £6,000 to his sister on condition of being buried in the following manner: At the grave-side, six gentlemen, who were appointed to follow him, sung the last stanza of the twentieth Ode of the second Book of Horace. No bell was tolled nor black worn; no one was invited but these six gentlemen; and no relation followed the corpse. The coffin was painted green, and the deceased was buried with his clothes on. With him were buried three copies of Horace, Bentley's Milton, and a Greek Testament. After supper, they sang the thirty-first Ode of the first Book of Horace, all being in strict accordance with the will.

A maiden lady who died in 1786 left the following singular legacies in her will: "Item—I leave to my dear entertaining Jacko (a monkey) £10 per annum during his natural life. Item—To Shock and Tib (a lap-dog and cat) £5 each for their annual subsistence during life; but should it happen that Shock died before Tib, or Tib before Shock, then, and in that case, the survivor to have the whole.

About 1770, there was living in London a tradesman who had disposed of eleven daughters in marriage, with each of whom he gave their weight in halfpence as a fortune. The young ladies must have been bulky, for the lightest of them weighed £50, 2 shillings and eightpence.

A National Grange Memorial.

The National Grange of Patrons of Husbandry have memorialized Congress on the subject of grievances from which they pray for relief:

1. That transportation companies engaged in inter-State commerce of the United States have so far exceeded their chartered rights and franchises that to-day their management is without exception illegal and arbitrary.

2. That frequent and unreasonable fluctuations in their rates of transportation, both of freight and passengers, are whimsical and unnecessary.

3. Railroads are common carriers, built by the people for the common weal, and should not be tolerated as arbitrary and crushing monopolies.

4. Organized combination among these transportation companies destroys the possibility of legitimate competition and oppresses the industrial classes of our country.

5. These monopolies, annually growing more powerful and defiant, have not been and are not restrained by effective Congressional legislation.

The memorialists therefore urge the enactment of such laws as will relieve a burdened and oppressed people from these unlawful exactions.

Grant's Speech at Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: It is with a good deal of diffidence that I arise after the flattering words that I have heard. I know not what to say, except that I believe in the statements made as to our country—that what is good for our land is equally good for every part of it. I never wanted anything for myself that I was not willing to accord to any other citizen as long as he obeyed the laws and upheld the nation. I believe we are now on a basis of fraternal peace and concord, and we shall move on to peace and prosperity greater than ever known in this land, or possible in any other. We are in our infancy now, but we are stronger than any other in the world, and will be so as long as we are true to ourselves, and remain one and indivisible.

Why Washington Was Not Taken.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston was lately in Raleigh, N. C., and a gentleman asked him rather pointedly why the Southern army did not take Washington after the battle of Manassas. Rising on his toes, he replied: "There were two reasons—myself and the Potomac river. I had reached that age that I knew an American soldier could not ford a river a mile wide and eighteen feet deep."

How a Top Climbed a String.

The Japanese top-spinner walked to the side of the stage and untied a string, which as soon as it was loosed swung quickly to the middle of the stage, and then hung perpendicularly. After untying this string, the Japanese took a top from his assistant, and, twirling it in his hand until it revolved quickly enough, he took hold of the end of the string, and, placing the stem of the top at right angles to it, left things to take care of themselves.

The top spun a short time at the end of the string, but it soon began to move slowly upward, still spinning at right angles with the string. It continued in this way to move steadily upward until, at length, it had traversed the entire distance, and was lost to view behind the "flies" over the stage.

When the applause that greeted this trick had subsided, the Japanese moved the doll-house to the center of the stage and placed it beside the table. He then set six tops, exactly alike in size and appearance, spinning upon the table, and, taking a seventh in his hand, indicated to the spectators, by signs, that he would send it on a journey through the doll-house. He then sat down on the floor, and curling up his legs, Turk fashion, started the seventh top spinning. It ran along the floor until it reached a sort of inclined drawbridge leading to the entrance of the little house, and then went up slowly to, and through, the open door. The juggler waited a moment, as if expecting some signal from the now invisible top. His suspense was relieved an instant later by the tinkling of a silver bell, which indicated that the top had entered one of the tiny rooms. The Japanese held up one finger and waited, in a listening attitude, for a second signal. It came, as before, in the tinkling of a bell, upon hearing which the man held up two fingers. Finally, when ten rooms had been visited, and ten bells, rung in this way, had been counted on the performer's fingers, he arose and pointed toward the house, and toward the table, upon which the six tops were yet spinning. After a few moments, during which he silently watched the door of the house, the top that had been ringing the bells came quickly out of the entrance, ran down the drawbridge and dropped motionless at the feet of the Japanese. That same moment the tops on the table stopped, and dropped over on their sides—"Japanese Top-spinning," in St. Nicholas.

What Workingmen May Hope for from Electricity.

Prof. W. E. Ayrton closed a lecture to 4,000 of the workingmen of Sheffield, England, on the subject of electricity as a motive power, with this picture: "We are, it is true, a commercial people, but do we not still love our hills and our fields? There was a time when the cutler of now black, grimy Sheffield was very fleet of foot in following the chase. There was a time when 'not only in the village around old Sheffield,' so says the history of Hallamshire, 'were the file-makers' shops or the smithy to be seen, with the apprentices at work; but even on the hillside in the open country at the end of the barn would be the cutler's shed, while in the valley below, by the river, was the grinding wheel ready to sharpen the tools that had been manufactured.' And why not now? Why should not the mountain air that has given you, workmen of Hallamshire, in past times your sinew, your independence of character, blow over your grindstone now? Why should not division of labor be carried to this end, and power be brought to you instead of you to power? Let us hope, then, that in the next century electricity may undo whatever harm steam may have done during the last, and that the future workman of Sheffield will, instead of breathing the necessarily impure air of crowded factories, find himself again on the hillside, but with electric energy laid on at his command."

Old Story Revived.

Many readers will remember the tragedy that occurred in West Winchester, Ontario, where Clark Brown murdered his father and sister, and was afterward hanged for the deed. The tragedy is again brought before the public by a rather extraordinary occurrence there last week. The bodies of the father and daughter were exhumed and photographs were taken of the eyes of the victims, under the idea that this would show whether or not any one else than Clark Brown had anything to do with the murder, as it was supposed that the last scene on which the deceased looked would be pictured on the retina. The eyes of the old man revealed nothing, and the Toronto expert who had charge of the case thinks this shows that he was killed in the dark. The most astounding part of the business is that the eyes of the little girl, Addie, distinctly show two objects, which are said to be pictures of her mother and the brother who did the murder. The retina pictures will be enlarged, so as to be unmistakable, and meanwhile the mother has been arrested and is now in jail. It is thought that Clark Brown and his mother killed the father, and the little girl saw the crime and was also killed to hide the first deed. The whole case reads like one of Edgar Allen Poe's romances of crime and mystery.

A Mule That Wasn't for Sale.

He was showing the man the new bay mule that he was working in a team with the old gray. "You warrant him sound and perfectly kind and gentle?" the man said. "Perfectly," said Farmer John. "My wife and children drive him, and he is a perfect pet. Comes into the house like a dog." "Easy to shoe?" "Well, I guess so; fact is, I never had him shod. I don't believe in it; he works better without it," replied Farmer John. "How does he act when you put the crupper on?" asked the man. Farmer John hesitated. "Well, pretty good, I guess," he said; "fact is I never put it on." "How does it get on?" asked the man; "who does put it on?" "Well I kind of don't know," said Farmer John; "fact is, he had the harness on when I got him, an' it fit him so well, and he seemed to be so kind o' contented in it, that I sort of never took it off'n him." "And how long have you had him?" asked the man. Farmer John chewed a wheat straw very meditatively. "Well," he said, "not to exceed more'n two years, mebbe." And the man backed a little further away, and said he would "sort of look around a little further before he bought, like." And Farmer John never saw him again, not even unto this day.

Mr. Ramsey, the Secretary of War, is tall and very heavy, and has a voice to match his figure.

Ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, has a gold mine in North Carolina which pay him $1,000 a week.

The grocer offered him a cold ham, but he said he'd rather not take the cold shoulder from any one.

There is a young lady who follows the fashions so closely that she will not eat oysters unless they are scalloped.

An Ithaca little girl, attempting to describe an elephant, spoke of it as "that thing that kicks up with is nose."

Before the invention of pins both sexes used ribands, loop-holes, laces with points and tags, clasps, hooks and skewers of brass, silver and gold. They were made in England in 1543.

Lotta, the actress, was a witness in a St. Louis lawsuit. "What is your age?" she was asked. "People might not believe me if I told," she replied, "for some say I am 45." That was the only answer she would make.

A Camden (N. J.) paper asserts that the following notice was found on the door of a business firm in that city: "To our creditors—We have busted. As everything else is going up, we trust you will not feel surprised."

Gambetta is, as a rule, the most reticent of men. When talking about politics he generally takes a sly glance round, and ends up with something commonplace. When, however, he does burst out he makes no secret of his opinions.

A wax-work figure of Franklin, on exhibition in France, is labeled "Franklin, inventor of electricity. . . . This savant, after having made several voyages around the world, died on the Sandwich islands, and was devoured by savages, of whom not a single fragment was ever recovered."

A French paper of New Orleans praises the women of that city by saying that the fairest and most carefully-reared ladies, reduced to poverty, have so readily adjusted themselves to circumstances that they can do their own housework, even to the washing and cooking, and work with the needle besides to support the family.

The cold-water odeal was an ancient method of testing the guilt or innocence of persons accused of crime. The accused, being tied under the arms, was thrown into the river. If he sank to the bottom he was held to be guiltless and drawn up by the cord; but if he floated the water rejected him because of his guilt.

DARWIN, famous for his theory of the descent of man, has been awarded the prize of 12,000 francs offered at Turin for the most important discoveries in the physiology of plants.

THERE are large numbers of miners and ranchmen who are preparing to enter the northern part of the Ute reservation in Colorado next spring, under the belief that it will be opened for settlement by Congress.

A NEW theory as to the cause of the disaster at the Frith of Tay is that of Gilkes, the builder of the bridge. It is that the wind, which was blowing a gale, took the train off the rails and against the girders, which brought down the entire span.

THE first case under the Seltz law in Ohio came to an abrupt termination at Lancaster, the Judge ordering the jury to return a verdict of not guilty, on the ground that the offense as set forth in the indictment—intimidation of a voter—was unknown to the statutes.

AN old pirate dying in the poorhouse at Cassopolis, Mich., confessed that he pulled the plank from beneath Mrs. Theodosia Burr Alston, the daughter of Aaron Burr, and that all the crew and passengers with her on the ship, en route from Charleston to New York, met a like fate from their piratical captors.

THERE is considerable excitement in Atlanta, Ga., over the leasing of the Central railroad of Georgia by the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis company. The latter guarantees 6 per cent. interest on the stock and bonds of the former for six years, and 7 per cent. forever afterward. This gives a through line from St. Louis to Savannah under one management.

THE Albany Law Journal takes a business view of leap-year, and tells its readers the law of this particular sort of year. The 28th and 29th days of February are regarded in law as one day, so that a note dated on the 28th day of February, 1880, this year, payable one day from date, would be due on the 4th of March, the same as if there were but twenty-eight days in the month.

A MODERN Brutus of the female sex has been discovered in Montana Territory. Though 70 years of age, she crossed the mountains over a rocky trail to be present at the trial of her daughter, accused of murder, and to say to her, in the presence of the hushed court, when asked if she were guilty, "Tell the truth, my daughter, if it takes you to the scaffold." The court and spectators were so affected that the Judge ordered an adjournment.

JOHN TAYLOR, the Mormon, preached a bitter sermon at Salt Lake, recently, declaring that polygamy would be practiced in spite of the Federal courts. Like the Abolitionists of old, he appealed to a "higher law," and asserted that it was the duty of the Saints to obey the commandments of God regardless of the statutes of their enemies, and leave the results in His hands. A request on his part for the people who would practice polygamy, law or no law, to signify their intention, brought up the hand of nearly every person in the vast congregation.

UNDER the present law marriages in England cannot, without a costly license, the fees of which go to the Archbishop of Canterbury, be solemnized except between the hours of 8 a. m. and noon. A member of the House of Commons has given notice of a bill to repeal this law and allow them to be celebrated in the evening. It may pass the House of Commons, but the long experience with the bill repealing the law prohibiting marriage with a deceased wife's sister makes it improbable that it will run the gantlet of the House of Lords. The conservatism of that body is always to be relied upon, especially when, as in this case, a prerogative of one of its members is in jeopardy.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Nation calls attention to the statement in the "Encyclopedia Britannica" that, if the "natural resources of America—that is the two continents of North and South America—were fully developed, it would afford sustenance to 3,600,000,000 of inhabitants, or three times the estimated population of the globe." But, as the United States has nearly one-third of the arable land, the United States alone might support a population equal to that of the globe at the present day, and then would not be as crowded as England now is; there being 389 to the square mile in England, while even in America the population mentioned would give but 364 to the arable square mile. But, at the rate of increase since the census was first taken in 1790, we should attain this population before the close of the next century. The population, within the last ninety years, has doubled every twenty-five years, which, if there be 100,000,000 in 1900, would bring it up to 1,200,000,000 in 1987. In all human probability, however, the rate of increase will grow constantly smaller and the pressure of population upon food be indefinitely postponed.

HON. JOHN BRIGHT, the Liberal statesman of England, at a recent banquet, spoke of the greatness and the prospective progress of the United States. He said: "Its population now has reached to 50,000,000, which is nearly half or about half more than the whole population of Great Britain and Ireland at this day. I have no doubt there are scores in this room who, before they live to the age I have attained to, will live to see the day when the population of the United States will be more than double what it now is, and that it will pass 100,000,000 of people."

THE practice of locking passengers in the railroad coaches is a custom that would never be tolerated in America. The very fact that the door was locked would stir an irresistible impulse in the liberty-loving bosom of the average American to kick it open. There is even in England a sort of mild idea of this kind afloat. A gentleman of Detroit, reports the Free Press, who has traveled a good deal in Britain, says that most of knowing passengers there provide themselves with the small square keys that will unlock the door of the British railroad carriage. Those nervous passengers who do not like to travel with locked doors, yet have no key, can easily make one with a piece of silver of the requisite size. Strange as it may appear, the door is unlocked in this way by slipping the silver in the guard's hand while the appropriate words are whispered in his ear.

THE New York banks are in a decidedly healthy condition, a person may reasonably assume, if the generous presents which most of them made to their employes on New-Year's day are to be taken as an indication. One bank gave $1,000 apiece to each of its clerks; another gave its Cashier a present of a check for $1,500; another gave each employe a sum equivalent to 10 per cent. of his salary; the Fourth National Bank gave from $25 to $450 apiece to its clerks, and the Continental gave from $250 to $500 apiece. Such liberality is to be commended, especially if the bank officers are distributing their own, and not the money of their stockholders and depositors, and the recipients ought to be good boys for the next year and not steal a cent.

Some Men's Hobbies.

A banker, well known in the financial world, died in one of the Atlantic cities, at the age of 80, leaving a property valued at millions. After his death a collection of toys was sold for over $100,000, which he had been accumulating for twenty years. Scarcely any valuable or mechanical toy had been made in Europe of which he had not a specimen, but his assortment included, also, the most trivial of children's playthings. Another, a citizen of Philadelphia, one of the foremost jurists of his day, had a fancy for collecting fairy tales. His shelves contained thousands of these volumes in every language. Manias for china, old brasses and rare editions are so common among scholarly men that the incongruity of the pursuit does not strike us. The peculiarity of a hobby, indeed, is that it is usually at odds with the general character of the person who exhibits it. It is a bit of childhood left by careless nature among the sterner stuff of which manhood is made. James Fisk, the most hardened and dishonest of swindlers, had a passionate love for canaries, and was surrounded by them at home. Our genial poet, Oliver Wendell Holmes, delights in graveyards, boasts that he knows every one within forty miles of Boston, "and when the spring opens," he says, smiling, "I go out to see how my dead men do." The doctor, also, is fond of working with tools. The portable stereoscopic glass is his invention. One of the most eminent surgeons in the country delights in writing poems, and very bad poems they are. There can be no doubt that an innocent hobby (and hobbies generally are innocent) is a safety-valve for the escape of nervous excitement in men who use their brains to an exceptional degree. For this reason they usually do much toward softening and humanizing the character. Whatever is to be a boy's trade or profession, encourage in him a taste for music, or art, fishing, gunning; some hobby, in short. Before you fill the boiler and build the fire, provide the safety-valve.—Boston Youth's Companion.

Too Much Goose.

Eva McAllister, only 11 years old, killed an eagle at Grafton, Me. Hearing a disturbance among the geese near the house, she went to ascertain the trouble, when she discovered that an eagle had one of the number and was trying to rise with it; but the goose was an old one and proved too heavy, whereupon the little girl seized a club, and, rushing upon the eagle, succeeded, after a desperate battle, in killing him. The eagle measured six feet two inches from tip to tip of wings, two feet six inches from bill to end of tail, and weighed over seven pounds.

FARM NOTES.

Some Hints on the Management of Live Stock.

[From the American Agriculturist.]

Pigs.—Store pigs will thrive well on roots with a slop of bran, sour milk and water. A supply of roots on hand will greatly reduce the cost of feeding store pigs. Turnips that cannot well be fed to cows may be given to the pigs. Give young pigs a warm, dry bed.

Lice.—The irritation of lice keeps young animals poor and miserable. To rid them of these pests, brush the skin all over thoroughly with a brush dipped in a mixture of linseed-oil and kerosene, shaking the excess of oil out before using the brush. Work the grease down to the skin; if this is persevered in the lice will soon disappear.

Mares in Foal.—A roomy loose box is the safest and most comfortable place for a brood mare. A colt may be raised for the same cost as a cow, and when 3 years old may be worth four cows. There is a brisk demand for good work horses, and a large export business is growing up, so that the keeping of mares will become a source of income. But not only must the right kind be kept, and the right kind of colts be raised, but the mares must have proper stable accommodations. When a mare is idle a large portion of the time, exercise is needed, and this she can get in a loose box.

Colts.—Young colts should be well fed and cared for the first winter; provide a warm stall for them, with plenty of litter, and give them a good brushing down once every day. A quart of oats, daily, will be needed, and some bright, clean, sweet hay. Cut-feed is not suitable for young colts, whose digestion should not be overtaxed by food packed solidly in the stomach; feed light and frequently.

Work-Oxen.—Oxen that work on frozen roads, although there is no ice, should be shod. The rough, hard surface wears down the hoofs very fast, and causes inflammation of the interior; the trouble may not become apparent until later, when the mischief is difficult to repair. If the feet are tender and hot, and slight lameness is perceived, examine the hoofs between the claws, cleanse the feet and apply remedies if needed.

Lambs.—Lambs dropped this month should be well fed through the ewe. Give little heating food, such as corn, in any shape; but bran, oil-cake meal, and oatmeal in gruel will be healthful and nourishing for the ewe and the lamb. In stormy weather the ewe and lamb may be kept under cover, but in fine, sunny days they may run in a dry yard; but not with the other sheep. Early lambs for market should be pushed ahead as fast as may be safe.

Poultry.—Hens and early pullets will now be laying freely. They should be encouraged by giving them warm food. Baked small potatoes taken direct from the oven, and hot, are much relished by the fowls; scalded corn-meal, corn, or wheat parched in the oven, crusts of bread, or oat-meal, steeped in hot milk; and meat scraps, with some stimulating condiment, like Cayenne pepper, will be found to add greatly to the store of eggs all through the stormiest weather; but the fowls must have a dry, warm, clean, sheltered place to roost and lay in.

Sheep.—A flock of sheep may be made the most profitable of farm stock, both in return of money and manure. By feeding a small flock well, through the winter, their value may be easily doubled. But the feeding should be liberal and the care unremitting. The chief requisites for success with sheep are, to provide abundant good food and pure well water; to feed and water regularly; to provide fresh pure air, and to avoid dampness. When feeding sheep for market, it is well to try the weights every second week, and note the increase.

Breeding ewes that are expected to drop lambs early should be closely watched. The springing of the udder is an unfailing sign of approaching parturition. The ewe should then be removed to a separate pen and kept quiet, but visited at least every three hours and the last thing at night. It is rarely that any help is needed, except in very cold weather, to wrap a piece of soft blanket about the lamb and to help it suck as soon as possible. As soon as the lamb gets a meal it will be all right, and the ewe may be left to herself for a few hours.

Tameness and gentleness are qualities to be encouraged in all domestic animals. Their value is discovered when it is necessary to handle the animals at critical periods. When confidence, if not affection, exists, one can do much with a suffering animal, when otherwise interference might make matters worse. It would be well to make friends with cows and sheep especially, by petting them, giving them salt and palatable things, and mingling with them in the yards. Every animal should be trained to be handled when loose in the yard.

Cows.—Milking cows will be benefited by mixing their feed with warm water, if this can be done without too much trouble. A family cow may be treated to a warm mess in the mornings without difficulty, and it will increase the milk perceptibly. Cut the hay and pour a pailful of hot water over it; mix the mess so that the hay is all wetted, and add the meal; mix again, and feed while warm. In a dairy of twenty cows the extra milk will pay for the labor needed. If the food can be made more digestible, and by giving it warm, the waste of animal heat will be avoided, and the same effect will result as from an excess of food. Thus the study of the principles of feeding may be made a source of profit by the economy which may be practiced through it. The card and brush should be in frequent use during the winter, and, if necessary, a coarse cloth and warm water may be used to preserve cleanliness. If filth is permitted to gather on the skin it is difficult to remove at this season.

Young calves will thrive well if kept in a shed together and well fed. The shed may be littered liberally, and need not be cleaned out until the spring, or until the manure has become a foot or more deep. Calves may thus become good manure-makers, but it will be necessary to feed them well. Bran and oats, with a little corn, will be the best for them. Give one pint a day for those under a year, and a quart or two daily for yearlings. Costiveness in cold weather should be carefully guarded against, and, if necessary, half a pint of raw linseed-oil, or a pint of linseed-meal, should be given with the food as a remedy.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

MOLASSES CAKE.—One cup molasses, one cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter or fried meat grease, one-half cup of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, two eggs, flour enough to make as stiff as sponge cake.

TOMATO SOUP.—Twelve tomatoes, pared and cut fine, boiled one hour, or two quarts of canned tomatoes, boiled one-half hour; add two quarts of rich milk, stirring constantly, one pint of oyster crackers rolled, butter size of an egg; serve immediately.

GOVERNMENT CLERK'S OMELET.—Take two eggs, beat them well, whites and yelks; add one cup of milk, in which a table-spoonful of corn-starch has been dissolved, and a little salt and pepper; have butter sufficiently hot in pan; stir up the omelet while cooking.

TO BROIL SMOKED HALIBUT.—Select halibut of a dark-brown color, the thinnest and hardest; soak twenty-four hours in cold water, with the flesh side down; only cover with water; broil over hot coals; serve with a little butter, or poach eggs and dish them with the halibut as if for ham.

DELICATE CAKE.—Take half a pound of butter, one pound of sugar, one pound of flour, half a pint of sweet milk or water, four eggs. Beat the butter and sugar to a cream, then add the beaten eggs, then the milk or water, then the flour; mix thoroughly and put the batter into your pan; sift fine sugar over the top, and bake immediately in a moderate oven.

SCRAP PUDDING.—Put scraps of bread, crust and crumb, into a bowl, with sufficient milk to cover them well. Cover with a plate, and put it into the oven to soak for about half an hour. Take it out, and mash the bread with a fork till it is a pulp; then add a handful of raisins and as many currants, a teacupful of brown sugar, half a cup of milk, some candied lemon peel, and one egg. Stir it up well, grease a pudding-dish, and pour the pudding in. Grate over a little nutmeg, put it into a moderate oven, and let it bake for an hour and a half.

COLD MEAT AND HAM CROQUETS.—Take cold fowl or cold meat of any kind, with a few slices of cold ham, fat and lean, chop together until very fine, add half as much stale bread grated, salt, pepper, grated nutmeg, a teaspoonful of made mustard, one table-spoonful of catchup, a small lump of butter. Knead all well together, make into small flat cakes (the yelk of an egg can be used to bind the ingredients, but it is not necessary). Brush with the yelk of a beaten egg on both sides, cover thickly with grated bread-crumbs, fry in a little lard or butter to a light brown. It is surprising how many of these croquets can be made from a very little cold meat and ham, and they are excellent.

Japanese Top-Spinning.

At certain seasons of the year top-spinning engages a great part of the leisure time of American and English boys, and some of them become very skillful. But Japanese jugglers are the people to spin tops, and I will try to describe some of their more difficult feats, as I saw them.

I was at a Japanese juggling entertainment, and when the first part of the performance was over the men who had been acting cleared the stage, set on it a small table, a number of swords and a little house, like the doll houses sold in top shops, bowed low, and left. Immediately afterward a richly-dressed Japanese made his appearance, carrying on his arm about a dozen tops, somewhat resembling common humming-tops, each with a long, thin stem running through the bulb-shaped part and protruding at the top and bottom—the top stem being cased in a loose sheath. Bowing to the spectators, the Japanese took one of the tops and whirled it between his palms for a second or two; he then dropped it upon the table, where it spun around in that swiftly revolving, but apparently motionless state, that boy top-spinners call "sleeping." The Japanese indicated by signs that it would stop when he told it to, and, turning toward the table, he lifted his hand as a command. No sooner had he done this than the top stopped, as if it had really seen and understood the signal.

The Japanese picked up the top again, and, twirling it as before, placed it upon the table, where it spun itself to sleep. He then selected from the swords on the floor one with a long, keen blade, and, lifting the top from the table by the sheath of the upper stem, placed the point of the lower stem upon the edge of the blade, near the hilt. The top spun for some moments in this position, and then began to run slowly toward the point of the sword. When it had reached the point, it leaned over at an angle of forty-five degrees, and continued to revolve for several moments in that difficult position, until it was caught in the juggler's hand just as it was about to stop spinning.

Throwing the sword to one side, the performer again made the top spin upon the table, and picking up five others started them also. He then stretched a thin wire across the stage, and taking the tops from the table, placed them one after another upon the wire, as he had previously placed the first one on the edge of the sword. They spun around for a few seconds without moving; but suddenly, as if by one impulse, they all started on an excursion along the wire, balancing themselves as they went, with all the nicety of expert tight-rope walkers. Reaching the end of their trip, they dropped one by one into the hands of an assistant who stood ready to catch them.—St. Nicholas.

A MEMORABLE COLD SNAP.

The Sudden and Remarkable Freeze of 1836.

[From the Burlington (Iowa) Hawk-Eye.]

On the 20th day of December, 1836, occurred one of the most remarkable phenomena ever recorded in the annals of the West. Six years before, there had been an unusual fall of snow, covering the earth to the depth of three to four feet, and causing a great amount of suffering among the people. This is always referred to as the winter of the "Deep Snow." The "Deep Snow" and the "Sudden Freeze" mark the settlement of many families, the purchase of many farms and the birth of many children.

The "sudden freeze" was occasioned in 1836, as in 1879, by a current of extremely cold air passing diagonally across Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, but it followed a narrower path and was more marked in character than the freeze this year. The cold wave that heralded Christmas this year was more widely diffused, and although it swept down from the far northwest with great intensity, sending the mercury down to 56 deg. below zero in Northwestern Minnesota, it lost much of its destructive force before reaching Iowa and Illinois. It also came down from the polar regions and astonished the people of the Pacific slope and spread out, in fact, in a greater or less degree, all over the United States.

The sudden freeze of 1836 was not perceptibly felt east of Cincinnati, and in Illinois and Indiana its width extended from Ottawa south as far as Terre Haute. Within that limit its effect was fearful. It came with a strong wind, accompanied by a heavy black cloud and a roaring noise, not unlike distant deep thunder. Its velocity was about twenty-five miles an hour. The most remarkable feature of the phenomena was the intensity of the cold. Nothing like it has ever been known since. The wind in its fury and power blew the water into little sharply-defined waves, which froze as they stood, leaving the ponds, creeks and rivers crusted with a very rough coat of ice. The snow, slush and mud were suddenly congealed into a mass strong enough to sustain the weight of a team and wagon. Some of the incidents related in the experience of people exposed to the storm are almost incredible, but well attested. The storm passed over Burlington about 10 o'clock in the forenoon of Dec. 20. We have no local record concerning the effect here, but across the river the people had some strange experiences. The early morning was warm and rainy or misty. The snow had melted to a thick, watery slush and the gutters and little streams were full of water. Men were about their daily avocations without their coats. Suddenly the cloud appeared. Its loud and deep notes of warning gave them hardly time to grasp their coats and get to a place of safety. Cattle, hogs, and fowls were frozen in their tracks, unable to extricate themselves. Many died before help could come. Many persons were frozen so severely that death ensued in a few days, and others were crippled for life. The effect was terrible, and is best illustrated, perhaps, out of the many instances on record, by the experience of a gentleman living in Springfield, Ill., who was out with a drove of hogs, when the storm came suddenly down upon them. They abandoned the hogs and drove rapidly to a house a mile or two away. When they arrived there some had their hands frozen and could do nothing for the teams. The next day they started out to find their hogs. Coming to where they had left them, they found a pyramid of porkers. The hogs huddled together when the storm struck them, those on the inside smothering, those on the outside freezing. As the wave passed over McLean county, Ill., it encountered a party of men working in the field, one of whom had with him a very heavy overcoat. It had become rather wet with the mist, and, as the wave came over the party, its owner hastily proceeded to put it on. As he raised it over his head for that purpose the cold wave swept by, blowing the coat several feet from where he stood. It happened to light "head up and tail down," as he expressed it, where it stood, arms extended, frozen as stiff as a board.

Eight Savage Marauders.

Up near the foot of the mountains in South river valley, Mont., Charles W. Cook has a corral, in which are a number of flocks of sheep. The sheep were visited by bears, and on one occasion were so badly stampeded that Cook lost many of the most valuable ones. Afterward as regularly as night came eight bears would move down the mountain and dine on mutton. Each bear clawed, killed and dragged off the fat carcass of an innocent. A band of men in Cook's employ were set to watch the enemy, but the sight of a solid phalanx of bears marching down the slopes in soldierly line and with resistless front caused a retreat. Finally, a few nights ago, Cook, accompanied by an old bear hunter, John Potter, and both armed with repeating rifles, stationed themselves in the bear path, near the corral. The eight came; tramp, tramp, tramp, and when they sniffed the waiting ranchmen they did not so much as halt, but moved to the attack with ferocious indignation at the attempt to rob them of their feast. When the din of battle had passed and the smoke had cleared away, there lay dead on the field four of the huge beasts, while two of the others left rivulets of blood as they climbed to their den.

Similarity of Names of Generals.

The similarity between the late Gen. Jeff C. Davis and that of the Confederate ex-President recalls the fact that there was in the two armies another similarity of names not quite so well-known, but fully as striking—that of Gen. George B. McClellan, of the Union army, and Gen. George B. McLellan, of the Confederates. The last-named gentleman hails from Oktibbeha county, Miss., and was a member the Yale College class of 1858. A little confusion was also produced in the Union army during the war by the similarity of the two Shermans—W. T. and T. W.—especially during the siege of Corinth, when both commanded divisions. By the way, speaking of Sherman reminds us of a joke that is going the rounds of the press. A gentleman, in company with a United States Senator, called on the General of the army, and, upon being introduced, remarked: "Ah, Gen. Sherman; you served in the army, I presume."—Columbus Dispatch.

Some Fables by G. Wash. Esop.

I.

"A crow which was so infernally dry that it had begun to spit bales of cotton, seed a pitcher, an', with the observation that it was a long railroad that had no turntable, flew to quench his whistle. On reachin' the pitcher, he was appalled by the discovery that it contained so little water that he couldn't reach it with a ten-foot pole. He tried every way he could think of, even standin' on his head and was about givin' up in despair, when he seed a friendly mill-pond a few rods distance. Seizin' the pitcher in his tallons, an', flyin' with great difficulty to the pond, he filled it to the top. Then, after takin' several hearty pulls from it, he wiped his lips on his tail-feathers and remarked: 'Necessity is the mother of invention, and don't you forget it.'"

II.

"A yallar dog lay in a manger, an' by his disagreeable barkin' an' showin' of teeth, prevented the oxen from eatin' the hay which had been placed for them. 'What a ridiculous dog!' said one of them to his companion; 'he cannot eat the hay hisself, an' yet refuses to allow them to eat it as can.' 'We will see about that,' observed the companion, a 7-year-old roan steer of bad disposition; 'we will see about that, an', walkin' up to the manger with the remark, 'Come out of that, you mangy son of a gun!' he took the dog on his horns, tossed him up to the roof a few times, mopped the stable floor with him, an' wound up the circus by shootin' him through the door into an adjacent corn-field. The dog dragged hisself off to a sequestered spot an' said with his last breath: 'If thar's a hereafter for lost aeronauts, I'll bet $7 I got thar!'"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Edison's Inventions.

There is considerable curiosity as to how Edison's inventions are to be controlled. From the New York Exchange we gather, as follows:

The Edison Electric-Light Company is organized with a capital of $300,000, divided into $100 shares. It is claimed that it owns all the rights which accrue to Prof. Edison's discoveries and inventions in the way of producing light by means of electricity. It is said that three shares were sold lately at $3,800 per share, and the report was that $5,000 was bid.

The Edison Ore Milling Company is organized with 3,500 shares, the par value being $100 a share. This company is to operate Prof. Edison's system of extracting gold and silver from ore. The results of this system are said to be wonderful, a much higher percentage of the precious metals being saved than has been practicable under any of the old methods of reduction.

The Edison Polyform Company is organized to manufacture and sell a medical preparation for the cure of neuralgia. Prof. Edison has been a great sufferer from this disease, and it is said that he obtained complete relief through the application of this remedy devised by himself. It is soon to be offered through the trade, an order for 1,000,000 bottles having been given to a Pittsburgh glass factory recently. The Polyform Company has a capital of $350,000, divided into $100 shares.

The Czar and the Nihilists.

How pleasant must be the dreams of the Emperor of all the Russias. One morning not long ago Alexander II., on bouncing out of bed, found the following letter lying on a table in his bedroom:

> To Alexander II., Emperor of all the Russias:
>
> SIRE: For the fifth time fate has preserved you from the stroke of justice. They were five decrees dictated by the law of humanity, a law which you no longer recognize. You know our power and determination. Beware of the sixth decree. Do you wish to be a great monarch? Do you wish all the Russian people to acclaim you and recognize you as their father? Do you wish that those who strike to-day shall become apostles instead of executioners? If you do, then cease to be a tyrant and become a man, and render to your subjects what belongs to man by the law of nature—namely liberty. It is not your person that we attack, but your principles. So long as you remain as you are our judgment will be always the same. Saved to-day, you will perish to-morrow. Neither death nor persecution will stay our arms. You possess brute force; we possess moral force. We have sworn to vanquish, and we must carry off the victory in the end. The first apostles of Christianity perished at the start; their martyrdom was the cause of the ruin of Rome. Beware and reflect.

School-Boy Strategy.

A few days before the schools were closed by order of the School Board one of the teachers at noon-time espied a small boy with a red flannel around his neck. Visions of diphtheria immediately floated through her brain, and she ordered the young John Henry to pack up his books and return no more "until your throat is perfectly well." He obeyed the summons, and on his way home met three of his companions who noticed his books and saluted him with, "What's up?" John Henry proceeded to explain that the piece of red flannel had gained him a furlough. The three youths held a short council of war, chipped in what little spare change they could muster, went into a dry-goods store, bought half a yard of red flannel, tore it up into strips, and placed it around their necks. In just twenty minutes from that time three more boys were ordered out of the school-room on the ground that they were threatened with diphtheria.—Lansing (Mich.) Republican.

Nebraska's Growth.

In Nebraska, during 1879, the railroad mileage increased more than [illegible] per cent. The increase in population was about 100,000, or 20 per cent. The grain product of the State has grown from 10,000,000 bushels to 100,000,000 bushels in 1879. There was an increase of over 20,000,000 bushels in 1879 over the product of 1878. The increase of live stock was from 50 to [illegible] per cent.

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,

Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

Hayes has nominated William P. Seymour for census supervisor of this district. Now, who is William P. Seymour?

Cincinnati and Chicago are applicants for the democratic national convention, with the chances in favor of the former.

Mr. R. M. Lockhart informs us that he positively declined to serve as general superintendent on the state board of agriculture; hence the election of Mr. Beeler.

James Russell Lowell, of Massachusetts, is nominated by Hayes for minister to England, John W. Foster, of Indiana, for minister to Russia, and Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, for minister to Spain.

Senator Thurman says he is a candidate for the presidential nomination, and in a sense that does not only imply a complimentary vote. We fear that Mr. Thurman's presidential bark has gone down.

The annual Mardi Gras festivities will take place in New Orleans on the 10th of February this year. Railroads are offering very low excursion rates to those who desire to witness the grand pageant of the world renowned "Mystick Crewe of Comus."

Mr. Lockhart insists that he knew nothing of Mr. Colerick's endeavors in congress to protect the people against patent-right swindlers, when he introduced his resolution at the meeting of the state board of agriculture in behalf of Mr. Baker, and that he had not the least objection to Mr. Stoll's substitute when he ascertained the nature of it.

Down in Newberry county, South Carolina, the planters have struck a new lead politically. They nominate Gen. U. S. Grant for president, and Senator Thomas Bayard for vice-president. Such a ticket would be a union of ignorance, dishonesty and imperialism with statesmanship, aristocracy and royalty. As a whole, the people of America would not relish it.

The Indianapolis correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer says:

"Edgar Henderson, of Anderson, was surety for the appearance of the notorious George Hazzard during one of his trials, and the latter failed to show up on time. The bond was therefore declared forfeited, and Henderson is now in the city trying to get the forfeiture set aside."

Edgar will no doubt undertake the same game in Steuben county, and he will succeed in the undertaking if not closely watched.

Judge Jas. W. Borden, before whom the notorious desperado, George Stover, is now being tried in the circuit court, was the second judge who held court in this county. His signature as judge was entered in record A, in May, 1842, Maj. Sprott being clerk of the court at that time. Judge Borden was again on the bench in this county in May, 1851, since which time he has served continuously in that judicial capacity in Allen county, with the exception of four years, when he was commissioner at the Sandwich Islands, during the administration of James Buchanan.

The assertion of some of our democratic cotemporaries, that "Mr. Tilden will insist upon his nomination or dictate who shall be the democratic nominee," is an acknowledgment of Mr. Tilden's rule or ruin policy.

The claim that "a failure to re-nominate Tilden would be an acknowledgment of the justness of the electoral commission farce," is putting it upon personal grounds, and is an insult to democrats who have a greater regard for principles than persons.

The idea of "leaving the nomination of a presidential candidate to the wisdom of the convention," is diluted flush, and journals abdicate the highest function of a free press by advocating such theories.

A special dispatch from Washington to the Cincinnati Enquirer says:

"Just now there is a sentiment gaining ground favorable to the nomination of Hugh J. Jewitt. It is claimed that he can carry New York, and, being an Ohio man, is as strong in that state as any other democrat who could be nominated. Certain it is that he has strong influences at work for him."

Jewitt's boom was started recently in a republican journal of New York, copies of which were mailed to all parts of the country. Jewitt has adopted Tilden's tactics in forcing himself before the country through the agency of the press, a la Barnum. The democratic party is capable of selecting a candidate for the nomination without advice or dictation from any candidate. Mr. Jewitt is president of a great railroad corporation, which alone will ruin his chances.

Tammany and Tilden.

An "Address to the Democracy of the Union," by the Tammanyites of New York, indicates that the reported compromise between the two factions of the New York democracy is wholly unfounded. The address throughout is antagonistic to Mr. Tilden, and recites many grievances upon which objection to Mr. Tilden is based. In order that our readers may be advised of the decided feeling against Tilden by the Tammany organization, we give below a few extracts from the address mentioned. In referring to the last state election in New York, Tammany says:

* * * We refused to be led by a traitor or to consort for another hour with Robinson or Tilden. We used no reserve, but openly and beforehand, as became loyal democrats, declared that Lucius Robinson, not being a democrat, could never receive our votes, and in view of the course pursued by him, we would be less than men, less than free American citizens, if we consented to support such a man. * * * * The result has proved fatal to the hero of the great failure of 1876. The democratic party of the Empire state will never again be cursed by the leadership of either of these men.

Our loyal support was given to every other candidate but Robinson on the democratic state ticket. Had not Tilden and Robinson sold out that ticket by sending into every part of the state republican tickets with the name of Lucius Robinson printed on them, a piece of treachery which Messrs. Beach and Olcott indignantly denounced, there is hardly a doubt that the democrats would have carried the state, and Cornell alone of the republicans would have been elected. Mr. Olcott, the state comptroller, and the friend of Gov. Robinson, was as emphatic in his condemnation of this treachery on the part of Robinson as was Mr. Beach, the secretary of state. It was the last act of perfidy in a long career of deception, chicanery and fraud.

Fellow-democrats of the state and of the United States, in view of the overthrow of the selfish and unscrupulous Tilden faction which has dominated in New York for the past five years, does it not now become our duty to rally once more as a band of brothers under the standards of the Jeffersonian democracy, and go forward together in the grand work of national purification? Does it not behoove us to rescue the government of the country from the control of the party of hate, who hold it by fraud, and who are attempting to perpetuate their sway by kindling anew the fires of sectional animosity? The republican party was born of the spirit of sectionalism and cannot in the nature of things ever become a constitutional Union party. It is opposed to the true interests of the people, and it regards the laboring classes—the bone and sinew of the country—as so many commercial commodities, to be bought and sold as merchandise. Since the advent of the republican party to power the wealth of the United states is fast becoming concentrated in the hands of a few men. The public domain—the grand heritage nature has given us—the land which belongs to the people—has been and still is being seized by great corporations, and millions upon millions of acres, which they have possessed themselves of by corrupt legislation, are being sold to the people at advanced prices and on the most unequal terms. The great railway systems of the country are held by a few men, as in the hollow of their hand, and constitute one of the most formidable dangers by which the American people are menaced.

It is time, democrats, that these matters should be taken up and discussed among the people, and that the imperialism of wealth and the tyranny of concentrated capital should be met face to face and confined within their strict constitutional limits. The statesmen of the past battled successfully against the encroachments of a moneyed aristocracy, that worst and most dangerous of the forms of tyranny.

The democratic party, in contrast with the sectional republican politicians of to-day, points to the illustrious leaders who have adorned its history, and who lived and died poor in this world's goods, but rich in the legacies of wisdom and patriotism that they bequeathed to the American people.

Countrymen of Jefferson and Jackson and Wright, let us come together as democrats and concentrate our best energies to the fulfillment of the mission of the democratic party—the security of the good of all without injury to the rights of any.

Tammany Hall democrats salute their brethren throughout the state and Union, and ask them to stand shoulder to shoulder in the civic battle of 1880, in order that we may win over again what we won in 1876, and when won, to see that no cowardly railroad lawyer [Tilden] shall ever again surrender the fruits of victory.

A Tendency of the Times.

[New York Sun.]

The wealth of this country has increased enormously within the last thirty years, and there are now individual fortunes colossal in proportion to any formerly possessed in America.

The establishment of steamship lines and telegraphic communication across the Atlantic has brought us in much more frequent communication and closer relations with the old world.

One effect, and a very mischievous effect, of this is a greatly increased desire on the part of numerous rich Americans for intimate social relations with the aristocracy of monarchical countries, and especially the English aristocracy. It may be easy to say that men who adopt such an aim of life must be snobs and fools. Snobs they undoubtedly are; but, at the same time, they have had either the luck to inherit wealth or the brains and tact to acquire it.

The effect of this ambition for aristocratic social relations, now pervading the richest class in America, must necessarily be prejudicial to the preservation of our free and equal republican institutions.

This is one influence which operates in favor of Grant and a third term. All such people are anxious to approach a monarchical and hereditary government as rapidly as possible.

Maine Affairs.

The situation in Maine remains unchanged. The fusionists, having been prevented from meeting in the statehouse, now hold their legislative meetings in Union hall, at Augusta. The republican legislature holds its sessions in the state-house. Of the situation the Indianapolis Sentinel says:

"The difficulties that now environ the governmental affairs in Maine, whatever may have been been said of them at first, are no longer confined to that state; they have broadened in their influence and significance until they demand and command the attention of men throughout the country. In considering the Maine questions it is of the first importance to understand the circumstances that forced them upon the people of Maine, and which finally have given them national importance. In the first place, Maine was regarded by all parties as a doubtful state. Long in the possession of the republican party, the people at last broke away from its rule of falsehood and fraud, and by a combination of opposing forces, Maine was wrested from the grasp of as infamous a set of political knaves as ever cursed any land under heaven. Blaine, who is known as a desperate and unscrupulous rascal, capable of any act, no matter how infamous, being a candidate for the republican presidential nomination, foresaw the importance of carrying Maine, and his fuglemen under his direction set in operation their nefarious schemes to capture the state. They hesitated at nothing within the whole realm of political villainy. They bought and bribed and intimidated voters; they violated every law designed to protect the ballot-box; they defied law, constitutions and courts, for which they knew full well they deserved the doom of felons. So unscrupulous and headstrong were they in carrying out their schemes, that while committing the most flagrant violations of the statutes they neglected to get the returns of the result of their vile proceedings in conformity with the laws, and hence when the officers charged with enforcing the laws came to act, the whole superstructure of their scoundrelism tumbled to pieces. At this supreme moment, when every line of villainy that marked the course of the republican conspirators and knaves of Maine was as vivid to the public eye as if mapped out by lightning, the vile miscreants appealed to the supreme court of Maine, composed of men, the majority of whom were as vile as themselves, for the express purpose of having their perfidies whitewashed. They knew the court, and they knew the result. * * *

Garcelon was threatened with war and blood. Blaine and his co conspirators were caught, the penitentiary was looming up in the near distance. * * The supreme court gave opinions. The judges had drank the hell broth, and their opinions blasphemed the law, and set the example for other courts to follow—that when a gang of republican desperadoes are in danger of being caught in their crimes, constitutions and laws may be set aside for their protection. If possible, it was a more diabolical proceeding than that in Louisiana, when J. Madison Wells and his gang of liars furnished John Sherman with perjurers for federal officers. But fortunately for Maine and the country, the opinion of the supreme court of Maine in the present instance is of no value, except as showing the willingness of the court to destroy the constitution and laws of that state. That the intention is to use force to make the republican villanies appear like lawful proceedings there can be no doubt, and in the face of such forces as were employed in Louisiana, it is possible the right may again be cloven down and fraud may triumph.

* * * The COURIER editor is all right in opposing Mr. Tilden as a presidential candidate, if he wishes to, but we believe he should not attack him unjustly, or seek to convey impressions against him that he is not guilty of. It certainly does not further the claims of other candidates by so doing.—Kendallville News.

If we have attacked Mr. Tilden UNJUSTLY, it has not been done intentionally; we have only endeavored to show the nature of the charges that will be brought against Mr. Tilden if he should be nominated, which charges the democratic party will be compelled to shoulder and deny, though the opinions of thousands of good honest democrats in all parts of the country cannot be altered by such denial. As to furthering the claims of other candidates, we desire to say that we are not insisting upon the nomination of any particular candidate; true, we have a choice, as others have, but there are numerous democratic statesmen that we could support enthusiastically. It is necessary sometimes to discuss who should not be nominated, while at other times it is only necessary to discuss who should be nominated. During Mr. Tilden's candidacy for the nomination he shall have our attention, regardless of the interests of any other particular candidate; in other words, we propose to favor the field as against Tilden. For the gratification of the News, we add that, if Tilden can secure the nomination, with the opposition he has in his own party, we shall conclude that he can beat any man the republicans may name —if.

As stated in another item, Charlie Groscop set 'em up to the COURIER outfit Tuesday, and now, just as we go to press, we learn the cause, namely: Charlie carries a bran new marriage-license in his left breast pocket, right smack over his infatuated heart, and who in creation wouldn't be happy under such circumstances?

Senator Sharon, of Nevada, is enthusiastically for Grant and a third term. Sharon says: "The wealth of the country bears the burdens of the government, and it should control it." He no doubt expresses Grant's views.

Every democrat should pray for the nomination of Grant by the republicans. The nomination of Grant for a third term will give us a walkaway.

A prominent Mississippi democrat gives it as his opinion that Tilden cannot carry that state for president.

Daniel Boon's Snake.

[Easton Argus.]

A writer in a western paper tells how he was blasting with gunpowder some large and tough logs. From one of the logs thus split open crawled an enormous serpent, which was easily killed. The man who tells the story continues from this point as follows:

"On stretching it out I found it to be 31 feet two inches in length, and the thickest part of its body measured 29 inches in circumference. It was a different species of serpent from any I had ever seen before. Its tail was armed with a sharp pointed and curved horn; its body was variegated with alternate brown and dirty yellow stripes and on close examination I discovered that it had been totally blind, its eyes seeming to have turned into a reflectionless, hard, bone-like substance. This explained its undecided, hesitating movements when it first came from the log. A strange crease appeared about the neck, just back of the head, which I found to be caused by a stout thong of leather, about which the flesh of the serpent had grown until it was sunk almost out of view. Cutting this thong and removing it, I found attached to its under side a copper plate which had been heretofore hidden by the body of the snake, and on one side of which was scratched: 'D. Boon, April 15, 1779.' I split the log in two, and near the lower end of the hollow I found where there had once been an opening, but long years ago it had been closed up with a plug made of oak wood, about and over which the maple had grown until it was almost concealed. The dead appearance of the small portion visible of the oak plug was all that called my attention to its existence. My theory of the matter is this: Daniel Boon many years ago, on the date recorded upon the piece of copper, caught the snake, then young and small, fastened the copper plate about his neck, and imprisoned it within the hollow of the tree by means of the oak plug, where his snakeship had remained until I delivered him to the free air and sunlight again."

SLAUGHTERED BY INDIANS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 16.—Brig. Gen. Ord has forwarded to the War Department a letter written by Lieut. George W. Baylor, commanding a detachment of company C of the frontier battalion, Texas volunteers, which gives a detailed account of the outrages commited by Apache Indians, under Chief Victoria, soon after Major Morrow's pursuit of the band into Mexico. The letter says:

"The Indians, probably 200 in number, came down about fifty miles due west of Yaleta, Tex. and camped in the Candelaria mountains, a group of peaks surrounded by open plains. They had splendid water, grass, and plenty of game, and probably intended to winter, but a party of fifteen Mexicans, the best citizens of Carisal, finding a trail, followed it, and were led into an ambuscade and killed. The scene of the conflict was perfectly horrible. I saw in one little narrow parapet, which the beleaguered Mexicans had hastily thrown up, seven men piled up in a space six feet by seven. The Indians had shown great cunning, as they have through all this campaign. The trail passed a low place between, and commanded by, three rocky peaks. The Mexicans were fired upon from one side just as they reached the crest of the mountains. They had evidently dismounted and ran into the rocks on the opposite side, when the Indians began killing the horses that the Mexicans had tied, and opened fire on them from nearly overhead and from a peak out on one side. They were all killed. A letter written by them asking for help was found outside of their breastworks, and near the bodies of two men, who had evidently attempted to escape, but were riddled by balls. Thirty-five more men, nearly the entire fighting force of Carisal, went out to look for their kindred, and the Indians so managed as to drive them into the same slaughter pen, and eleven of them were killed near the same spot. Three ran some distance and their bodies were not found. We buried twenty-six, and there are still three missing. We found ten saddles of the dead men hidden in the rocks. The muzzle-loading guns and swords were all broken, showing that Victoria is well supplied with arms. The Mexican citizens were very grateful for our assistance, and offered to join us any time the Indians came here, so that we might make a good stand off fight."

"I deem it my duty to acquaint suffering humanity with the fact that St. Jacobs Oil is the most beneficial remedy ever introduced; this I have practically tested. For the past sixteen years I have suffered with rheumatism, and so severely that I was often robbed of my night's rest. A change of weather would have the most painful effect on me, for then I could move neither hands nor feet. I tried every known remedy but of no avail; at last somebody recommended St. Jacobs Oil, and I concluded to try it, but with little hope for relief. Having hardly used half a bottle, the pains diminished, and to-day I am well and hearty once more. The small sum of 50c had cured me.

—H. E. Little and family, of Auburn, were visiting friends in this place last week.—Corunna Headlight.

—Miss Daniels and Dr. Elson will entertain the Historical Society, at Gordon's gallery, to-morrow evening.

—Mrs. Sim. Snyder is visiting with her parents at Benton, Steuben county, this state. She went Monday last.

—On Friday evening, Jan. 30th, the Butler Bonanza troupe will present the "Drunkard's Warning" at Ensley's hall.

—"Nip your cough in the bud," said Horace Greeley, by taking "Dr. Sellers' Cough Syrup." Lose no time in getting a bottle.

—Mrs. Frank Copper is again at home, after a pleasant week's visit with her old friends and associates at Fostoria.

—The Presbyterian choir has "busted." Oh, for Walter Peterson once again. He composed a choir himself—in his mind.

—The old grave yard road has been vacated and fenced up. We understand that it will be used for the burial of paupers.

—Ike Davidson, a woodsman, living in Ashley's addition, cut his hand badly while in the act of peeling bolt timber, last Saturday.

—Two more weeks have silently glided away into oblivion, and the Neoterics will therefore glide up in Ensley's hall again to-night.

—H. H. Stamets signifies his intention of winding up his affairs here and going out on the road in the near future, by way of variety.

—Adam Hartle, an old resident of this county, lies dangerously ill with typhoid pneumonia, at his residence two miles south of town.

—Mr. Francis Picker, he of "junction fame," will re-build the front of his brick residence, and otherwise improve his property, in the spring.

—The M. E. church social will be held at the lecture-room of the church next Wednesday afternoon; supper from five to six. All are invited.

—The Auburn Young Ladies' Christian Temperance Union will hold its next social at Miss Sadie Hollister's, one week from to-morrow (Friday) evening.

—It takes a one-horse theatre, or a seven-up nigger-show, to draw a "full house" in this place.

—O. W. Green and wife, of Greenville, Mich., have been visiting the family of L. H. Wright this week.

—It will not cost you anything to attend the meeting of the Historical Society, at Gordon's art gallery to-morrow evening.

—Grandmother Picker caught a Wolf on Main-st., yesterday. It was of the female gender and claimed by Mr. and Mrs. H. Wolf.

—Sim. Turney says he not only sells heaps of beef, "sassage and sich," but he also deals extensively in "notions." He is a notional sort of a fellow, anyway.

—Why is it that the intelligent people of this place do not turn out a trifle more enthusiastically when a good opportunity is afforded for an intellectual treat?

—The Butler Glee Club, led by Mr. Thomas O'Niel, will accompany the Bonanza troupe to this place on the 30th inst. Go and hear the singing and see the play.

—The editors, typos and devil of this news dispensary are indebted to Charlie Groscop for some "snipes." He came up Tuesday and threw cigars all around the shop.

—Mr. Cumback's lecture, simmered down to the substance, means this: "If you are unable or unwilling to speak well of anybody, it is better to keep your mouth shut."

—"The Drunkard's Warning," with a laughable afterpiece, will be presented at Ensley's hall Friday evening of next week, for the benefit of the Union Soldiers' Association.

—Mr. Silvers, recently proprietor of the Eagle mills, at this place, has purchased the old Buss saw mill, three miles northwest of the city, and is now overhauling the same.

—Theo. Kessler says he has now got a partner in town since the arrival of Joe Beugnot's peg-legged man; says when they meet on the street he can't tell which is himself.

—How many of our agricultural readers have sent for the Western Farmers' Almanac, mentioned in the COURIER last week? Send 10c to John P. Morton & Co., Louisville, Ky.

—We noticed a go-a-head-itive farmer, along the line of the Jackson road, engaged last Saturday in plowing—absolutely turning the ground over. Wonder what he was looking for.

—Tuesday evening's lecture, financially, was not an unprecedented success; in fact, be it said to the discredit of Auburn, the expenses were about three dollars in excess of the receipts.

Agent L. Johnson says that passenger travel is gradually increasing on the Wabash, and that its business of this kind far exceeds that of a short time ago, under the old regime.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Gugerli wish to return thanks to their friends whose kindness and sympathy were so generously extended during the recent illness and death of their little son.

—The new notion store, in the room recently vacated by Willis & Co., is now in full blast. They seem to keep everything from a tin whistle up to a brick house and corner lot.

—The handsome features of Judge Sinclair, of Fort Wayne, were visible on our streets Tuesday. Notwithstanding his merited acquisition of legal fame and facial beauty, he is always the same genial Sam. to all.

—Mr. and Mrs. Lackey, brother and sister-in-law of Mrs. Jno. Robbins, are visiting this week with the latter. They live in West Virginia, and are enjoying their honey-moon among their Indiana friends.

—If Hon. Will Cumback will come back to Auburn and re-deliver his lecture, we think the attendance would be much larger, altho' the appreciation of his hearers could not well be greater. Everybody was pleased.

—Fred. Clark and Frank Copper must have had a barrel of fun somewhere, Tuesday night, judging from the hilarious smiles they gave vent to next day when interviewed as to the cause of their non-attendance at the lecture.

—Those who attended the last meeting of the Auburn Historical Society were highly entertained by Miss Powers and Mrs. Swarts. The selections were good and the reading excellent. Attend the meeting to-morrow night.

—John Henry Gugerli, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Gugerli, died of cholera infantum last Thursday, aged 4 months and 2 days. He was buried Saturday, the funeral services being conducted at the house by Rev. H. J. Norris.

—The COURIER acknowledges itself under obligations to D. Y. Husselman, attorney at Waterloo, for favors. If there is a man in that section of country whom he doesn't know, we would like to see the color of his hair.

—Wanted, a man who can meet another on the street without remarking: "This weather beats all, don't it?" We will set 'em up to the first man who forgets to thus shoot his mouth off when he passes us.

—A book entitled "Swinton's General History," in which is written the name of J. F. McDowell, has been missed from this office. The party returning it will receive the thanks of the lady in whose care it was left, together with a chromo from this establishment.

—From Mr. Cuppy we learn that the elevator is at present idle, with the exception of the engine, which pumps water for the Wabash water-tank. It might be utilized, however, by elevating some of the surplus mud.

—The Richland Township Sunday-school Workers' Institute will meet at the Zion Lutheran church, three miles south of Corunna, Saturday, Jan. 31, 1880. Let all be there at 9:30 a. m., so that the programme can be carried out.

S. W. TREESH, President.

—The ladies' leap-year masquerade mentioned in a late issue of the COURIER, will be held next Wednesday night. The ladies here have all received bids, and they will select their own protectors. (We are open for an engagement.)

—The ladies will soon have something to ponder over in their leisure moments. A man was in town yesterday with stereotype plate rebuses, for advertising purposes. Several of our merchants and business men purchased, and they will doubtless make a display in a day or two.

—Bab. Lewis will be enabled in a few days to supply all demand for dogs, as he made negotiations yesterday for a "car-load of sluts,"—i. e. he thought it was "sluts" when he first read the miserably written postal-card, but a more careful perusal satisfied him that the fellow had a "car-load of slate" to sell. Bab. is stuck for the cigars.

—Willis & Co. have moved their large stock of books, stationery, news, notions, etc., into the room in the McIntyre block, formerly occupied by H. H. Stamets, where they will be pleased to see all their old patrons and as many new ones as may wish anything in their line. Come one and all, and we will make it to your interest to come again. 8-4t.

—Some son-of-a-gun, (that's what Charlie called him, not knowing his other name), with no fear of the law in his heart, but with a big basket in his hand, surreptitiously entered the law office of Penfield & Emanuel, a few nights since, and lugged off half a ton or more—probably less—of coal, and now Chawles is on the war-path, hunting for human gore.

—The Sunday Morning Mail, published at Fort Wayne by John Hanley and Tom Meegan, will be six weeks old next Sunday, and, in its peculiar style, is the best weekly paper ever published in that city. It is spoken of in terms of praise by all who read it, and is fast becoming what the boys evidently intend to make it—a good thing to have in the family.

—Correspondents will please bear in mind that, amongst a thousand or so of subscribers, there are several hundred who don't know 'John,' or 'Hank,' or 'G. W.' from a gate-post; and therefore, in itemizing, always give full names or none at all. Give us all items of news, such as fires, runaways, deaths births, marriages and other catastrophies, which transpire in your neighborhood, and yours shall be the glory now and forevermore.

—Chas. M. Harbaugh is now in town engaged in making photographs into the beautiful picture known as the crystal ivory-type, which is the only picture warranted not to fade. He claims to have been in the picture business for a number of years, and, having seen some of his work, we cheerfully endorse the statement. Specimen pictures will be shown by our young townsman, Jno. M. Gossage, to whom orders may be given.

—When a man enters a railway car, it is an easy matter to tell whether or not he is accustomed to it. If he is, he will quietly find a vacant seat and settle into it, without trying to turn everybody else upside-down; but if not, he will endeavor to occupy as many seats as his carcass will cover and then raise two or three windows to see what's going on outside, to the annoyance and discomfiture of all who sit within two or three seats behind him.

—Conductor Drown, of the P., Ft. W. & C. railroad, inaugurated a new and sensible scheme on one of his trains last week. Some sharpers boarded the train near Plymouth, and Mr. Drown sang out in each of the coaches, "Look out for three-card monte men," thus giving timely warning to passengers who might otherwise have been victimized. We look upon it as a prime idea, and other conductors would be commended for imitating the example set by Conductor Drown.

—The annual issue of Prof. Tice's "Weather Forecasts and American Almanac for 1880," is out, and we learn that the first edition of over 20,000 copies was called for within eight days of its publication, and a second larger one put to press. It is fuller and more specific in its weather prognostications for 1880 than formerly, and a variety of subjects of interest, such as plagues and the astronomical relations thereto, heat and sunstrokes, cyclones, facts for foretelling the weather, etc., are discussed. Copy can be obtained by enclosing 20c to Thompson, Tice & Lillingston, St. Louis, Mo.

—The Dyer murder trial which was pending all last week before Judge Lowry, at Albion, was closed Saturday, the jury returning a verdict of guilty and fixing the punishment at a life confinement in the penitentiary. The result is generally conceded to be just and right by those who are familiar with the circumstances, though a motion was immediately made by the defendant's counsel for a new trial, which motion is now pending. We learn, however, that the chances are very doubtful.

BARNEY'S BURGLARS.

Their Trial Now in Progress.

The details of the attempted robbery of the house of Mr. Sol. Barney, at Spencerville, on the night of December 1, together with the heroic action of Mrs. Barney in defending the premises, have been fully published in these columns heretofore; it has also been so thoroughly ventilated by the press of this region generally, that a repetition of the circumstances is unnecessary. Since then the prisoners have been closely confined in the county jail awaiting their trial, which is now in progress with Judge Borden on the bench. The title of the case is, "State of Indiana vs. George Stover and Alexander McDonald, alias William Jackson," but Stover who is said to be an exceedingly desperate man, is now on trial alone.

Tuesday morning a motion was made by the defendant's attorney, L. J. Blair, for a continuance; the motion, however, was overruled and another was immediately entered for a change of venue. Judge Borden, after examining the papers and taking the matter under advisement, failed to sustain the motion, and a jury was ordered, which consists of the following gentlemen: F. D. Ryan, Lyman Holbrook, B. D. Thomas, W. R. Emerson, John Phillips, J. M. Rohrabaugh, A. Buchanan, Edgar Freeman, John Sugars, John P. Moore, William Kennedy and Peter Weirick.

The examination of witnesses—of whom there are a whole raft on both sides—is now going on, and it is probable that the remainder of the week will be consumed in the trial. Great interest is now manifested in the case by the people of this and adjoining counties, and the court-room is crowded with eager listeners.

An Omission.

In our item concerning the break-down of a hack-load of folks who were returning from the Waterloo dance, we inadvertently omitted the names of two couples, in a previous issue, and, learning that they feel highly aggrieved at the slight, we make a little bow of regret and insert the following, handed us by one who was there—in the mud:

EDITORS COURIER: Please state that in your issue of Jan. 8th you omitted the names of J. L. Davis and wife, and W. J. Austin and wife, as members of the party who embarked from Mader's dock on the fatal night of Jan. 1, 1880, enroute from Waterloo to Auburn. As the former gentleman was captain, and the latter first mate, it is very necessary that their names should be mentioned, otherwise the public might fail to record them as surviving victims of the disaster. It looked like a perilous flight when the pilot announced that the wheel had failed to perform its functions; the passengers and crew hurried around in great excitement, trying to free themselves from the barge before it went down. After the first mate had let himself down from the vessel by means of one of his suspenders, he made a few heroic strides for the shore, in the act of which he detached his life preserver, which, through his excitement, he had attached to his feet; he was then about to give up in dispair and cast himself upon the mercies of a raging stream, but seeing the danger that would soon overtake him, urged his wearied limbs to the full performance of their duty and gained the shore in safety. The captain, however, who had more ballast than the mate, retained his usual composure, self-reliance and presence of mind, drifting along with the tide without the slightest appearance of uneasiness. Thus ceased the conflict. A VICTIM.

"Invisible Some People."

The lecture of the above peculiar title, delivered Tuesday evening at the Presbyterian church by Hon. Will. Cumback, was highly entertaining to the small but thoroughly appreciative audience; it was full of sound, logical reasoning, and is a lecture that will wield an influence for good anywhere. While some were disappointed in Mr. Cumback's manner of delivery and voice—the latter being somewhat harsh probably owing to constant speaking—all must admit that he is a gentleman of refinement, experience and thought. We should like to give a synopsis of his interesting talk, but our space forbids.

Important to Laboring Men.

If you want to guard against disease, use Goodman's patent dinner pail, which insures good health and saves exorbitant doctor bills. The coffee reservoir is easily cleaned, preventing the accumulation of poisonous substances that create disease, which accumulation is always found in the old fashioned pail. Call at Goodman's tin-shop and see for yourselves. 4-4w

Petit Jurors.

Below we give the names of the petit jurors drawn to serve at the March term, 1880, of the DeKalb circuit court:

—W. H. Dilley and wife left for their home in Iowa last Monday.

—Stapleton, of Vienna, put in an appearance at St. Joe last Saturday.

—T. S. Warner is in the notion business on a small scale—pack on his back.

—Mac, of Newville, went to Colorado Monday, for the purpose of regaining his health.

—Tommy is in ecstasies over the little bundle which Dr. Goodale left at his residence Monday last.

—Dick Culbertson is blessed with an heir, as a consequence of which he is as happy as a boy with a new jack-knife.

—Mort. Olds has a sign in his store, over a box of bar soap, which is a wonder in its way: "Five cents a bar, or two for a dime."

—O. H. takes time by the forelock and plows when the sun shines, while his neighbors are contenting themselves with eating, drinking and sleeping. He is turning up mother earth for a new corn crop, and the weeds will not be higher than the corn this time.

THE THORNY TREASURE.

BY MRS. NANNIE STEELE MOORE.

Away back in my childhood years
There dawned a day I'll ne'er forget,
With it a lesson learned in tears
That's deeply stamped on memory yet.

While swinging on a lattice gate,
In childish sport, thoughtless and gay,
Not dreaming of the bitter fate
That darkly hung about my way,

A young man came (I knew him well),
Hurriedly riding down the street,
And in one hand he closely held
A bunch of flowers fresh and sweet.

I, laughing, hailed him (as he passed),
In a wild burst of childish glee,
And, reaching up, with eager grasp,
I cried, "Oh, give those flowers to me!"

With rapid haste he onward sped,
But yet he heard my childish plea—
Here, catch them quick!" he smiling said,
And tossed the fresh bouquet to me.

But in my child-like eagerness,
While thinking only of my prize
(Their beauty and their loveliness
With rapture filled my longing eyes),

I caught them firmly in my grasp,
But quickly to the ground I flung
The treasure I had longed to clasp,
For in my hands the thorns had stung.

Longing heart, no danger heeding,
Till it felt the stinging pain;
Poor little hands, torn and bleeding,
Never touched those flowers again.

Oft through life we grasp at pleasures,
But to feel their poisonous sting;
All through life we long for treasures
Which to our hearts would sadness bring.

And often in youth's brightest hours,
While hope's golden sunlight dawns,
Do we catch at falling flowers,
Only to feel their piercing thorns.

Piercing the heart with deeper wound
Than that which scarred the tiny hand;
A pain for which no balm is found
This side of heaven's golden strand.

Many hearts are torn and bleeding,
In anguish deep and dark to-day;
Many yet the thorns unheeding
Are grasping flowers on life's way.

But from childhood's thoughtless hours
Temptation ne'er has crossed my way;
But with it comes those lovely flowers
That pierced and tore my hands that day.

The lesson learned remained through life,
And I've never sought a pleasure,
But in my eagerness and strife
I recall that thorny treasure.

CORINTH, Miss.

NATHANIEL HOLT'S IDOL.

"I am so tired!"

The flute-like voice that uttered this pettish exclamation broke through the fragrant stillness of the autumnal evening like a jarring chord in some exquisite melody, and Nathaniel Holt looked up from his paper with a slight frown on his bronzed, handsome face.

He was tired, very tired, after a day of hard labor on his mountain lands and had thrown himself into a great easy-chair of his mother's, on the south porch, for a moment's rest; and he could not understand how the speaker, a tall, supple girl, with hands as white as milk, who passed her time in comparative idleness, could be tired.

For Elsie Marian was not one given to unusual exertion, and generally managed to secure the good things of this world with as much ease as was possible or consistent with her position as dependent niece in the home of her mother's sister, Nathaniel Holt's aged mother, who simply adored the bright young girl who had brought sunshine into her old house, and whose helpless orphanage covered many serious faults.

At this moment Elsie was seated on a garden stool, half hidden by the drooping boughs of a willow, laboriously attempting to twist tiny bunches of dogwood berries and autumn leaves into a wreath, her dead-gold hair falling about a face as fair as any lily that lifted its spotless brow to the opal sky, and no violet that ever blossomed in the cool tufts of meadow grass beyond the willow copse was as blue as the modest eyes she lifted to Nathaniel Holt's troubled face.

He stood over her, his hands folded on his back, and his broad, bronzed brow flushed a little with some sudden inward emotion.

"Elsie," he began, the brown eyes that she dared not meet searching the face that drooped beneath his gaze, "what has tired you?"

"Nothing."

"You were once a contented, happy girl, Elsie; what has changed you?"

"Nothing." She spoke listlessly, yet a faint, sea-shell pink crept into the round, soft cheeks and up to the roots of golden hair.

"Yes, Elsie, something has changed you; you are the same, and yet not the same. You have lost your blitheness; you do not come to me with kind words, as you once did, Elsie, and charm all my cares away. Tell me why."

Nathaniel Holt sat down on the grass at his cousin's feet, and watched the color come and go in the face above him. He was terribly in earnest, this sober, self-contained man of 30, for this young girl had been his idol for years.

"I am not changed." Elsie tried to steady her voice. "I am the same to-day that I have been every day for years. You know I am 20, and I must try and be womanly."

"Has Lewis Walton anything to do with the change, Elsie?"

Elsie's face blushed crimson, yet she laughed merrily.

"No. You surely are not jealous, Nathaniel?"

It was Nathaniel's turn to blush now, which he did to perfection. For answer he drew the dogwood berries out of the little hands, and held the slender fingers in his own.

"I am not jealous, Elsie. You do not seem contented of late; you are always tired; you never run up the mountain path to meet me, or take long rambles in the woodland, so as to be near me, as you once did. You see, I have grown so used to your tender, watchful love, Elsie, it would be hard to give it up. And I have thought that you had grown tired of me, and had given your love to Lewis Walton, who seems a more fitting mate—"

"A divorced man, Nathaniel!" Elsie cried, lifting her eyebrows slightly, although her cheeks were dyed with burning blushes and her lips trembled nervously.

"A divorced man," repeated Nathaniel, looking her full in the face. "Yes, Elsie, there is danger of you forgetting me through him, for he is a more polished, more fascinating man; yet, Elsie, dear, he is as unstable as the wind and not calculated to make any woman happy."

"You must think me very impressible," broke out Elsie, whose conscience was not as easy as it might have been. "When I gave my promise to be your wife, I meant to keep it."

Nathaniel Holt drew the golden head down to his breast and breathed a silent prayer over it; for Elsie was a woman, with a beautiful woman's love of the world's follies and adulation and he knew enough of Lewis Walton's character to know the arguments he would use, and that he would not be sparing of flattering speeches.

"Remember this, Elsie," he said, solemnly; "'what God has joined together, let no man put asunder,' and, although the law has separated Lewis Walton and his wife, in the sight of God she is his wife still."

"There"—Elsie lifted her face suddenly, and held up her lips for a kiss—"that will do. I must go in to Aunt Eunice."

Nathaniel Holt kissed the lovely face, not once, but many times, and years after those passionate kisses were remembered with keenest pain. Elsie slipped away from him and ran into the house, and Nathaniel, silenced but not convinced, sat perfectly still, and tried to reason away his fears, with knitted brows.

After that life went on much as usual at the Holt farm. Elsie was to become its mistress at Christmas, and her Aunt Eunice was very busy over the expected wedding. She loved Elsie with a mother's love already, and Nathaniel, as the autumnal months drifted by, grew a trifle thoughtful; for Lewis Walton, who had been a summer guest in the neighborhood, still lingered, and still called on Elsie, who tried to hide her growing fondness for his company. He was wealthy, indolent and gifted with a persuasive tongue. Elsie loved ease, lacked firmness of principle and will, and, although she imagined herself faithful to Nathaniel, her heart was slowly but surely being beguiled away from the true and steadfast love of an upright man.

Nathaniel watched her with a brooding tenderness. He was so loyal himself that he would instinctively notice any wavering on Elsie's part, he thought, yet the eyes of love are often blinded by self-confidence, and when Elsie came to him and laid her golden head against his arm, as she often did in the autumn gloaming, Nathaniel's happiness was too deep to be delusive, and he would hold her to his breast as if nothing could ever wrest her from his faithful arms. Poor Elsie! little did she know of the passionate depth and power of this strong man's love. His homage was hers by right, and she accepted it as some Princess might the service of her vassals. She never thought how desolate that life would be if bereft of her love—how barren of hope or happiness would be his darkened future; for, if he erred in any sense, it was in the strength and purity of the love he laid at her feet.

The purple haze of Indian summer was lying on the hills. The sun sailed through the mist like a great ball of flame, and billows of dead-brown leaves swept up the ravines, as Nathaniel Holt trudged down the mountain path, his brown cheek flushed with exercise, and his eyes kindling with love as the old farm-house, with its many windows stained with amber, and tall gables draped with scarlet runners, came in view. His mother sat on the porch bathed in a rift of ruby sunshine, but he looked in vain for Elsie—Elsie who had promised to come up the mountain path to meet him. Something like the murmur of voices attracted his attention, and, turning into a side path, he came upon Elsie and Lewis Walton seated on a mossy log, with their faces turned from him. Walton's hunting jacket and gun lay on the ground, and Elsie's hat had fallen at her feet, while the fair glowing face was upturned to the hazy November sky, as if she dared not, yet longed to meet the fire of the black eyes that seemed to read the innermost thoughts of her heart.

"Elsie—Elsie," the soft persuasive voice was saying, "be wise, and listen to me. You do not love Nathaniel Holt as women love men they marry."

"Nathaniel is so good, and has been like a brother to me since mamma's death," murmured Elsie, by way of protest, while Nathaniel stood as if rooted to the spot, his breath coming in thick, hot gasps.

"That's just it, Elsie; you have mistaken your feelings. Instead of the love you should give him, you will reward his great love—for he does love you deeply—with a warm, sisterly affection. Ah! Elsie, think in time—I love you as I have never loved before, and, Elsie, you love me," said Lewis Walton, as he put his arm around her slender waist and drew Elsie's happy face to his bosom, and covered the warm, red lips with kisses.

Nathaniel Holt fled from the spot like a hunted deer. The veins on his temples stood out like whip-cords, and dry, voiceless sobs broke from him as he sank down on the mossy turf and buried his face in the cedar spears that lay inch deep on the moist ground. Never again could he take Elsie Marian's false face in his hands and kiss it with a lover's kisses. For she had willfully given up the pure, honest love of his guileless heart for the love of man who, in the sight of God, if not in the sight of man, was legally bound to another. Perhaps he had been mistaken in himself, but this he knew, he had made an idol of her and given her such love as no human being should lavish on a fellow-creature, be they ever so perfect, and God had seen the foolishness of his idolatrous love, and punished him sorely for it.

After his passion of grief had spent itself, he arose and turned into the path that led homeward, feeling very much as if he had stood beside Elsie Marian's grave and saw her laid in it. His face had grown white and hard and stern in that short but bitter struggle, and the brown eyes were full of a grief too deep for tears. He felt faint and dizzy when he saw Elsie standing at the meadow gate alone, and the light of her newly-awakened love in her blue eyes.

"Nathaniel"—she speaks nervously, for her womanly instinct tells her something is wrong—"what has happened? You are late."

"Just this, Elsie"—he takes her hands in his and turns his set, white face away from her—"I have lost something out of my life which I shall never, never own again—an untroubled mind; and, Elsie, dear, forgive me if I have mistaken gratitude for love, and held you against your will. Take the man of your choice, Elsie, and Heaven grant you may not find your happiness Dead-sea fruit."

"Oh, Nathaniel!" Elsie's tears are falling over the hard, brown hands; "I did not deserve your love—I do not deserve your kindness now."

"Go!" he says, gently, and Elsie slips past him, leaving him to conquer the rush of feeling that threatened to overpower him. At length he felt strong enough to face his future, and went into the house with a look on his face that told his mother the hour she dreaded had come; for, with the keen instincts of her sex, she had foreseen the result of Lewis Walton's attentions and was more grieved than surprised when Nathaniel told his pitiful story.

Elsie was married. The first snow had just whitened the earth when she left the Holt farm, the wife of Lewis Walton, a strange pallor on her beautiful face, a strange dread in her heart; for some thoughts had come to her in the eleventh hour that were neither pleasant nor ennobling, for they taught her that her life had been a mistake, as far as stability of feeling and purity of purpose were concerned; for the white, weary face of Nathaniel Holt was dearer to her heart than the handsome face of the husband at her side.

The winter days rolled on. News of Elsie Walton's triumphs came now and then to the quiet farm-house and stirred Nathaniel Holt's heart with a touch of his old pain; for he could not forget that all this beauty and grace might have been his. Lewis Walton might value it as a child prizes a beautiful toy; he would have idolized it as a devotee worships the beauty of his goddess—and for this feeling alone he felt the great treasure of Elsie's love had been denied him.

But a rumor was stirring in the fashionable world that never reached the quiet old homestead. Men looked with pity on the lovely, trusting wife; women smiled and sneered behind their fans; and still Elsie never dreamed aught of the shame and disgrace that was gathering around her.

When the news of her fickle husband's elopement with a dashing widow reached her, she threw up her hands with a cry of despair—"Nathaniel, Nathaniel, my sin has found me out!"

Three days later the dead body of her husband—for a railroad accident had ended his career—was carried home to her; and Elsie, broken and full of bitter remorse, followed it to its last resting-place; then turned her face to the quiet old home she had left a bride but a few months before.

Nathaniel asked no questions. The sad, white face was dearer to him now than it had ever been before. He made no outward sign of the love that was burning within his breast, yet his care of her was wonderful, and he thanked God that through affliction he had been shown the weakness of his idol, and that Elsie was but human, while his own heart had been purified in the fire of tribulation. More than a year after Lewis Walton's death, we find them standing where we first saw them—under the old willow—and Elsie is wearing a wreath of dogwood berries and autumn leaves. Her cheeks are flushed and a tender light fills the beautiful eyes.

"Elsie"—Nathaniel imprisons the slender fingers—"you must let me speak. Give me back the love I lost when you became the wife of another."

"Nathaniel"—Elsie's voice is full of contrition—"I did not know my own heart then."

"You know it now, Elsie; say it is mine."

"Forever and forever, Nathaniel."

And who will question his right to take the golden head to his bosom, where we hope it may rest for many years to come.

The Last Flag Under Fire.

Gen. Tom Harrison's Texas brigade composed of two Texas, one Tennessee and one Arkansas regiment, was probably the last brigade under fire during the war, as it was engaged with Northern tropos between Raleigh and Salisbury, N. C., just above Chapel hill, on April 14, 1865, the day that the armistice was declared. The flag carried on that day by one of the Texan regiments (the Eleventh Texas Volunteers) is now in possession of John Halford, of Denison, who was a member of that regiment at the time, and who concealed it and brought it home with him in the back of his jacket. This is probably the last Southern flag fired at by United States troops. It is a small silk Confederate flag and still in good condition, there being only one small tear in it, and that was done the last day it was under fire.—Macon (Ga.) Telegraph.

The Eagle and Cat.

It is well known that eagles sometimes carry off hares; they are also said to be exceedingly partial to the flesh of dogs, and occasionally they pounce upon poor grimalkin. One in the North of Scotland suddenly came down upon a cat, and bore it away to her nest. The injuries inflicted by the clutch of the eagle, and the unusual mode of traveling, so confounded poor puss that she exhibited no signs of life, and was accordingly left for dead by the eagle with her young ones. But soon after the eagle had left the nest the cat revived, and, having killed the eaglets, made a hearty meal of one of them. She then made a hurried retreat, and effected her escape without further injury.

A MISSISSIPPI farmer dashes cold water into the ears of choking cattle. This causes the animal to shake its head violently, and the muscular action dislodges the obstruction.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

CURE OF DIPHTHERIA.—When a member of the family is attacked by this fearful disease, the best medical aid should at once be called. The danger is too great to allow this advice to pass unheeded. Indeed, even in apparently light cases, that appear to be progressing to a speedy and favorable termination, the patient often suddenly dies, and what are called the sequence of the disease—its later effects on the organs and tissues of the body—frequently result in death, or protracted disorder and suffering. It will therefore be seen that intelligent professional treatment is necessary to prevent, if possible, such serious results. But in some cases a physician may be so far away as to render his assistance practically impossible. For such, we say there are three principal remedies. The first is the saturated solution of chlorate of potash, given in teaspoonful doses every hour. The French physicians rely largely on this. The second is chlorine-water diluted with from two to four times as much water. A prominent physician of Springfield, Mass., has for the last sixteen years found it almost uniformly effective. Prior to its use, he lost half his cases. The third remedy is sulphur. Dr. Field, of England, has obtained remarkable cures with it. His prescription is, we believe, to mix a teaspoonful of the flour of sulphur in a wine-glass of water, and give it as a gargle. If the patient is unable to gargle, blow some of the dry flour through a quill upon the diseased parts of the mouth and throat; or burn some of the sulphur on a live coal, and let the patient inhale its fumes; or, filling the room with the fumes, let him walk about and inhale them. The patient should always be kept warm, the bowels open, and the system well nourished with easily-digested food.

TELEGRAPHIC DISEASE.—Shoemakers who work in narrow and over-heated rooms and in bent and constrained positions are subject to consumption; the students having too much brain-work and too little out-door exercise, tends to dyspepsia; the farmer's wife, with farm cares added to her family cares, tends—more than any other class of persons—to insanity; the clergyman even has given his ministerial name to a throat-ail, a disease that is caused by bad elocution, undue exposure after speaking, and especially to spiritual, parochial and personal anxieties. These are among the old-fashioned diseases. New employments bring new ailments, and among these is "the telegraphic disease." Of course, it is only a small percentage of persons that show the morbid tendency of any employment. High health, based on a vigorous constitution, will, with a modicum of care, stand a very great amount of imprudence and exposure. The telegraphic disease comes mainly to females of a nervous organization—the very class that is most apt in telegraphy. The cause of the disease is close, unvarying attention. There is no room for automatic work. This acts steadily on a single part of the brain, affects it injuriously, and causes palpitations, vertigo, wakefulness, weakness of sight, and, later, depression, loss of memory, etc. There are two courses open to persons employed at telegraphy who find themselves thus affected. The first is to abandon the business. No present advantage can compensate for nervous disease. The second is to use their leisure hours so as to give complete rest to the exhausted portion of the brain. Company, amusement and entertaining books are specially healthful in this disease. The patient should also retire early, so as, if possible, to secure an abundance of sleep. As an aid against wakefulness, divert the blood from the head to the feet, by heating the feet in hot water just before retiring. Good, nourishing, easily-digested food is also necessary, with oat-meal and unbolted wheat-meal as part of the daily diet. Strong tea or coffee should not be used.

Swindling by Wholesale.

The various frauds unearthed by the Postoffice Department recently give new emphasis to the fact that if, as some claim, immortality is denied to other people, the fools do not die. The Texas Gift Concert Enterprise received $100,000 and distributed $3,000 or $4,000, the first prize of $50,000 going to a confederate who was paid $500 for personating the lucky man.

One Henry P. Jones, in New York, sends autograph letters over the country to his "cousin," who left the army after the war, and whose name, the same as the correspondents to whom he is writing, "Jones" has seen in the directory. "Jones" says he is agent for a lottery, and will arrange it so that his "cousin" shall draw the prize on an inclosed ticket, because it will be a good advertisement if he goes around among his friends and neighbors proclaiming his good luck. In a few days "Burnett" writes to "Jones'" "cousin," that is to say, he sends a letter to the same parties in different parts of the country whom "Jones" addressed, saying that the correspondent thus addressed has drawn a watch worth $800, on which, for packing, registering, etc., he is allowed a commission of $3. The dupe sends his $3, and "Burnett" sends another letter announcing that "Jones" had no authority to send him a lottery ticket free. He thereupon demands $5 more—the price of the ticket—which the dupe sends him, and the correspondence closes.

Another letter flooding the country announces that the receiver of it, having remitted the proper amount due, has secured title to certain shares in the "Silver Mountain Mining Company." The dupe chuckles at the mistake that has been made, orders the certificates forwarded and receives them. Then follow sundry assessments upon the stock as long as the innocent will stand it.

The "American Book Company," Weymouth, Mass., requests Postmasters to forward 67 cents and the names of the clergymen in his town, in return for which they will send him a handsome Bible. "I was silly enough to comply," writes one victim, "and have not received either the Word of God or a word from the swindlers."

Worse than this, one wretch in Massachusetts sent out 300,000 vile circulars last winter and fall, to children of both sexes, and received 3,000 or 4,000 registered letters, containing money.—Detroit Free Press.

Where the Burden Falls.

The strength of the standing armies of Europe is at present flaunted in the press as something fine to boast of and talk about grandiloquently. A certain pomp and grandeur, from the savage habit still instinct in the human race, are assumed when discourse is had of immense armaments, of fleets and navies, guns and fortifications. They are often brought out in a kind of adjective dress parade, and what can be done with them in the way of crushing another nation forms the rounded period and swelling theme of essay and oration.

Germany is said to have 1,000,000 men under arms, with food, clothing, arms and ammunition in prime condition. France has nominally an immense army, but not so large, and so has Austria, Italy and Russia. But Germany can dictate terms or overrun the territory of these other powers and have its own will with them. Looked at solely from the drum and trumpet side there is something imposing, if not majestic, in the spectacle of a stalwart national arm that can, at a moment's warning, strike a blow which will fell a rival and shake the earth with the downfall. But a closer examination of the source and cost of it reveals weakness as well as strength.

These million men under arms are a million of idlers; not only do they not produce a surplus and add to the wealth of the world, but they have to be fed and clothed. Somebody has to support them, and the somebody is the toilers who are not in the army, who are not idle, and who, after producing enough for their own comfort, are forced to additional labor in order to nurture this million. A standing army of 1,000,000 men would, in the United States, represent one-tenth of the laboring population—the pick and flower of it, so far as age and productive power are concerned. To support this army, a man, after working nine hours for himself, would be obliged to labor one hour more to support the soldier and his family. On the shoulders of every nine men in this community would rest the burden of another able-bodied laborer with all his responsibilities. In addition to this there is the dead capital stored away in the cannons, the armories, the fortifications and the magazines, whose principal use is not to reproduce, but to destroy, and this condition of things exists in a large part of Europe. All this has undoubtedly much to do with the "hard times" there; for, although there are other immediate causes which account for the misery and poverty, yet in a country where every tenth man is supported by nine others, the balance between prosperity and depression must be so sensitive that bad harvests, or a commercial crisis, is enough to seriously disturb it, and plunge the people into distress, of which we know little on this of the Atlantic. Of course, in a broad sense, we know it, too, because the burdens of the whole world are rudely adjusted to the shoulders of the whole world, but the heaviest part of them lies upon those who are already overweighted.—Detroit Free Press.

A Charmed Soldier.

Ex-Sergeant Ignace Hoff, the well-known keeper of the Arc de Triomphe, was once considered a spy by his Parisian friends. He is now, and deservedly, the most popular of living French heroes, has been awarded every distinction and substantial recommendation which it is in the power of a thankful nation to bestow, and is to be presented with a splendid rifle by public subscription. But it is none the less a fact, and a painful one, that when he was made a prisoner by the Germans, at the battle of Champigny, the rumor obtained currency that he was only a Prussian in disguise, who had found at last a convenient opportunity of making good his escape. At that time, be it noted, the man had been for more than six weeks shooting, upon an average, one German a day, in view of the crowds of Parisian admirers brought to the outposts by the renown of his prowess. He had himself received more than twenty bullets in his uniform, to the extent of having six or seven times to petition for a new suit, without ever being wounded. There was in his extraordinary good luck, as well as his unerring skill, something truly wonderful, which earned for him in a few days quite a reputation.

Sleep.

While sleep is the "season for all natures," it is injurious to curtail the hours of rest. For farmers and those who live in localities where people can retire at 8 or 9 o'clock in the evening, the old notion about early rising is still appropriate. But he who is kept up till 10 or 11 or 12 o'clock, then rises at 5 or 6, because of the teaching of some old ditty about "early to rise," is committing a sin against his own soul. There is not one man in 10,000 who can afford to do without seven or eight hours' sleep. All the stuff written about great men who sleep only three or four hours a night is apocryphal. They have been put upon such small allowances occasionally and prospered; but no man ever yet kept healthy in body and mind for a number of years with less than seven hours' sleep. If you can get to bed early, then rise early; if you cannot get to bed till late, then rise late. It may be as proper for one man to rise at 8 as it is for another to rise at 5. Let the bell be rung at least thirty minutes before your public appearance. Physicians say that a sudden jump out of bed gives irregular motion to the pulses. It takes hours to get over a too-sudden rising.

MARK ANTONY squandered $725,000,000 of the public treasure in two years, and the Detroit Free Press man wants to be appointed one of the committee to investigate his accounts.

SEA-WAVES.

BY COUSIN DORA.

Lift, O! gray mist, from the sea,
Hide not one bright wave from me.
See! 'tis lifting, and the sun
Tips with glory ev'ry one.
Watch each tiny wavelet play
Up the sand, then back—away,
Rippling up the pebbly shore,
Each the other lapping o'er;
Frolicking in wanton glee,
Children of the grand old sea.
Sea-waves, as ye come and go
In your ceaseless ebb and flow,
Lave my earth-tired, weary feet;
Ease their burning, cool their heat.
Dash your white spray on my brow,
It rests my throbbing temples so.
Cool, bright sea-waves, and ye bear
On your placid bosoms there
White-winged ships from many a clime,
'Gainst the fair sky there outlined.
And 'neath your cool waves so deep,
Lazy sunfish bask and sleep;
In your bright reflection there
We've read the mermaids dress their hair.

But the scene is changing now,
And each vessel dips her prow
Deep in waves as black as night—
See them dashing in their might!
The wind blows free, and wild, and strong,
The mad waves wildly dash along.
They snarl and hiss 'fore hidden shoal,
Whirl and toss, then onward roll.
Like a fierce courser bound for home.
Up the red sands they leaping come;
Then, trailing back, they leave a line
Of golden shells and green sea vines.
So, O bright waves! let me stand,
See you ripple up the sand,
Watch you with the moonbeams play
Hide and seek, then dart away.

And you're beautiful, but when
Darkness gathers o'er the main,
And your billows tower on high
Till they seem to reach the sky,
You are grand, sublime to me,
Wild, majestic, dear old sea.

A Broken Vow.

The most remarkable result of Gen. Grant's journey around the world is still to be recorded—it has caused Gen. Edward F. Beale to go to church for the first time in nearly twenty years. Before the Rebellion, the Beale family used to attend St. John's, the most aristocratic church in Washington, and naturally made up largely of Southerners. The rector sympathized with the majority of his parishioners, and one Sunday, about the outbreak of the war, went so far as to pray for the success of the rebel cause. This was more than Gen. Beale could bear, and he marched out at the head of his family, registering a vow that he would never go to church again. This resolution he is said to have faithfully adhered to during the nearly nineteen years that have since elapsed, and nobody expected ever to see it broken. But Grant came to see him, wanted to go to church, and his host was constrained to accompany him. So true it is that peace hath her victories no less renowned than those of war.—Washington letter.

EDISON'S LIGHT.

Is It a Success?

(From the Chicago Daily News.)

Doubt continues to be expressed as respects the success of the Edison light. Scientific men who have seen it say that the inventor has achieved nothing not heretofore known, and that he is merely going over old ground which has been worked by others, and unsuccessfully. Some of the objections to the electric light for dwellings may be summarized as follows: Unlike gas, it cannot be stored up for future use. If anything happened the steam engine, the lights would immediately go out. If the engine power falls off in strength even, the lights flicker. It will cost nearly as much for two or three lights as for twenty. But the main difficulty of the electric light, it is claimed, yet remains unsolved; that is, its divisibility. As long ago as 1825, Dr. Ohm discovered the unit of electric resistance. The so-called magnet in telegraphy and telephony is measured by the force of resistance in ohms it offers to the electric current in its passage. Consequently, it is the storehouse of the electric force for local use at the points where it is employed. But if there is a long line of wire the battery which supplies the electric force must be powerful enough to overcome the resistance of all the magnets in the circuit, or else there must be relays of batteries to do so. In the instance of the electric light, the first lamp on the circuit must be allowed a certain resistance before it will afford the necessary light. But the second lamp will have its light subtracted from it in the ratio of the square of its distance to the resistance ohms in the first lamp of the circuit; while as the lamps increase the resistance increases like compound interest; so that the last lamp in the circuit receives no electric current whatever, because that has been consumed by the resistance experienced between it and the first. Mr. Edison may have overcome this resistance, but the question is: At what cost of steam-power? He may be running only a few lamps with an eighty-horse power engine, and that is said to be the size of his machine; if so, his light is as yet an immensely-expensive one, and the question of illuminating residences with electricity still remains unsolved. That large spaces are already successfully illuminated with it is, of course, well known. If, however, Mr. Edison has succeeded in dividing the electric current, economically, then indeed is his invention a success. But here is exactly where the doubt still exists.

Cape and Sword.

Bonaparte never forgot anything; least of all the days of his poverty, and the slights he then received. Grace Greenwood sends to the New York Tribune the following reminiscence of the corporal and Emperor, which is quite characteristic:

When Bonaparte first paid court to Madame de Beauharnais, neither was rich enough to keep a carriage, and the young hero, who was deeply in love, often gave the charming widow his arm when she went to visit her man of business, a notary named Raguideau.

Madame, who had a great confidence in this legal adviser, who was a friend as well, went to see him immediately after her engagement to Bonaparte, who, as usual, accompanied her, but, from motives of delicacy, did not enter the notary's cabinet, but remained in an adjoining room, where several clerks were writing.

The door being imperfectly closed, he here heard nearly all that was said during the interview, and especially the arguments used by Raguideau to deter Madame de Beauharnais from the marriage she acknowledged herself about to contract.

"Mark my words, madame," said the notary, "you are about to commit a great folly, of which you will bitterly repent. Why, this man you are about to espouse has nothing in the world but a cape and a sword."

Said Josephine: "Bonaparte never spoke to me of this, and I had not the faintest suspicion that he had overheard Raguideau's contemptuous words. Can you, Bourrienne, figure to yourself my astonishment when, eight years after, on the day of his coronation, as soon as he was invested with his imperial robes, he said, 'Let them go and seek Raguideau; have him come instantly. I have something to say to him.'"

The notary was promptly brought, and stood much astonished before the Emperor, who with his peculiar sardonic smile said to him, "Monsieur, have I nothing in the world but a cape and a sword?"

A Countryman's Wild Leap.

Two men from Illinois, farmers apparently, sturdily built and ordinarily intelligent, entered the St. Louis Republican office, and before they left one of them had created a sensation of a decidedly startling nature, and afforded one of the most striking illustrations on record of extreme suspicion and simplicity. The men said that they wished to look through the building, and were told that they would be taken up stairs upon going to the elevator, the location of which was pointed out to them. One of the men entered the elevator, but the other, for some reason, stayed outside. The boy in charge of the elevator closed the door and pulled the rope, starting the thing upward. As the elevator began rising the man inside leaped to his feet, glared about him in terror, and yelled out: "My God, where am I going?" He hesitated but an instant. The elevator was moving slowly, but the transom over the door at the bottom was still visible. In a desperate endeavor to escape, the terrified man threw himself at it head first at the same time that the boy, with rare presence of mind, jumped to the rope and reversed the movement. The action was just in time; the ascending elevator caught the passenger's head between its floor and the casing of the transom and pinched it slightly before the movement was reversed and the head released. Then the man jerked back, and, as the descending elevator showed the glass window in the door beneath, he again plunged forward, head first, and went through like a cannon ball, striking at length on the floor of the hall leading to the street, amid a mass of broken sash and shattered glass. Then, quick as lightning, the terror stricken being bounded to his feet and out of the hall and up Chestnut street like the wind, following his less-terrified companion, who had dashed out into the street at the first yell from the elevator.

INDUSTRIAL NOTES.

A VESSEL carried to London lately 18,000 cases of canned salmon.

OVER 1,000 cheese factories are operated in the State of New York.

SEVEN machines in Pittsburgh produced last year 1,063,345 kegs of nails.

THERE is a tea plantation in Georgetown, S. C., which is paying its owner a profit.

THE production of anthracite coal this year will reach 25,000,000 tons—more than ever before.

COTTON factories are rapidly going up in Texas, in order to utilize her superabundant cotton crop.

MILWAUKEE made 752,000 barrels of flour last year, being an increase of 200,000 barrels over 1878.

THE lead mines of Chester county, Pa., that have been idle for twenty years, are soon to be put in operation.

THE fifteen car manufacturing establishments of the United States turned out last year 37,350 pieces of rolling stock.

THERE are more men now employed at the Remington armory at Ilion, N. Y., than at any time in the past five years.

THE cotton factories of Atlanta, Ga., have more orders than they can fill. They are paying dividends of 28 per cent.

IN a day of ten hours 100,000 needles are stamped and bored by a new machine just perfected in Westphalia, Ct.

THE American demand for British iron has diminished recently. One year ago 251 furnaces in America were in operation; now 337 are running.

ST. LOUIS zinc interests are advancing, and the demands for the metal are greater than the capacity of the mills, which are running night and day.

THE second highest bridge in the country is about being built across the Mississippi at Minneapolis. It will be 1,150 feet long, with two spans of 325 feet each, the whole to cost $300,000.

READING employs over 1,500 persons in hat-making, who turn out 1,700 dozen hats daily. To produce these hats over 2,000,000 pounds of scoured wool are required, most of which is grown in Texas and California. All the manufactories are running on full time.

THE United States is making more than one-third of all the paper in the world. The product is about 1,800 tons daily, or 610,500 tons a year. There are 927 mills, representing a capital of $100,000,000, employing 22,000 persons, who receive in salaries about $9,500,000.

THE agricultural prosperity of 1879 is wonderful. The cotton crop is larger by half a million bales than ever before; the tobacco crop is 12,000,000 pounds greater, and the sugar crop exceeds by some 200,000 hogsheads all previous yields. The excess of products over the crops of any previous year is 20,000,000 bushels of wheat and from 80,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels of corn.

Long Spans.

Since the fearful accident to the Tay bridge, some uneasiness has been felt in the instances of some of the iron and suspension bridges in the United States. This may well be so when we consider that many of our bridges have spans as long as that on the Frith of Tay. The bridges at Winona, La Crosse, Dubuque, Keokuk and Hannibal, on the Mississippi, have spans of 240, the Rock Island bridge of 250, and that at Louisiana of 256 feet. The span of the bridge that gave way at St. Charles, Mo., was 320 feet, and the bridge has two others of 406 feet each. The bridge across the Missouri at Leavenworth has three spans of 340 feet each. The truss bridge at Cincinnati has a span of 513 feet; that over the Hudson at Poughkeepsie has five spans of 500 feet each, and the piers are 135 feet above high water. The bridge across the East river, New York, has, however, been made the subject of the greatest number of queries since the Scotch disaster, and the engineers have felt called upon to make reassuring statements. One asserts that the force of a gale of 100 miles an hour from beneath the 100,425 square feet exposed to it would be equal to 1,506 tons, against which there would be a sustaining force of 4,124 tons. A side wind would have a force of 526 tons, opposed by a sustaining force of 2,520. But people cannot be kept from remarking that, while these figures are all well enough on paper, it must be remembered that it was asserted of the Tay bridge, if anything could it would last forever.

The Growth of Colorado.

The annual review of the mining and other interests of Colorado, published in the Denver and Leadville papers, indicate that 1879 has indeed been a most prosperous year for that new and rapidly-developing State. From the facts stated in the Denver Times the following summary of the whole industrial product of Colorado for 1879 can be given:

Gold and silver bullion	$16,900,426
Agriculture	6,300,400
Cattle	1,974,000
Wool	1,450,000
Hides, pelts and tallow	1,010,000
Lumber	2,850,000
Coal	2,310,000
Total	$31,375,426

It may be fairly estimated that the total product of the State was nearly $36,500,000, or about $208.50 per capita, upon a basis of 175,000 inhabitants. This is a large average production to the individual, and demonstrates the intelligence, energy and industry of the people of this mining State.

A GORGEOUS new bonnet does not turn the head that wears it, but it gives a good twist to those who pass it in the streets.

THE MAINE BRIBERY CASE.

Representative Swann's Statement—A Disgraceful Exhibit of Republican Methods—Blaine Implicated

[Augusta (Me.) Telegram to Chicago Times.]

The most important matter before the Maine House was the statement of four members that they had been offered bribes by agents of the Republican party if they would refuse to serve as members of the House and sign a document denouncing the action of the Governor and Council. Immediately after the reading of the journal Mr. Thomas B. Swann, member from Minot, in Androscoggin county rose to a question of privilege, and addressed the House. Mr. Swann is a young lawyer, a member of the Androscoggin bar, and is highly respected by all who know him as an honorable and conscientious man, who would do nothing contrary to the dictates of right and justice. He clearly defined his position in regard to the case of bribery, in which he acted an important part. Few spectators were present during his speech. There were one or two Republican politicians present, who were astonished by the charges preferred by Mr. Swann. When he announced the name of the man who paid him the money the stillness of death reigned. Men looked at each other in blank amazement, and mentally asked the question: "Can such a state of things exist in the law-abiding State of Maine, or is this man simply telling a story for partisan effect?" But Mr. Swann's open, honest face; his plain, convincing language, created an impression strongly in his favor. Following is the text of Mr. Swann's speech:

The press of the Republican party makes charges against me reflecting upon my honor and integrity in relation to matters connected with my position as a member of this House. I refer to the attempt to bribe me by an agent of the Republican party. I will briefly refer to the main facts connected with this affair: I came from my home to this city, Saturday, Jan. 3. On Monday following rumors were afloat that men had been offered money to absent themselves from the House of Representatives, so that no quorum would be present on the first Wednesday in January. Later in the evening of Jan. 5 a reliable person, who is now a member of this House, informed me that Wallace R. White, of Winthrop, had called upon him and offered him $1,000 in cash to deliver up his certificate and resign as a member of the House, which he had refused to accept, and that said White informed him that he wanted three more men to resign, and requested him to see me. Upon this information I went at once to the Augusta House and found Hon. E. H. Gove, Secretary of State, and told him what I knew about the matter. Gove and myself then went out and found Solon Chase. In their presence I hastily drew and signed an affidavit embodying my statement of the bribery. I then went and requested the gentleman who had been offered the $1,000 to see White in the morning, and inform him that I would resign for $1,000. He saw White next morning. White sent back a request for me to meet him at the Court House at 10:30 a. m. I went there at about that time and met White, who took me up stairs into a corner room. He then showed me a statement, as follows:

AUGUSTA, Jan. 6, 1880.

To the Chairman of the Democratic and Greenback Caucus:

After mature deliberation I have concluded that it is my duty as a citizen to obey the laws as they are construed and decided by the Supreme Judicial Court. I cannot, therefore, lend my aid to keeping out of their seats Republican Representatives-elect whom the Supreme Court have declared entitled thereto. I therefore give public notice that I will not participate in the organization of the House, being fairly and fully determined to obey the mandate of the court. To resist that mandate is revolution, destructive both to my party and great interests of the State.

THOMAS B. SWANN.

He informed me that I should have to write a statement like it, and sign the same; also sign the resignation, and deliver up my certificate to him. He said they should not want to use the resignation, but wanted it to show that I acted in good faith, and that after the House was organized I could take my seat, and that the Republicans would put me upon important committees. I informed him that I would sign the paper, and he said that he had to go and get the money. He left the room, and returned in about twenty minutes, and said it was all right. He then read to me and I signed in my own hand letters to the Chairmen of the Democratic and Greenback committees. He also read a resignation, which I copied. I then put said papers, without my signature, into my pocket. We then counted the money and found it correct. I then signed the papers and took the money. He said he wanted some more men, and wanted to know if I knew of any he could get. I told him I thought he could get Harriman, of Kennebunk. He told me to see him, and come with him at 1:30. I then left and called at the Augusta House to see if I could find Harriman, but did not find him. I then went to the State House and found E. H. Gove, and made the following statement:

I, Thomas B. Swann, in the presence of Hon. Solon Chase and Hon. E. H. Gove, make the following statement: I have this day been approached by an agent of the Republican party, to resign as Representative, for money. I am going to take the money to-morrow, and thus show to the people the fraud and corruption of the Republican party. I expect to have another party also take money for the same purpose.

THOMAS B. SWANN.

I went to the Augusta House and found Harriman, told him what had taken place, and he agreed to go with me at 1:30 and take the money and expose the fraud. I went to my dinner, and then returned to the Augusta House, where I again found Harriman, and, not far from 2 o'clock, we went toward the Court House. Before we reached it I showed him White standing on the porch. White went into the building and so did Harriman. As I passed by the Court House White stuck his head out of the window of the same corner room and motioned to me, and I answered the motion with a nod of my head. I then went to the Granite National Bank, taking the money which White had paid me, and bought this draft on Boston. I do not claim this money, and it is subject to the order of the person who furnished it.

In the presence of the members of this House I solemnly assert that, as true as there is a God that controls the destinies of men and of nations, Wallace R. White paid me at the Court House, in this city, the sum of $1,000, with the intention on his part to bribe me from taking my seat in the House. The work by which I exposed this plot was not of a kind that I craved to do, but when I knew that it was the intention of the leaders of the Republican party, by bribery more dark and damnable than was ever recorded upon the pages of history, to defeat the organization of the legislative departments of our Government, I considered it to be my duty to do everything which laid in my power to expose this great crime of crimes. Whether I did right or wrong is for you to determine, and I ask that a committee may be appointed at once to investigate this matter.

After the conclusion of Swann's remarks Moses Harriman, of Kennebunk Port, York county, made his statement, corroborating explicitly the story of Swann, and exhibiting as proof the identical roll of bills, $1,500, which he received from Wallace R. White, the same man who paid Swann, the House applauding.

The Speaker called for order, declaring such a shameful story ought not to be so received. In an impressive manner Harriman called upon God to witness the truth of his statement as to the facts and his intentions when receiving the money.

James R. Clark, member from Nobleboro, said that he was offered by an agent of the Republican party the sum of $1,000 in money and a position under the United States Government, and the place for another also at his disposal, if he would return his certificate and publish a card denouncing the action of the Governor and Council. He refused the offer with contempt.

Mr. Alfred Cushman, of Sherman, stated the fact that he had likewise been offered a bribe if he would leave Augusta and go to his home before the organization of the Legislature. It is understood that as many as four more cases are known and will be developed before the investigating committee, which has been appointed and will proceed at once to an investigation. The proofs, it is alleged by the Fusionists, are convincing and complete, and it is asserted that two United States Senators will be implicated before the matter is ended.

Republican politicians here say Swann has shown himself a knave because he took the money from White, and that he should have spurned the money with contempt; but in the minds of the opposite faction Swann and Harriman are justified by the fact that they received the money for the express purpose of exposing the guilty ones and bringing them to justice. The public announcement of the bribery matter before the popular branch has created the most intense excitement.

It is charged that, when White left Harriman in the Court House to go after money, he was followed down State street, and seen to enter Blaine's house. Upon leaving it he went directly to the Court House.

Illinois Democrats.

The Executive Committee of the Illinois Democratic Press Association held a meeting at Springfield on the 8th of January, and promulgated a long address to the Democratic editors of the State. It urges that the party shall be thoroughly organized throughout the State, and that an aggressive campaign shall be made for this year. As to the financial question, it says of the Democratic party: "It acknowledges the legal-tender money of the United States as the best currency for all purposes that is in use, and opposes any legislation that shall impair its value, and insists that at an early day it may be made the only paper currency of the country, so long as any paper currency shall be retained."

Indiana Democrats.

Prominent Democrats from various parts of Indiana met with the State Central Committee, at Indianapolis, on the 8th inst., and discussed the subject of calling the State Convention. The preponderance of opinion was in favor of a late convention, in May or June. Nothing else was discussed. The committee, after the conference was concluded, retired and fixed June 9 as the date for the meeting of the convention. The meeting was enthusiastic, every one feeling confident of carrying the State next fall.

A Trick of the Imagination.

By humoring the fancy of an invalid, an acute young surgeon made his fortune. He was summoned to visit a very wealthy single lady, far advanced in years, who had been suffering from an alleged bristle of her tooth-brush that had fastened itself in her throat. She stated that she had consulted many eminent surgeons, but they had uniformly assured her, after critical inspection, that she was only the victim of a nervous delusion, that her throat was perfectly healthy, that the disturbance was only in her imagination. "And so they go on, the stupid, perverse, obstinate creatures," concluded the poor lady, "saying there is nothing the matter with me, while I am dying, dying, dying." The surgeon caught his cue, and was equal to the occasion, and, after examining her throat with much deliberation, announced that she was quite right—that the other physicians were mistaken; he could see the end of the bristle low down, almost out of sight, and, if she would permit, he would run home, get his instruments, and extract it instantly. Certainly; that was the very thing she was longing for. The surgeon presently returned with a delicate forceps, in the teeth of which he concealed a bristle from a tooth-brush. The lady threw her head back; the surgeon introduced his forceps—a prick, a shiver, a scream, and it was all over. The surgeon, with a smiling face was closely inspecting the extracted bristle. The lady was in raptures; she immediately recovered her health and spirits, and went about everywhere sounding the praises of her savior, as she called the surgeon. From that fortunate day his fortune was made.

Eloquence.

Eloquence in a man is as difficult to define as fascination in a woman. It is an indescribable something which carries us away captive, we know not why or how. And it is almost infinite in variety. Burke was, and is, considered one of the greatest, if not the greatest of English orators; yet the House of Commons never adjourned after a speech of his to enable the members to regain their mental balance. The House of Commons did do that for Sheridan. None will deny to Webster first-class oratorical ability, yet he could never sweep an audience with him as did Clay. Burke and Webster will live forever in print; Sheridan and Clay in that fond tradition which is quite as imperishable, if not as satisfactory. Sargent S. Prentiss was probably more eloquent than either Sheridan or Clay, yet he exists only as a dim and fading memory. It is doubtful whether the very highest order of eloquence can be preserved in any other way. The subtle spirit that pervades it and gives to it irresistible power evaporates in type. The body is there, but the soul has fled. So the grandest eloquence may be said to die with the breath that carries it to the ear. Demosthenes and Cicero—we read them with delight, but what must they have been to those who heard the words of living fire rush from the speaker's lips.

The Boomerang.

The boomerang is a weapon of the Australian aborigines, and in the throwing of it they are very dexterous. It consists of a piece of hard wood, with the curl of a parabola, and is about two feet long, two and a half inches broad, one-third of an inch thick, and rounded at the extremities. One side is flat, the other is rounded, and it is brought to a bluntish edge. It is discharged with the hand by one end, the convex edge being forward and the flat side upward. After advancing some distance, and ascending slowly in the air with a quick rotary motion, it begins to retrograde, and finally falls to the ground behind the thrower. A weapon of similar form, but wanting the return flight, has been found in use among savage tribes both in India and Africa. The surprising return-motion is produced by the bulged side of the missile. The air impinging thereon hits the instrument in the air, precisely as by hitting the oblique bars in the windmill it forces it to go round. The Australians are very expert in hitting birds with it, the animals, of course, being behind them, and not aware that they are being shot at.

THE people of Mount Vernon, the town whose municipal officers all resigned recently to escape levying a tax to pay the interest on $150,000 debt, have compromised. They agreed to pay $50,000, the citizens taking half in 6-per-cent. bonds, and the Newark Savings Association taking the other half in bonds. There have been no Councilmen and no Government in that city for three months.

A MOVEMENT is on foot to consolidate the interests of the Indianapolis, Delphi and Chicago Narrow Gauge and the Lake Erie and Western extension from Boyleston to Indianapolis, making the line, when built, standard gauge. Much of the way the roads, if built as projected, are only from one to five miles apart, and the friends of both enterprises begin to think it would be wise to double teams and push the road to completion.

A SIX-POUND brass cannon was stolen from the town of Lexington, Scott county, the other day, which has a history. It was made in Paris, France, in 1792, and was captured by the Americans at New Orleans in 1815. Mr. McFarland, who participated in the battle, and who subsequently founded the town of Lexington, presented it to the town. The relic was stolen by boys engaged in the scrap-iron trade, but it was recaptured.

THE Fort Wayne Council voted to sell bonds to the amount of $270,000 to pay for a system of water-works. The bonds were to have drawn 6 per cent. interest. A portion of them have been sold at a premium, and the question that now agitates the minds of the city fathers is, whether the premium belongs to the water-works fund or not. Some think it does, others think it don't, and others want it used, so far as it will go, to pay the interest on the bonds.

TWO YOUNG men of Lawrenceburg bought a bottle of whisky, on Christmas, and went to the old bed of the Miami river to enjoy themselves, where also they fell asleep. Next morning the younger found it impossible to arouse his companion, and proceeded home alone. It is now supposed the missing man froze to death where he lay, and that the sudden rise in the river swept the body away, as the tree under which they were lying is now six feet under water.

THE State Teachers' Association elected the following officers: President, Prof. John Cooper, Richmond; Vice Presidents, D. E. Kelley, Evansville; J. H. Madden, Bedford; Lillian Moore, New Albany; J. D. Crane, La Grange, and Hugh Brown, Valparaiso; Secretary, Miss Annie G. Lemon, Spencer.

THE annual meeting of the State and delegate Boards of Agriculture was held last week. The session was spent in hearing the address of Robert Mitchell, President, and of other officers and department Superintendents in charge of the late fair. They were all satisfactory and congratulatory. The financial statement showed $35,554.65 receipts, of which $22,015.50 were from the fair proper; expenditures, $23,284.66; $4,091.30 for construction and repairs; State fair, including premiums, $9,318.01; interest account, $4,804.55; balance on hand, $12,269.99; net gain in the year, $4,586.47. The geological department cost $1,150.30 up to the time of its discontinuance in June.

How She Was Robbed.

A Dubuque woman put on all her jewelry to go to a fashionable turn-out, her husband being out of town. After returning home and undressing, a masked man presented himself, armed with a revolver, and politely demanded all her diamonds, etc; receiving which he went his way. The husband returned next day, and had not been home very long till his wife found all her jewelry in her casket. The husband had played burglar to give his wife a lesson.

OVER 30,000 men in the Lehigh valley are employed at the furnaces, of which there are fifty-four, with an annual capacity of 624,000 tons. The furnaces produce one-fifth of the pig-iron made in the United States, and consume 1,400,000 tons of iron ore annually.

THE man who had no property to devise should not be unhappy. "I give and bequeath to my dearly beloved wife and children a good name." Isn't that a good start to a last will? If a man can honestly and proudly write that, then descend to possessions that are expressed in figures, so much the better. But there is the best authority for giving the preference to the intangible bequest.

Did the Chinese Invent Bank Notes?

Sir John Lubbock, in the Nineteenth Century, credits the Chinese with the invention of bank notes. It is related that about 119 B. C., the court being in want of money, the Halifax of the day hit upon the following device: When any Prince or courtier entered the imperial presence it was customary to cover the face with a piece of skin. It was first decreed that for this purpose the skin of a certain white deer, kept in one of the royal parks, should alone be employed, and then these skins, which appear to have passed from one noble to another, were sold for a high price. Thus bank notes are believed to have come into vogue in China about 800 A. D., and were called feyt sien, or flying money.

The Third Term and Empire.

[George William Curtis in Harper's Weekly, Rep.]

If he were president for the third time, and the tradition of two terms were once overthrown, why might it not be said in 1884, still more cogently, that he had greatly served the country and ought to be again elected? Would not such apparently logical and reasonable action, to which the constitution offers no bar, necessarily familiarize the public mind with a perpetual presidency? Would not the impatience and disgust already felt by many with the increasing turmoil and excitement attendant upon the quadrennial election generate a disposition, under the circumstances we suppose, to dispense with such an election? Again, would not the same circumstances necessarily foster confidence in personal government and encourage the feeling that this or that man is necessary to the peaceful continuance and administration of the government? And can any idea be more preposterous and dangerous? Once more, when the two-term tradition is gone, and some president of uncertain uprightness and patriotism, in full command of the patronage, should come to the end of the second term, would not a powerful restraint upon his ambition and resolution have been removed?

Cattle Raising in Wyoming.

A correspondent of a Chicago paper, writing from Cheyenne, Wyoming, gives an interesting statement of the cost and profit of stock raising in that Territory. He says that a herd of 1,000 Texas cows and 40 short horn bulls cost at a liberal estimate, $15,000. In five years the natural increase gives 5,000 head of cattle, old and young, worth not less than $70,000.

Five men, including the foreman of the ranch, are sufficient to take care of 4,000 cattle. A good foreman can command $75 per month. An ordinary herder recieves $35 per month. The cost of necessary ranch buildings is trifling. The total expense of a herd of the number above mentioned for five years may be placed at $35,000, this including a contingent loss of five per cent of the cattle, leaving a net profit of $40,000 on the $15,000 invested five years before. The cattle business in Wyoming is very large and rapidly increasing. At the commencement of 1879 there were in the territory 277,000 head, of an average value of $15 per head, making a total value of over $4,000,000. From various points in Wyoming there were shipped in 1878 some four thousand car loads of cattle, worth in Chicago $3,000,000. During 1869 a considerable advance was made in the number shipped, the larger part of the shipping being done in the last quarter of the year.

Something for Our Farmers to Read About the Advantage of Draining.

Now is the time for every farmer to see whether his land needs draining.—Spring is almost here again, and the subject of drainage is before every progressive farmer. There is no question which so urgently demands the attention of the farmers of our country. Let every farmer see if, after heavy rains, the water settles away and passes off thro' a gravelly strata beneath the soil. If so it is naturally underdrained. The lands which need artificial underdraining are those made wet by springs or those which retain the water of heavy rains until it evaporates.

Go out into a field after a heavy rain and dig a hole two or three feet deep.—If the water settles into that hole it shows you the water table. Water seeks its level. The soil is full of water to the exact height that the water rises in the hole you have dug in the field. If the soil is full of water to within an inch or two of the surface it renders it cold and sour. It prevents grass and other crops from starting until very late in the spring. It makes it unfit for cultivation. If it is pasture land it will not grow a sweet herbage.—Underdraining warms the soil. It makes food for plants out of the mineral ingredients of the soil, because it exposes them to action of the air. It enables us to deepen the soil; it renders the soil earlier in the spring; it prevents grasses from running out; it prevents the throwing out of grain in winter; it keeps the effect of cold weather on crops off longer in the fall; it enables us to work sooner after heavy rains; it prevents the soil from baking; it will prevent diseases peculiar to low marshy soils, such as fever and ague. These and many other reasons are given by men who are not "book farmers" or "theorists," but men who speak from experience.

Obituary.

Andrew J. Kines died of pneumonia at his residence in Wilmington township, Wednesday, January 14, after an illness of six days.

The announcement of his death cast a gloom over the entire neighborhood. He has a kind neighbor, ever ready to assist the needy, or to lend a hand to the suffering.

He married Eliza Ricket, of Concord township, December 10, 1857. He was an affectionate husband, a kind an indulgent parent. He was the father of seven children, of whom four are living. The blow falls heavily on the family, and every one realizes that in his death the entire community has sustained a loss. He was born in Franklin county, Pa., March 15, 1835. When he was 18 years old his parents moved to this county, of which he has been a resident for 32 years. So one more of the old settlers has passed away. The age of the deceased was 45 years, 9 months and 29 days.

Special Announcement.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishishers of the STATE SENTINEL which enable us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the COURIER and WEEKLY SENTINEL one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "THE LAW OF THE FARM," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.

2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.

3rd What the deed of a farm includes.

4th The farmer's rights in the road.

5th As to farm fences.

6th As to estray and trespassing animals.

7th The farmer's liabilities for his animals.

8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.

9th Of water rights and drainage,

10th Of trespassing on the farm.

11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The INDIANA WEEKLY STATE SENTINEL is an eight-page paper, (the same as the COURIER) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the COURIER subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

Paus, Pond er and Pruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25). it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infintesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify, to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable house-hold necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company, Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, New York, New York 43-1y.

HON. T. A. HENDRICKS.

His Extemporaneous Address Before the Young Men's Church Guild, at Indianapolis.

Mr. Hendricks said: It is the occasion of more gratification to myself, I presume, than gratification to you, that my remarks have to cover but a very short period this evening.

I don't know that I understand with sufficient accuracy the purpose of the organization of the guild, in connection with St. Paul's church, to properly appreciate the character of the address to be made. I have not had an opportunity, and did not seek the opportunity as I should, to read the constitution and by-laws to ascertain the general scope and purpose of the organization. Guilds are ancient in their existence. They were known far back in Rome, and as far back as the eighth century in France and England, and they were quite numerous more than 1,000 years ago. Their purpose was to promote more especially the interests of artisans, artificers and laborers. They included in the organizations, taking them altogether, the great employments of those two great countries and portions of other countries, the workers in iron and gold, in silver and leather; the butchers, the bakers, the carpenters; all indeed, who were engaged in skilled labor, came to be united in guilds; and finally it became in England a very great power, until at length association with the guild was sought by ambitious men for the strength that the organization gave to their cause as public men. The religious guilds were somewhat confused in respect to their character and purpose. Some of them were devoted exclusively to works of benificence and kindness; others looked to the public safety and welfare, guarded the highways and made provision for the traveler upon the roads. I take it that the purpose of this guild is to seek knowledge, to ascertain important and useful truths and if I had only time and diligence to prepare for it, it struck me that it would be quite proper to tell you the rules which should guide us in the pursuit of knowledge. I shall only, on this occasion, refer to one or two of the guides to you and myself in the pursuit of knowledge. The first is, that we shall clearly, if we can do so, ascertain the boundary where inquiry must stop, and faith begin. I care not which one of the highways you pursue toward knowledge, you will come to a place in the course of your travel where you stop—where you can go no further—as upon the road it shall be a monument or an impassable gulf, and, beyond that, what is in the distant land then becomes a question exclusively of faith. This side of that boundary line is not allowed to us to adopt faith; but I take it that that providence that intended that human intellect should always be stimulated to inquiry intended that we should rely upon our efforts and investigation within the realm of proper inquiry. But we reach a line and boundary beyond which inquiry cannot go, sometimes very early in our progress. I know scarcely any question that does not have this limit and restriction. Take your own person and you know of its existence; you know of its faculties and its powers; but really you know very little of yourself. Have you any idea how it is that your will does govern your body? You know the fact that by the will the mind itself does work, but how it is and what it is you know not. You know that some faculty is connected with your body that controls its action. Just what that will is you know as much as Adam and Eve when they stepped out of the garden. They knew just as much as you do. No philosopher has gone further. How it is that spirit dwells with matter, and how it shall influence the action of matter, no man yet knows, nor will we ever know. So I might go on to give several illustrations, but I will not undertake it. For myself, when I come to that boundary where faith begins, I choose for my faith that which is the most beautiful, most charming, and that which will promote man's happiness to the greatest extent and add to the glory and honor of the Great Author of all things. What shall we believe in regard to the future? We know but little of it, except as we receive it from revelation. How it is that spirits shall dwell in the land of light, separate from matter—that it shall have its enjoyments and its responsibilities—we know now as much as they did 1,000 years ago, and no more. That boundary is absolute. We go no further than the mere fact that we have a faith in a future existence, and that that existence shall be a blessed one to those who merit it, and otherwise to those who don't. I choose to believe that doctrine because it is a pleasant doctrine to me. It is a pleasant faith to me. I believe it contributes to man's elevation and happiness. But in regard to that entire field, not of inquiry, but of faith, we rely upon revelation; and he who takes revelation from man leaves him without information or guide in regard to all the future.

The next rule I would suggest to guide us in our inquiry after truth, is that each opinion that we adopt shall be the result of investigation and an evidence, and not to the contrary; the adoption of the opinion first and the hunting up of evidence afterward to support it. So many dogmas prevail because men adopt them first and seek supports afterwards for them. For instance, it is difficult to see how this world came into existence except we believe revelation. But there is a set of philosophers who deny revelation; but they must tell us how this world came to exist, how you and I came to exist, how it is that, from generation to generation, man goes on. They have no revelation, for they dispute revelation. So they have adopted the theory that it is a quality of nature to re-produce itself, and to advance or improve—constantly growing stronger and better. And this is the theory of creation—their theory of existence. I choose to believe just as the Bible says, that this world was made by the creative power, than, as some persons express it, this world was thrown into its orbits. I don't choose to believe that simply because it is so revealed, but I choose to believe it because revelation in that respect is supported by the highest evidence. Does any one doubt, when he contemplates the heavens, that there is a wisdom somewhere, and a power somewhere, that some of us cannot comprehend? When we contemplate the spheres and systems, and know that each occupies its position in space, and from century to century it has done so; and when we know that each sphere and system occupies that space because certain forces have been given to matter, that all shall balance, and that there shall be no discord and no disproportion of forces, don't I know that a work like that came from an intelligence that is altogether beyond our comprehension? And so, when I contemplate myself, I know that I did not grow, but all the qualities of my nature were impressed upon me and those from whom I came by a power and wisdom that is incomprehensible. As we were going from church one evening, a young gentleman who was traveling along the street with us became more philosophic than wise: "I don't choose to believe anything unless I understand, and it is not for the preacher to ask me to believe anything I cannot understand." "Why," said I, "you don't understand anything. Literally and truly, you know nothing. I suppose you know that you have got a brain, probably, in your head; but do you know anything how it is that that brain performs its wonderful functions? Have you any comprehension how your two handfuls of brain in your head shall do all that even your head is able to do? Why you comprehend the beautiful. You are charmed with paintings, with statuary, with all the illustrations of art. You reason, you judge, you have memory, you carry the facts of the past; and how do you do it?" After a little bit he said he believed he didn't understand that. How is it that poetry and music are produced? How is it that oratory can captivate great crowds? How is it that man possesses these wonderful qualities? Simply from Him whose wisdom is beyond our comprehension. When they tell me that man has been growing, I know that is not so. Man now is just what he was 3,000 years ago. The best is preserved, they say, and say it is constant development in elevation. I think he who reads the debates in the Roman senate 2,000 years ago, or who will read the beautiful productions of Grecian mind nearly 3,000 years ago, will see that the men of that day were able, great and grand, equal to anything of this day. Where is there a greater than Cæsar? Yet between us and Cæsar many generations have passed away, and his genius impressed itself upon dynasties, and his genius and his blood have governed the world more than any man. I might speak of the other great men of that day—Horace and Juvenal—as the equal of men of this day. So, I can look back and judge just as well as if I stood in the Roman senate, of what man was then, comparing him with what he is now. I know that the qualities that belong to men are not the result of growth, but they are impressed with divine power. So I choose to believe that doctrine, and not to believe the new notions; and the reason I believe a thing is because it is so revealed. And I think I may say that when we have to exercise faith, we have got to trust to something. And what do you choose to trust to? In this land, where faith alone helps us—faith becomes the evidence of things not seen. Upon what do you choose to lean? Did you ever stop to consider the remarkable force of that expression, "the evidence of things not seen?" It is that authority addressed to our judgments, that we must recognize and obey. It is revelation. I choose to adopt the opinion and faith that there is One above us all, who made this world by His power, who impressed upon the world and all the creatures of it the qualities of a supreme wisdom, and that by Him and through Him all things exist, and without Him nothing exists at all. Some say, "What do you choose to trust exclusively and entirely to that authority? Are you not willing to assert something for man to do for himself?" Well, he does not do much. I would rather trust to the kindness as well as the power of my Creator, than to my own judgment, and so I believe everything will come out all right because of my faith. I would like to discuss this a little further, but I cannot to-night, and I hope somebody who knows more about it will take it up some other time.

When we come to the line of faith then we stop reasoning. Reasoning does [illegible] through. We hold on to it, that [illegible] it because it is revealed, trusting that our faith is what is required of us.

The Women of Genius who Designed the American Flag.

[Bradford Star.]

Now that the modern Penelope is stabbing her white fingers with the point of a cruel needle and getting the æsthetic bulrush in faithful Kensington colors on screens and panels, it is interesting, says the Washington Post, to recall the achievements of our grandmothers in that direction. In the quiet old days before the sewing-machine, noisy and aggressive, forced dainty and womanly hadicrafts from the field, they did some work that was greatly to their credit, and one of them at least has been embalmed in the amber of history by means of her needlework. She was the genius of the scissors, and with that good blade Excalibur she cut her way to fame and fortune. General Washington himself was roused to enthusiasm by the deftness with which Mrs. Betsey Ross, of Philadelphia, folded and cut at one fell stroke, a white satin star. For forty-six years she made flags for the army and navy.

At the request of Dr. Franklin, Mr. George Morris and Col. George Ross, she made the first flag of the United States, and Thomas Paine, who seems to have had a finger in every pie in those good old times, showed her how to set the stars on the flag.

It was at one time proposed to omit the eagle from the Navy flag, but against this Paul Jones protested. Besides being flag maker extraordinary to the General Government she was an artistic upholsterer, and turnished parlors, theaters and hotels. She not only worked herself, but gave employment to all her relatives and friends. She upholstered the ocean steamers that plied between the new England and the old. For all these purposes she herself imported the richest fabrics, and nothing, says the sketch of her life which has come down to us, could be more bright and beautiful than the draperies which she designed. Probably Miss Ross did not say "designed." She would have been much more likely, in a sensible phraseology of the day, to say that she "cut them out" and made them up. She would look with scant admiration on the dubious colors and half and quarter shades of modern panels. For herself she liked something bright and decided, and always combined with primary colors. Her proudest victories were won by that soldid phalanx of the seven uncompromising shades.

A Slick Trick.

[State Sentinel.]

A number of farmers throughout the state have fallen victims to the "statistical fiend." He is a pleasant-looking fellow, representing himself as the agent of the state board of agriculture, and drives up to a farm-house and presents to the owner a blank reading as follows:

INDIANA STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.
STATISTICAL DEPARTMENT.
DATA FROM 1879.
Number of bushels of wheat raised..........
Number of bushels of corn raised..........
Number of bushels of oats raised..........
Number of bushels of rye raised..........
[With a two inch blank space here.]
(Signed)

The farmer fills out the blank, signs his name, and the "fiend" cuts off the statistics, fills out the blank above the name, with a promissory note, and negotiates the same at the county seat bank.

A MAJORITY FOR THE UNION.—The humor of the war continues to crop out here and there, and is relished equally by the gray-coats and by those who wore the blue. For instance, here is good old Daniel S. Hilton, a Baptist preacher of Roane county, Tennessee, eighty-eight years old. He had sixteen sons in the Union army and two in the Confederate, and thereupon becomes statistical by saying, "My sympathies were with the Union by fourteen majority." The computation seems to be charged with accuracy.—Editors Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for February

Washington as a Fireman.

In 1774 the Friendship Fire Company, which still exists, was organized. It at first consisted of citizens who, out of "mutual friendship," agreed to carry to every fire "two leathern buckets and one great bag of oznaburg or wider linen." Washington was made an honorary member, and when he went as a delegate to the congress of 1774, at Philadelphia, he examined the fire-engines in use there. On his return to Philadelphia to the continental congress in 1775, he bought from one Gibbs a small fourth-class engine for £80 10s., and just before he set out for Boston heights to become commander-in chief he dispatched this little engine to the Friendship company. When in Alexandria during his younger days he always attended at fires, and assisted to extinguish them. In the last year of his life a fire occurred near the market. He was riding down King street, followed by his servant, also on horseback, and he saw the Friendship engine poorly manned. Riding up to a group of well-dressed gentlemen near by, he called out: "Why are you idle [illegible] It is [illegible] business to lead in these matters." And throwing the bridle of his horse to his servant, he leaped off and seized the brakes, followed by a crowd that gave the engine such a "shaking up" as it never knew afterward.—William F. Carne, in Harpers Magazine for February.

WASHINGTON AS A VOTER.—Washington voted at all the Fairfax elections until the close of his life, uniformily supporting the federal candidates. Although living some distance from the courthouse at the Alexandria market, he generally voted early. The polls were reached by a flight of steps outside, which in 1779 had become old and shaky. When the general reached the steps, he placed one foot upon them, and shook the crazy ascent as if to try its strength. Instantly twenty brawny arms, one above the other, grasped the stairway and a dozen men's shoulders braced it. Nor did a man move until the venerable chief deposited his vote and returned. "I saw his last bow," said one of them half a century afterward; "it was more than kingly."—Wm. F. Carne, in Harper's Magazine for February.

THE NEW STYLE

$25 FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.

THE USUAL $65 MACHINE REDUCED TO $25.

$150 per Week Made Easy.

Horse and Wagon Free to Agt's

The CHEAPEST and BEST in the World.

Too Long in Use to Doubt its Superior MERITS

No Money to Pay until Machine is Delivered to you and [illegible]

[illegible] the [illegible] lock-stitch, (the same on both sides of the work), which received the highest reward at the Centennial exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., 1876. And is complete with a larger assortment of attachments for fine work than any other machine, and reduced to only $25.

It is an easy and pleasant machine to operate, requires the least care, produces every variety of work, and will last until the next century begins. Strong, simple, rapid and efficient.

Use it once and you will use no other. The money cheerfully refunded if it will not outwork and outlast any machine at double the price.

Agents sell them faster than any other in consequence of their being the "best at the lowest price."

Each machine throughly warranted with written guarantee for five years. Kept in order free of charge; money refunded at once if not satisfactory.

It is the most solid, reliable, and satisfactory machine ever invented for all kinds of family work. It is an acknowleged unequivocal mechanical success, thoroughly tested and used in thousands of homes. An efficient, silent, rapid, reliable and ever-ready helper to the weary wife or seamstress, it will do the work of a family for a lifetime, or it will earn from $4 to $5 per day for any one who wishes to sew for a living. This machine costs less than half the price of any new machine of like quality. Has extra long, large-sized shuttle, easily removed. Extra large-sized bobbins, holding 100 yards of thread, doing away with the frequent rewinding of bobbins. It is built for strength and constant hard work. Interchangeable working parts, manufactured of fine polished steel. Will run for years without repairs; is simple to learn, easy to manage, understood perfectly in an hour, and always ready in a moment to do every description of heavy or fine work, at less cost or trouble than any other machine at any price ever did or can do. It will sew anything a needle can pierce, from lace or cambric to heavy cloth or harness, with any kind of thread, and will run off twenty yards per minute; it uses strong, straight needles, and never breaks them. It cannot miss or drop a stitch, ravel or break the thread. If you have any other machine, buy this and have a better one. The ease and rapidity of its motion and quality of its work, are its best recommendations. It will hem, fell, tuck, braid, cord, bind, gather, quilt, ruffle, pleat, fold, scallop, shirr, roll, baste, embroider, run up braids, etc., with elegance, ease and quickness, unsurpassed by any machine ever invented.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

The price for our new machines are less than those asked by dealers in second-hand, rebuilt and refinished machines, or those selling out old stock to close up business, many such inferior and old style machines being offered as new at reduced prices; beware of imposition and only buy new machines. There are no new first-class machines offered as low as the "FAMILY," by many dollars.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

REPORTS from Menlo Park are to the effect that Edison's carbon horseshoes are breaking rapidly, and that their manufacture will be discontinued. The great inventor now hopes to overcome the newly-discovered difficulties in time to introduce the light in New York city next winter, and wishes the public to understand that his lamp is yet an experiment only, on which he works every day.

THE long, tedious and expensive trial of the Rev. Mr. Hayden for the murder of Mary Stannard at New Haven, Ct., has come to naught, resulting virtually in the acquittal of the accused. The jury, after being out three days and three nights, failed to agree. The trial lasted nearly four months.

A NEW YORK paper reports that 35,000,000 bushels of grain await shipment there. Nearly 200 vessels of various kinds are willing and anxious to carry it, but nobody is ready to ship.

THE Grand Jury at Harrisburg, Pa., has found true bills against Representatives Rumberger, Clarke and Petroff, and ex-State Treasurer Kemble, E. K. Shoemaker, Christopher Long, Jesse R. Crawford, A. W. Leisenring and Ed McCune, on charges of corrupt solicitation of members of the Legislature.

ANOTHER case of religious fanaticism or somnambulism, involving the death of two children, has come to light in Massachusetts. At 2 o'clock on the morning of Nov. 18 last, a fire was discovered in the house of Mrs. Beard, at Andover, and her two little boys were found dead in bed in their room in an ell of the house. They lay as though quietly asleep, and evidently had passed away unconscious of the touch of the flames. It now transpires that the mother of the little innocents killed them while laboring under an insane hallucination.

DANIEL SEARLES, a negro, was executed at Oswego, Tioga county, N. Y., on the 21st inst., for the murder last summer of an old miser in Newark valley.

THE WEST.

A DARING robbery was perpetrated in the streets of Chicago, a few days ago. E. B. Wells, paymaster of the South Side Gas Company, was driving along Dearing street, in the southern section of the city, when three footpads jumped into his buggy, knocked him senseless, seized $4,000 in specie which he had in his possession, and made good their escape.

BOYD'S packing-house at Omaha, the largest establishment of the kind in that part of the West, has been totally destroyed by fire. The loss on building is $50,000, and that on the stock of meats $125,000.... A dispatch from Leadville, Col., says that a party of Western capitalists, headed by Col. D. P. Dyer, of St. Louis, have purchased the Glass, the Pendery, and Rough and Ready No. 2 mines, three of the richest deposits yet developed in that region, for $5,000,000. This is the largest sale of mining property yet made in Leadville.

THE Western Plow Manufacturers, at a meeting in Chicago the other day, advanced the price of plows 10 per cent.... A Pacific Mail steamship, with 300 passengers, arrived at San Francisco, the other day, with small-pox aboard.... The Treasurer of the Irish Land League Association, of Chicago, has forwarded to Ireland the sum of $4,652 50 for the relief of the people.

ADVICES from New Mexico report another engagement between Maj. Morrow's command and Victoria's band. After a fight of several hours' duration the Indians were finally routed. Lieut. H. F. French, of the Ninth cavalry, was killed while gallantly leading his company. The hostiles' loss could not be ascertained, the country being impassably rough, giving them a chance to carry the wounded off after the Indian fashion. It is stated that three different expeditions will be organized to thoroughly clean out the Indians under Victoria in Southern New Mexico, and give the country peace.

THE Toledo, Peoria and Warsaw railway was sold at auction in Chicago the other day for $6,000,000, Mr. R. O. Martin bidding in the property on behalf of the bondholders.... Chicago elevators are stored with 8,841,658 bushels of wheat, 4,157,037 bushels of corn, 1,115,565 bushels of oats, 271,830 bushels of rye, and 775,048 bushels of barley, making a grand total of 14,837,261 bushels, against 11,140,303 bushels at this period last year. In addition to the above, vessels in the river contain 141,880 bushels of wheat and 1,247,900 bushels of corn.

ORVILLE GRANT, brother of the General, has been appointed a clerk in the Registry Department of the Chicago postoffice, at a salary of $700 a year.

THE SOUTH.

LOUISVILLE adds space to the great national list of defaulting savings-bank cashiers. His name is J. H. Rhorer, and the institution from which he stole $100,000 is the Louisville Savings Bank.

THERE was an extraordinary gathering, from various States, in St. Louis, last week. This gathering was made up of the heirs, or supposed heirs, of the famous Springer estate. The Springer estate is held vaguely to be worth $30,000,000, and to consist of the sum of £175,000 deposited in the Bank of Stockholm by Baron Charles Christiansen Springer, in the year of 1670, and of the site of the present city of Wilmington, Del. There are said to be 400 of the heirs, and between 100 and 200 were present, chiefly from Illinois, California, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Mississippi, Kansas, and Colorado. Among the claimants to this vast estate is Congressman Springer, of Illinois.

BY a boiler explosion on a sugar plantation near New Orleans three persons were instantly killed and thirteen others seriously injured, some of whom cannot recover.... GENERAL.

A HEAVY judgment for damages has been rendered at Toronto against the Canada Central railroad. It was for $100,000, for lumber destroyed by fire kindled by a spark from a locomotive.

THERE was a notable decrease of mercantile failures during 1879. According to Dun, Barlow & Co.'s annual circular, they number 6,658, against 10,478 in 1878; a decrease of 3,820. In the amount of liabilities the decrease is most marked. This amount in 1879 was $98,149,052, as against $234,383,132 in 1878; a decrease of $136,234,080.

WASHINGTON.

A WASHINGTON telegram says it has been determined to send Ouray, Jack, and one other chief back to Colorado, in charge of an agent, for the purpose of bringing on, if possible, the Ute prisoners, or as many of them as can be induced to come.

THE House Committee on Military Affairs has agreed to report a bill restoring Fitz John Porter to the rank of Colonel in the army and awarding him $75,000.... A telegram received at the State Department, from Commander Gorringe, announces the discovery of Masonic emblems in the foundation of the obelisk at Alexandria, Egypt. Under the pedestal on which it was set up by the Romans drawings were made, and the emblems were preserved as they were found.... It has been practically decided by the House Committee on Elections to unseat Yocum, the Greenbacker, from Pennsylvania, whose seat is being contested by ex-Gov. Curtin, to declare the seat vacant, and to remand the case for a new election in February.

SEVERAL important nominations were sent by the President to the Senate for confirmation, last week, the list including the names of James Russell Lowell, of Massachusetts, as Minister to England; John W. Foster, of Indiana, Minister to Russia; ex-Gov. Lucius Fairchild, of Wisconsin, Minister to Spain; Philip H. Morgan, of Louisiana, Minister to Mexico; and Eli H. Murray, of Kentucky, Governor of Utah Territory.

THE bill introduced in the House by Mr. Warner for paying United States bonds of '80 and '81 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue to the public, in exchange for lawful money of the United States, certificates of deposit not exceeding $200,000,000, in denominations of $20, $50, $100, $500 and $1,000, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after three years, taken by lot, and payable after fifteen years.... Seth A. Terry, Secretary of the Territorial Savings, Building and Loan Association, in Washington, has defaulted in the sum of $25,000.

THE trouble between Gen. Boynton, the well-known correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, and Gen. Sherman, of the army, concerning certain published utterances by the latter regarding the character of the former, has culminated in a libel suit, which will probably bring out the true history of the famous march from Atlanta to the sea.

MR. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, has introduced in the Senate a very important measure in relation to the removal of suits by corporations from the State to United States courts, and in relation to suits by and against corporations. It provides that all suits by or against all home or alien corporations may be removed from the court of any State into the Circuit Courts of the United States, and that the State corporations shall be deemed citizens of the State in which their principal office is established, and where their official records shall be kept.

THERE was an important meeting at the Interior Department the other day, in which the Colorado delegation in Congress, Gen. Adams, and Ouray, Jack, Wash and Sowerick participated. Mr. Schurz laid an injunction of secrecy upon all the members of the conference, but it is believed that the following statement gives the practical result of the conference: The land question was thoroughly discussed, and an agreement was reached which was satisfactory to all present, except, it is said, to Sena or Teller. This agreement is that the Utes of Southern Colorado shall be removed to the Grand River valley, in the western part of the State, about midway north and south, while the White River Utes are to be removed to Uintah Reservation.

POLITICAL.

A WASHINGTON dispatch to the Chicago Tribune says the bill introduced in the New York Legislature, providing that the Presidential electors shall be chosen by Congressional districts, instead of on the general State ticket, is attracting considerable attention there. A great many Republicans favor it. The Democrats, on the other hand, insist that it is a revolutionary project conceived entirely in the interest of the Republican candidate for the Presidency.

WASHINGTON advices state that the friends of Senator Thurman have now strong hopes that he will immediately become prominent again as a candidate for the Presidency. This sudden elation arises out of a proposition pending before the New York Legislature to change the method of appointing electors for President and Vice President in that State. As the Democrats, in that event, could not calculate upon the vote of New York, it would be absolutely necessary for them to turn their attention toward securing the electoral vote of Ohio.

THE Maryland Legislature has elected Arthur Gorman to the United States Senate for the term of six years following March 3, 1881.

AFTER a somewhat protracted contest, J. Z. George has been elected to the United States Senate from Mississippi. His chief opponents were Gens. Barksdale and Walthall and Congressman Singleton.... The Louisiana Legislature has chosen Congressman Randall L. Gibson to succeed Kellogg in the Senate from that State. The latter's term expires in 1883.

FOREIGN.

A BERLIN dispatch reports a serious quarrel at Kalisch, Poland, between Russian and German officers. The officers of a Russian regiment stationed at Kalisch invited the officers of Prussian regiments stationed on the other side of the frontier to Kalisch, and, in the course of a political argument, the Russians used insulting language to Germany. Bloodshed was averted by the Russian Colonel sending home the German officers under escort.... Serious riots have occurred at Pesth, in Hungary, in consequence of the fatal shooting of Vehoray, a leader of the people, by an aristocrat, Baron Majthenyi by name. A Cork dispatch states that sixty able-bodied men, with their families, were admitted to the Killarney workhouse. A woman applied for admission with three children, one of whom was dead in her arms from hunger and exposure.... A London dispatch says that all accounts agree that the situation in the distressed districts is becoming extremely critical. The Mayors of Sheffield and Brighton, and other towns, have opened relief subscriptions, but the universal opinion is that private relief cannot cope with the distress.

THE situation in Ireland grows more critical with each day's news. In some districts starvation is staring the poor laborers and their families in the face. In others, they are thronging to the workhouses for relief. In still others, private charity has had to come to the rescue, though it is insufficient to cope with the distress.

DUBLIN advices report that the landlords are entering into co-operation together for the purpose of defending their rights against the tenantry. Considerable dissatisfaction is expressed at the poor facilities for extending Government relief to the poor. THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

Another batch of suffrage petitions was presented to the Senate on the 15th inst. by Messrs. McPherson and Baldwin. Mr. Allison, from the Committee on Finance, announced that he was directed by that committee to report adversely on a joint resolution for the withdrawal of the compulsory legal-tender power of the United States treasury notes. Mr. Bayard, from the same committee, presented the views of the minority, in favor of the resolution, which were signed by Messrs. Kernan and Bayard, while Messrs. Wallace and Morrill reserved the right of amendment. Mr. Morgan presented the credentials of Luke Pryor, appointed Senator from Alabama. Mr. Pryor took the modified oath. Mr. Morrill called up for consideration his resolution instructing the Finance Committee to inquire into the practicability of refunding the public debt at a less rate of interest than 4 per cent., and made a speech thereon. The bill for the removal of all of the obstructions in Delaware Breakwater harbor was passed. The bill to establish a new land district in Dakota was passed. Adjourned to Monday.... In the House, after some miscellaneous business, consideration was resumed of the bill requiring one-half of the reserves of the national banks to be kept in gold and silver coins of the United States. Mr. Price, of Iowa, spoke in support of the bill. He declared himself opposed to any tinkering with the currency, either as to the quantity or quality of paper which was circulating. He was also opposed to the taking away of the legal-tender quality of the greenbacks. All prudent men spoke in thunder tones, and said: "Let well enough alone." Mr. Lewis also spoke in favor of the bill, which went over. The House then went into committee of the whole upon the rules, and consumed nearly the whole day without reaching a decision. Mr. Converse introduced a bill for the establishment of titles in the Hot Springs reservation.

Mr. Sparks, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in the House, on the morning of the 16th, reported a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information as to the number, rank, names, and annual pay of every officer on the retired list of the army. Adopted. The whole day was occupied upon the private calendar. Mr. Sanford, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill refunding to the State of Georgia $35,000 expended for common defense in 1777. Mr. Bright, Chairman of the Committee on Claims, reported a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of the sums of money covered into the treasury from the proceeds of the sale of lands for direct taxes in South Carolina. Adopted. A bill passed donating condemned bronze cannon to the Morton Monument Association of Indiana.

A joint resolution was introduced in the Senate on the 19th inst., by Mr. Ferry, for an amendment that suffrage shall not be restricted on account of sex; and Mr. Pratt presented a resolution inviting other Governments to co-operate in the Panama canal. A number of private bills were passed. Bills introduced: By Mr. Sanders, granting an increase of pension to the widow of Maj. Thornburgh; by Mr. McDonald, to allow a rebate on duty paid on imported salt used for curing fish or in packing; by Mr. Wallace, a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Secretary of State for full information concerning the labors of the Spanish-American commission on claims growing out of the Cuban outrages. The special order—the bill to prevent cruelty to animals in transportation—was then called up and debated at length. The Chair appointed Senator Pryor to replace the late Senator Houston on the Committee of Privileges and Elections, Claims, Postoffices and Post-Roads. Appointments: William J. Phillips, United States Marshal Eastern District Texas; John McNeil, United States Marshal Eastern District Missouri; Augustus Ash, United States Marshal District of Nevada; DeForest Porter, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of Arizona; Jacob B. Blair, Associate Justice Supreme Court of Wyoming; Melville C. Browne, United States Attorney for Wyoming; William Callon, Receiver of Public Moneys, Warsaw, Wis.... Under the call of States for bills in the House, the following important measures were presented: By Mr. Bailey, relating to the inter-oceanic canal, and requesting the President to invite the co-operation of the Governments of the principal maritime nations of Europe in the selection of the route of the isthmus ship transit; by Mr. Vance, to repeal the duty on salt; by Mr. Cobb, for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award; by Mr. Townshend, proposing a constitutional amendment in regard to the election of President and Vice President, providing for their election by a majority of the votes of the people, and for the abolition of the Electoral College; by Mr. Bland repealing the law restricting the sale of tobacco; by Mr. Young, for the retirement of officers of the army of a certain grade; by Mr. Wells, incorporating the J. B. Eads Inter-Oceanic Transit Company, and appropriating $300,000 for surveys for a Panama canal survey. The Hall of the House was tendered to Mr. Parnell for an address, on the 2d of February. A resolution of Mr. Kelley in regard to the tariff laid over. Bills were passed: For the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia; appropriating $145,000 for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac river at or near Georgetown, D. C.

Mr. Windom presented a petition in the Senate, Jan. 20, for the removal of obstructions to navigation in the Red river of the North. Mr. Logan presented petitions for the reduction of the duty on zinc and for the equalization of bounties. The House bill to admit free of duty articles for exhibition at the Millers' Convention at Cincinnati, was passed. Mr. Hill introduced a bill to provide for the erection of a public building in Denver. A resolution was adopted inquiring into the condition of the Pensacola navy yard, and the cost of restoring it. Mr. Logan, by request, presented the petition of soldiers for the passage of the Weaver bill for the payment to soldiers of the difference between greenbacks and gold when they were paid. After passing several unimportant bills the Senate took up the special order, the bill to prevent cruelty to animals in transportation, and several proposed amendments were discussed, and the bill was recommitted. Mr. Paddock introduced a bill to equalize homesteads; also a bill for the relief of settlers on school lands in Washington Territory. Two witnesses under attachment for contempt in the Lugalle bribery case purged themselves from the contempt and were discharged.... In the House the following bills were introduced: By Mr. Warner, for paying United States bonds of '80 and '81 by authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates of deposit not exceeding $500,000,000, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, redeemable after three years, and payable in fifteen years; by Mr. Willits, disqualifying a person who practices polygamy from sitting or holding office; by Mr. Culberson, for the discontinuance of the national-banking system; by Mr. Cravens, for the settlement of titles in the town of Hot Springs, Ark.; by Mr. Conger, a resolution of the Michigan Legislature against any increase of duty on low grades of sugar; by Mr. Loring, proposing a constitutional amendment "that the right of suffrage shall be based on citizenship, and the right of citizens to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State on account of sex, or for any reason not equally applicable to all citizens of the United States." In the morning hour consideration was resumed of the bill relating to the national-bank reserves, and Mr. Chittenden spoke against the legal-tender quality of greenbacks. A petition that the duty on steel rails shall be $10 per ton was received. The balance of the day was spent in committee of the whole upon the rules.

Messrs. Edmunds and Garfield were appointed members of the Board of Visitors to the next annual examination of cadets at the West Point Military School, at the session of the Senate of Jan. 21. Mr. Edmunds, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill relating to the removal of suits by corporations, and to make further provisions relating to suits by and against corporations. Mr. Cockrell, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported adversely the Senate bill in relation to brevet army appointments, and it was indefinitely postponed. Mr. Beck then addressed the Senate in opposition to the Bayard legal-tender resolution, consuming the entire session.... In the House, Mr. Sparks, Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill for the relief of Gen. Fitz John Porter, accompanied by a majority report thereon. Mr. McCook presented a minority report. The bill was made a special order for the 18th of February. Mr. MacMahon, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill for the payment of fees of United States Marshals and Deputy Marshals for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. Consideration was resumed in the morning hour of the bill relative to fractional bank reserves, and the House was addressed by Messrs. Lounsberry, Buckner and Townshend. The House then went into committee of the whole upon the rules. The Speaker laid before the House various executive communications. Mr. Covert offered a resolution calling on the Commissioner of Agriculture for information relative to the sugar beet.

THE MAINE MUDDLE.

Everything was quiet at Augusta on the 15th. In the House the Committee on Elections reported, giving the seat of Donnells, of Westbrooke, Republican, to Merritt W. Stiles, Democrat. The report was carried without opposition, and Stiles qualified and took his seat. Acting Governor Lamson issued an order to the Sheriff of Kennebec county, informing him that his deputies were no longer required to protect the public buildings, and directing him to dismiss them. The Sheriff refused to obey the order. The House Bribery Committee continued its investigations, but elicited nothing of importance.

The Maine Supreme Court, on the 16th inst., answered all the interrogations submitted to it by the Legislature. The decision was in favor of the Republicans and adverse to the Fusionists upon every point. The Legislature went into the election of a Governor, the choice falling on Maj. Joseph L. Smith. Other State officers were also chosen. In the House, the report of the Election Committee declaring William Murray, Fusionist, of Vassalboro, elected to a seat instead of Rev. Dr. Nathaniel Butler, Republican, was adopted, thus bringing the members of the House to 77. Gov. Smith delivered a brief inaugural address, and also issued an order relieving Gen. Chamberlain from the command of the State militia. The Bribery Committee continued its investigation. Thomas B. Swann repeated in greater detail the statements previously made by him in regard to the methods adopted by Wallace R. White to induce him to stay away from the House or resign his seat. Enloe Chase corroborated Swann's testimony in certain particulars. James O. White, member of the Legislature and cousin of Wallace R. White, testified that the latter offered him $1,000 to stay away from the Legislature. Wentworth and Cushman, members of the House, swore that efforts were made to bribe them to absent themselves from the State House.

Saturday, the 17th of January, was a lively day at the Maine State capital. The Fusion Legislature met in the forenoon, and, after the appointment of committees by both the Senate and House to take into consideration the situation of affairs and report upon the best mode of procedure, adjourned until Monday, the 19th. Immediately after the Fusionists dispersed the Republican members of the Legislature took possession of the State House and elected Daniel F. Davis Governor, S. J. Chadborne Secretary of State, J. W. Rogler Treasurer, H. B. Cleaves Attorney General and S. J. Gallaghan Adjutant-General. Davis was sworn in as Governor and delivered an inaugural address. After the transaction of some routine business both houses quietly adjourned. During the session Blaine came upon the floor of the House and was received with the wildest demonstrations of applause.

The Republican Assembly held a brief session at Augusta on the 19th inst., but did nothing of importance. After the adjournment Gov. Davis gave orders to exclude the Fusionists from the State House. In the afternoon the latter, headed by Gov. Smith, presented themselves at the gateway of the Capitol, but admission was denied them, and they proceeded to organize and transact their business on the sidewalk. After a very short session, at which it was determined to secure Union Hall and continue their sessions from day to day, they adjourned. The Secretary of State and Governor secured rooms in the same building. Money enough, it is said, has been guaranteed to run their Legislature all winter, and pay every man his salary. They say they intend to appeal to Congress, and will soon have a committee there to investigate matters. The Fusionists were very indignant at their exclusion from the Capitol. They say Gov. Smith could have had 10,000 men in readiness at a moment's notice, but his counsel has been for peace, and has prevailed. The State Treasurer issued an order instructing the subordinates of his office not to honor any demand for the payment of money from the treasury emanating from, or issued by, the authority of either of the Legislatures until further advised by him.

The Republican Legislature, at its session on the 20th, adopted a resolution denouncing the Fusion body as bogus, and acting in violation of the constitution and laws of the State, and directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire what legislation is necessary to punish them. It was ordered that the Secretary of State be directed to procure a suitable seal, which shall be acknowledged as the seal of the State. Four Fusionists went over to the Republicans during the day. The Fusionists met in Union Hall. The committee appointed to report upon a plan of procedure recommended submitting a series of questions to the Supreme Court. After a good deal of talk an adjournment was voted without action on the report. The Republicans forced open the safe of the Secretary of State's office; there were no valuable papers in it, nor the seal of the State, or official election returns. It is conjectured that the returns have been destroyed.

Matters wore a quiet look at Augusta on the 21st. The Republican Legislature showed a disposition to conciliate the Fusionists by giving them places on the most important committees appointed, but the latter held severely aloof. Samuel A. Holbrook was elected State Treasurer. The Fusion Legislature met at Union Hall, and voted to draw up a statement of facts and a series of questions, to be submitted to the members, who will decide whether to send them to the Supreme Court or not. The Fusionists established a State Department in a business block, and the Secretary of State issued the following: "We have returned to first principles. We have a pine table and chairs. The great seal of the State is in possession of the only legally elected and qualified Secretary of State. The Capital Guards and other companies have been ordered to their armory as a precautionary measure." A Republican mass meeting was held in the evening at which Senator Blaine was the chief speaker.

White River Massacre Investigation.

The Committee on Indian Affairs in the House of Representatives are engaged at Washington in investigating the cause of the Ute outbreak at the White River Agency in Colorado. Gen. Adams was the first witness examined. He simply told the story of his personal connection with the Indian troubles—a story which has already been often told in the newspapers. It comprised his appointment by Mr. Schurz as a Special Agent of the Indian Bureau last fall, while Mr. Schurz was in Colorado. At that time Adams was an employe in the Postoffice Department. He went to Los Pinos, and was conversant with the incidents of the Thornburgh fight and the Meeker massacre. He thinks Meeker was largely to blame for those calamities. He was a cranky old man, with set notions, and frequently embroiled himself in quarrels. On one occasion two young men went out into the prairie and set the grass on fire, with the intent to scare Meeker. The latter at once sent for soldiers. These came, and Thornburgh's ill-fated expedition was the result. The Indians became very much alarmed. In one of the subsequent quarrels between them and Meeker he met his death. Adams told his story from beginning to close with few interruptions. He offered no opinions on the situation, nor was he asked to. He is known to be a firm friend of Mr. Schurz.

Gen. Clinton B. Fisk, in his testimony before the House Committee on Indian Affairs, arraigned the Indian Bureau for incompetency, and charged it with responsibility for the Ute revolt. Among the reasons assigned by him for the rebellion of that tribe was that they were cheated out of their lands; that the Government failed to pay them their annuity; that from 1876 to 1878 supplies were not furnished them; that the sale of arms and ammunition on the White River reservation had been forbidden, and that Agent Meeker was an injudicious and unfit man. Commissioner Hayt denied many of the General's assertions, and attributed the abuses in the service to his predecessor in office.

Census Supervisors.

The Exodus Investigation.

The committee of the United States Senate, consisting of Messrs. Voorhees, Vance, Pendleton, Windom and Blair, appointed to investigate the causes of the exodus of colored people from the Southern States, commenced taking testimony. The first witnesses examined were the Rev. J. E. Rankin, pastor of the Congregational Church, and Thos. Tullock, Assistant Postmaster of Washington, both of whom testified that they had no personal knowledge of the causes of the exodus, and knew nothing of the widely-scattered circular to which their names were appended, appealing to the people of the United States for money to assist the freedmen in finding refuge from persecution, etc., except that they had promised to serve as members of the Board of Audit for the Emigration Aid Society therein referred to.

O. S. B. Wall, of Washington, President of the "Emigrant Aid Society," was examined. He estimates the number of colored men, women, and children already transported from North Carolina through Washington to the West (principally to Indiana) between 2,500 and 3,000. The original purpose of the North Carolina agents of these emigrants was to have them go to Kansas, but the tide was diverted to Indiana by their agents (Perry and Williams) on the strength of representations by members of the Washington society, based on circulars received from J. H. Walker, Mail Agent at Terre Haute, to the effect that there was a great demand for farm labor in Indiana, and that the colored people would readily find employment there at excellent wages, together with the best of treatment, and schools for their children, etc.

The Fatal Shirt-Button.

Dr. Sander, a physician of Elberfield, Germany, died from the effects of a singular accident, which conveys its own lesson. One morning in 1874, while dressing, he contrived in some way to get a shirt-button between his teeth. Unconsciously, while laughing, the button slipped into the back of his mouth, and thence into the larynx. All the exertions of his surgical friends to remove it were vain.

It was ascertained that it sank into the right lung, which soon became irritated. Spitting blood ensued, and he was himself looking forward to his death as not very remote.

He removed to a villa he had near Frankfort-on-the-Main to pass his last days in quiet. Here he was surprised by a violent fit of coughing, accompanied by spitting of blood, in a paroxysm of which the button was ejected.

His health rapidly improved, and in a few months, regarding himself as quite cured, he resumed his professional work and endeavored to gather up the threads of his former practice.

But last year unmistakable symptoms manifested themselves that the lung had not fully recovered from the presence in its substance of a foreign body for several months.

He spent the winter in the South of Europe, but returned almost worse than he went. He gradually wasted away and died.

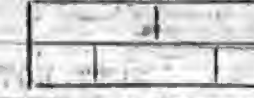
A LADY'S ribs were broken by her dressmaker in Lyons, N. Y. The friend of the household had attempted to fit a dress to her and had caused so much pain in her right side that the work had to be abandoned. The lady was in a state bordering on hysterics when medical aid was summoned, and an examination revealed the fact that one of her ribs was broken.

NEARLY all the leading London shops are very old establishments. Hedge & Butler, wine merchants in Regent street, were wine merchants to Charles II. Redmaynes, Howell & James (immortalized by Hood in "Miss Kilmansegge and her Golden Leg"); Fortnum & Mason, famous Italian warehousemen; Swan & Wells, renowned for underwear and children's clothes; Swan & Edgar, Lewis & Allenby, Holmes, Mortlock, are all near a century old. All traveled Americans know these firms. A London business is much more valuable in the long run than one in America—it lasts.

A TEAMSTER at Carson, Nev., was told that somebody in Paris had offered a prize of $4,000 to anybody who traced a figure like the following, without lifting the pencil, going over a line twice, or making an erasure:



Although he was informed that the thing was impossible, he persistently worked at it night and day until he became a lunatic. In an asylum he still spends most of his time at the problem.

THE new United States Senator from Maryland is A. P. Gorman. He succeeds William Pinckney White, who was appointed by the Governor of Maryland to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Reverdy Johnson as Minister to England, and in 1875 was regularly elected to the Senate. Mr. Gorman is Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, President of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, a member of the State Senate, and, curiously enough, was, when a lad, a page in the august body to which he has been elected.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

The United States Consul General at Mexico reports that the superiority of American goods is causing them to displace European goods in the Mexican market.

The Metropolitan National Bank, of New York, has taken up the bonds deposited at Washington to secure its circulation and withdrawn its notes—a transaction by which the concern makes an annual profit of over $90,000.

This Government wants its officers to put on no airs. Maj. William E. Sweet, chief of the internal-revenue division in the office of the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department, has been dismissed for extravagant expenditures made while traveling on Government account.

The high price of corn in 1879, as compared with that of 1878, has evidently cut short the hog crop of the West considerably. The six large pork cities and the interior points, it is now estimated, will pack the present season 6,980,000 hogs, as against 7,480,000 last season. This is a net decrease of 500,000, in round numbers, the present season.

Judge Anderson, in the Virginia Court of Appeals, recently gave a novel opinion. The appellant, Mrs. Latham' sought a divorce from her husband on the ground that he had joined the Republican party. The shock, she said, was too great for her domestic happiness. And Judge Anderson thought that she was right. "The husband," he said, "had deserted his friends and gone over to the enemy. It was perfidy, the moral taint of which, she felt, attached to him, and would probably exclude him from the best society in the State." And so the learned Judge thought that the bonds of matrimony should be dissolved.

The printers of his State prove that the new Lieutenant Governor of Ohio, Mr. Hickenlooper, has a hard name. The New York Graphic says that from a perusal of Ohio exchanges it not only appears that Mr. Lickenhooper has been politically kicked and cuffed, but that Mr. Riplencooker has been subjected to other indignities. In fact, Mr. Pooklenhiper seems to be considerably mixed up in the webs of his political antagonists. The general opinion is, however, that if any of these prosecutors think they have only a day's job on hand in fighting Mr. Loophenkicer they are very much mistaken, as Mr. Hickpoolkener will give them a two-years' engagement.

The gold and silver product of the Pacific slope, for 1879, including British Columbia and receipts in San Francisco from the western coast of Mexico, are: Gold, $32,589,920; silver, $38,623,812 Adding lead, the total is $75,349,501, or nearly $6,000,000 less than in 1878. The returns are interesting, from the fact that they show an immense falling off in the receipts of the Comstock lodes. These return only $8,830,562, as against $21,295,043 in 1878. There is a falling off of $13,000,000 in the entire State of Nevada, and an increase of over $8,000,000 in the State of Colorado, chiefly from Leadville. These facts indicate that the uncertainties in mining returns are much greater than is commonly supposed.

The war against the lottery companies is still kept by the Postoffice authorities. Postmaster General Key recently sent to Congress the records of his department respecting the extent to which the mails were used by lottery companies and other swindling concerns. The "Texas Gift Concert Association" is described as "one of the most successful swindles" of the day. The managers of the concern divided the day's receipts among themselves every evening, the unsold numbers being placed in the wheel from which the "prizes" were drawn. The department also called the attention of Congress to the swindling concerns operating under the titles of the "Denver Land Company" and the "Kansas Land Company," denouncing them in strong terms.

The railway interest is the heaviest consumer of iron in the country. It now looks as if there would be a larger demand for iron in 1880 than for many previous years. In 1879 the total mileage of road built was 4,000. But already this year 9,000 to 10,000 miles are projected for immediate construction. Some authorities put the figures as high as 12,000 miles. For tracks alone, old and new, it is figured that 1,500,000 tons of steel and iron rails will be required. The full capacity of our mills is estimated at 1,400,000 tons, leaving 100,000 to come from abroad. But in addition large quantities of iron will be required for cars, engines, bridges, spikes, bolts, fish-plates, and other equipments. From all these facts it is evident that the expectations of a larger demand for iron this than for almost any previous year are by no means too sanguine.

An unwritten page of history came to light at a Boston dinner, a few days ago. The story was told by the Hon. E. W. Stoughton, ex-Minister to Russia, and he gave it as told to him authentically while at his post in St. Petersburg: "During the war of the Revolution, in 1780-'81, England attempted to negotiate with Russia and Prussia to combine against France and compel her to withdraw her fleet from American waters, offering as a consideration the cession of the island of Minorica, in the Mediterranean. Fortunately for the young American republic, the proposal did not meet with favor in the eyes of Catherine II., and Prussia did not dare to join England single-handed. The legend is of importance only as showing the desire of England to regain possession of her colonies here and the great danger of our country averted by the non-intervention policy of Russia's Queen."

The Darkest Day of Grant's Life.

"The darkest day of my life," said the General, "was the day I heard of Lincoln's assassination. I did not know what it meant. Here was the rebellion put down in the field and starting up in the gutters: we had fought it as war, and now we had to fight it as assassination. Lincoln was killed on the evening of the 14th of April. Lee surrendered on the 9th of April. I arrived in Washington on the 13th. I was busy sending out orders to stop recruiting, the purchase of supplies, and to muster out the army. Lincoln had promised to go to the theater, and wanted me to go with him. While I was with the President a note came from Mrs. Grant, saying she must leave Washington that night. She wanted to go to Burlington to see our children. Some incident of a trifling nature had made her resolve to leave that evening. I was glad to have the note, as I did not want to go to the theater. So I made my excuse to Lincoln, and at the proper hour we started for the train. As we were driving along Pennsylvania avenue a horseman rode by us on a gallop, and back again around our carriage, looking into it. Mrs. Grant said: 'There is the man who sat near us at lunch to-day with some other men and tried to overhear our conversation. He was so rude that we left the dining-room. Here he is now, riding after us.' I thought it was only curiosity, but learned afterward that the horseman was Booth. It seems that I was to have been attacked, and Mrs. Grant's sudden resolve to leave deranged the plan. A few days later I received an anonymous letter from a man, saying he had been detailed to kill me, that he rode on my train as far as Havre de Grace, and, as my car was locked, he could not get in. He thanked God he had failed. I remember that the conductor locked our car, but how true the letter was I cannot say. I learned of the assassination as I was passing through Philadelphia. I turned around, took a special train, and came on to Washington. It was the gloomiest day of my life."—Young's "Around the World with Grant."

An Ante-Bellum Poker Story Retold.

On one of those steamers that plowed the waters of the Mississippi in days gone by a quiet party was deeply immersed one evening in the mysteries of that somewhat uncertain game called poker. One of the party, a Colonel or Judge, or Major—history does not record which—in a fit of abstraction took the four aces from the pack with which the game was being played and laid them on his knee. The game progressed, and the Colonel almost "raised" his antagonists out of their boots. When the "draw" came, he threw away his legitimate five, called for one, and reached for the four aces on his knee. They were gone! Rising, he cried in tones of virtuous indignation: "Gentlemen, this thing has gone far enough. There's cheating going on around this table!"—Mobile (Ala.) Register.

At a performance of the cantata of "Esther" at Dallas, Texas, Ahasuerus was advised by somebody in the audience to "cut it too fat." The personator of the great Assyrian went to the footlights and said: "This is a religious show, and you'll have to be decent. I'm Ahasuerus just now, but after the show I'm Sam Turner; and, if any duffer would like to cut it fat, then I'll give him a mighty lively welcome."

The Gaceta, of Madrid, reports the population of the island of Cuba at the end of 1878 at 1,399,979, of whom 266,759 were creoles or free blacks, and 187,596 slaves.

FARM NOTES.

The rain annually pours into the soil a quantity of nitrate of ammonia fully equivalent to three pounds per acre.

Damaged corn is exceedingly injurious as food for horses, because it brings on inflammation of the bowels and skin diseases.

Guinea fowls will keep all bugs and insects of every description off garden vines. They will not scratch like other fowls, or harm the most delicate plants.

The average butter yield of the Ayrshire cow is one pound from twenty to twenty-five pounds of milk; from the Jersey it is one pound of butter from eighteen pounds of milk.

Turnips are healthful for horses. They should be cut in slices, or, what is better, pulped finely and mixed with a little meal and some salt. Rutabagas are better than white turnips.

Keeping sheep is pleasant and profitable, if attended to properly. Wool is a sure thing every year and brings cash. It has its ups and downs, but let any man make up his mind that none but his wife or his administrator shall sell his wool for less than 30 cents per pound and he will come out all right.

Parsnips, carrots, Swedish turnips and especially mangel-wurzel, will all fatten pigs. These roots ought not to be given in a raw state, but always cooked and mixed with beans, peas, Indian corn, oats or barley, all of which must be ground into meal. When pigs are fed on such cooked food as we have stated, the pork acquires a peculiarly rich flavor, and is much esteemed, especially for family use.

Horse Hints.—Rubber bits are the best for winter use on your horses. The mortality among horses is greater between the ages of 4 and 8 years than at all other periods of life. Warm the bit on your bridle in frosty weather before putting it in the horse's mouth. The bit full of frost, coming in contact with the tongue and lips, adheres to these soft tissues the same as it would do when red-hot, leaving the animal with a sore mouth. If you do not believe it place your own tongue on a piece of frosted iron some cold morning and be convinced.

A good workshop containing such tools as can be used to advantage by the farmers should be found on every farm. A room with a stove in it and large enough to permit of the construction of a hay rigging, a gate or portable fence, will furnish a place where many hours may be healthfully and profitably spent in the most inclement weather of winter. Here a great deal of repairing may be done that would otherwise find its way to the professional mechanic. New tools may be built, that will be needed on the farm, or harnesses may be oiled and repaired and a great many things that will suggest themselves may be done. In mild weather the thoughtful can find profitable out-door work, such as repairing outbuildings and cutting up falling branches from trees.—Rural New Yorker.

Large numbers of cattle die annually in the West from the lack of water when feeding in the cornfields. Dry corn-stalks, as compared with grass, are constipating food; but smutty corn-stalks are especially liable to cause impaction of food in the stomach, and disease of the brain. The risk is largely or entirely obviated if there is a sufficient supply of water; but when the water is frozen up the animal can no longer chew the cud from lack of water in the paunch to separate and float its contents, and impaction and a whole train of evil consequences follow. If water can be supplied so that the cattle can drink at will, it is better; but if not, it should be allowed abundantly at any cost twice a day. While in many cases no other than iced water can be had, it is all-important that stock should not be left to become so thirsty that they will fill themselves when driven to drink, and then stand shivering in the cold stall or stanchions, where they are denied even the privilege of stimulating their circulation by walking about.—National Live-Stock Journal.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

Dressing for Roast Pork or Goose.—Make a dressing as for goose, and one teaspoon of mustard and teaspoon salt, with a wineglass of claret, and mix with the dressing before putting in the goose or pork, or pour this into the gravy.

Roast Goose.—Two ounces onion and half as much green sage chopped fine; add one coffee cup of bread crumbs, a little pepper and salt, the yelks of two eggs. Do not quite fill the goose, but leave room to swell. Roast from one hour and a half to two hours, and serve with gravy and apple sauce.

Sweet Pickles.—To every seven pounds of fruit put four pounds of sugar, one quart of the best vinegar, an ounce of cloves, ounce of cinnamon, a dozen pieces of mace. Put the sugar and spices in the vinegar. Let it boil, then pour over the fruit; let this remain till next morning; boil and pour over for three mornings. The last time boil the fruit in it.

Is a Brass Vessel Safe for Cooking In?—A brass kettle may be used for cooking with safety, if thoroughly well scoured before being used. The scouring should be done with fine bath brick, and afterward with hot water. No acids, such as vinegar, should be used in cooking in a brass kettle. When the kettle is done with for the time, it should be scoured and put away in a dry place, where it will always be ready for use after simple washing.

Celery Cream Soup.—To make celery cream soup boil a small cup of rice in three pints of milk until it will pass through a sieve; grate the white part of two heads of celery (three, if small) on a bread-grater; add this to the rice milk after it has been strained; put to it one quart of strong white stock; let it boil until the celery is perfectly tender; season with salt and cayenne, and serve; if cream is obtainable, substitute one pint of it for the same quantity of milk.

Coffee Custard.—Make a good, strong extract of coffee—by dripping it as slowly as possible—for ten people you will want two cupfuls; take eight of the same measures of milk, and beat into the milk yelk of six eggs; add three ounces of powdered sugar; mix into this the two cupfuls of coffee; as coffee differs in strength, better taste to see that is sweet enough; pour the mixture into cups, and put the cups in a not-too-deep pan with boiling water; the level of the water ought not to stand higher than the cup; do not try and boil the water too hard; about 15 minutes of boiling is necessary.

Sweet and Sour Cabbage.—My pickles gave out too early this winter, and I used this old receipt, which is Dutch, for an old woman gave it to me in Albany just forty years ago: Take a cabbage-head and cut it down into eight pieces and cover it with coarse salt, letting it remain in a jar twelve hours; take it out, squeeze it, and chop it fine with two onions; put it on the fire in a china-lined vessel, covering it with vinegar, and boil for a full hour; add to it then one ounce of turmeric (a teaspoonful of curry will do instead of turmeric), one teaspoonful of ground pepper, a teaspoonful of celery-seed, a tablespoonful of allspice, two tablespoonfuls of ground mustard, and half an ounce of white mace, with one and a half pounds of brown sugar; cook one hour more.

Odd Dinner Customs in Sweden.

The Swedes have a queer way of locomotion at their meals. They often flit about like flies, from one table to another, and sometimes seem to turn topsy-turvy when they order a repast. It is no rare thing to see them begin with cheese and biscuit, next proceed to ham and salad, with a slice of meat to follow, and then suddenly start up in the middle of their dinner to swallow, while they walk about, a plateful of pea soup. A habit which they have of beginning each repast with what they call a "smorgos," not merely leads to much untidiness at meal time, but makes them seem contented to live on bits and scraps. The smorgoes consist of little dishes, such as slices of smoked reindeer and caviere, and sardines, with pickles, cheese and other whets provocative of thirst. These are fished out with a fork of general utility, and laid on thumb pieces of rye cake, thickly smeared with butter, which serve by way of plate. Then they are bitten into, regardless of the fragments which may fall on other dainties (for your true smorgos eater seldom sits to his repast), and they are finally washed down with a glass or two of spirits which stand handy by their side. Such a prelude to a meal is not merely uncleanly, but must vitiate the palate, and injure the digestion. Indeed, I feel convinced that, were the smorgosbord abolished, not more would the cookery of Sweden soon improve, but very many of the people would be gradually weaned from their weakness for strong drink.—All the Year Round.

Cooked Alive.

There was a hog-killing in progress near Huntsville, Ala., and two colored men, Robert and Dennis Patrick, brothers, got into a dispute about each other's share in the year's crop. A long kettle filled with water was near by. The water in the kettle had been heated to such a degree that they were waiting for it to cool a little in order to scald hogs in it. The water was so hot that they were afraid it would "set" the hair of the hogs. This was the high temperature of the water when the brothers began to quarrel. Dennis, who was the oldest, told Robert that he would put him in the kettle if he didn't shut up, and Robert, the preacher brother, told Dennis that, if he put him, Robert, in that water, he, Dennis, would have to go with him. Dennis caught Robert and pressed him backward in the direction of the kettle. He pressed him, both of them having their arms locked meanwhile, until they both went headlong into the kettle of seething water. Their piteous, awful screams and moans soon attracted others to the place, who finally extricated them from the white-hot caldron. They retained their senses when first taken out, and their intense agonies were simply beyond description. They at once complained of their hot clothes, and, when these were taken from their limbs, great flakes of boiled flesh went with them, leaving their bones exposed. Their beards fell out and their hair dropped from their heads. They had literally been cooked alive. The sight was such that those who witnessed it were well-nigh paralyzed with horror. All possible measures of relief were tried during the night, but Robert died next day and Dennis on the day following.

A Drummer's Experience.

Mr. Brizendine, a Louisville traveling agent, was crossing a covered bridge that spans a small stream in North Alabama, one evening not long ago, when he was seized by the throat by a highwayman, while another held the horse he was riding. It was very dark in the bridge, and Brizendine could not see his assailants; but, being a powerful, well-built man, he struggled desperately with his would-be murderers, and, in the struggle, managed to draw a revolver from his pocket, which he used with telling and fatal effect on one robber, sending a No. 41 cartridge through his brain and killing him instantly. The other robber, a desperate fellow, then relinquished his hold upon the horse and attempted to wrench the revolver from Brizendine's hand. The struggle was desperate and the revolver fell from his hand and rolled away, and it was a hand-to-hand struggle. Both were powerful men, but the plucky drummer finally threw his antagonist, and, dealing him a few powerful blows, knocking him senseless, he left him and his companion lying prostrate on the bridge. The plucky drummer reached a neighboring village in a greatly exhausted condition. Informing the citizens of what had occurred, a large party started to the scene of the battle, and brought in the two robbers, one of whom was a corpse. They were tramps from Springfield, Ohio.

Curious Fight.

A novel battle was witnessed in a Pennsylvania barn-yard between a steer and a gander. The latter was swaggering through the yard when the steer thrust his horns at him, and battle was at once offered. For several minutes the fight was fierce and exciting, with all the odds on the side of the goose, who flapped his great wings in the face of his enemy and drove him back. Finally the gander was backed into a corner, where he could not use his weapons, when he was speedily conquered.

A Rural Romance.

Michael Kelley, or Mike Kelley as he was usually called, was an eccentric old farmer living in one of our suburban towns. Born of poor parents, by industry and perseverance he had become possessed of one of the finest farms in that section, of which he was justly proud; but no prouder was he than of his own physical strength and agility, that had assisted him in accumulating his property and made him a most excellent boxer and wrestler, and he had a corresponding contempt for men of inferior powers. One spring, when help was unusually plenty, he determined to have the farm run that year by a strong team. So, when a man presented himself and asked for work, after inquiring of the man as to his habits, etc., he would finish up by asking him to fight. In this way he disposed of quite a number of applicants, and was beginning to despair of getting his "strong team," when, one morning as he was standing in the barn door, a young man came up the road, and, seeing him, called out:

"Good morning, sir."

"Good morning," gruffly.

"Do you want to hire a hand to work on your farm, sir?"

"Perhaps so; want to hire out?"

"Yes, sir; I am looking for a job."

"What can you do?"

"All kinds of farm work, sir; I was born on a farm."

"Can you fight?"

"What, sir?"

"Can you fight, I say; can you lick me?"

"I don't know, sir, whether I can or not; but I can try."

And he did try. The first thing Kelley knew he was on his back on the floor, with two teeth down his throat; the next, the man was astride his stomach, with a fist in each eye, and his nose was bleeding. Then he let him up, and was just picking up his bundle to start off, when he was called back and set to work, and he proved to be as trusty and industrious as he was brave. The farmer's daughter needed just such a man for a husband, and now he may be seen any day superintending the work on the farm, while Father Kelley sits in the arm-chair and tells to his grandchildren the story of his last fight.—Concord (N. H.) Patriot.

Reasonable Economy.

We do not like stinginess. We do not like economy when it comes down to rags and starvation. We have no sympathy with the notion that the poor man should hitch himself to a post and stand still while the rest of the world moves forward. It is no man's duty to deny himself every amusement, every luxury, every recreation, every comfort, that he may get rich. It is no man's duty to make an iceberg, to shut his eyes and ears to the sufferings of his fellows, and deny himself the enjoyment that results from generous actions, merely that he may hoard wealth for his heirs to quarrel about. But there is an economy which is especially commendable in man who struggles with poverty—an economy which is consistent with happiness and which must be practised if the poor man would secure independence. It is almost every man's privilege, and it becomes his duty, to live within his means—not up to, but within them. Wealth does not make the man and should never be taken into account in our judgment of men, but competence should always be secured when it can by the practice of economy and self-denial to only a tolerable extent. It should be secured, not so much for others to look upon or to raise us in the estimation of others, as to secure to us the consciousness of independence and the constant satisfaction which is received from its acquirement and possession.

Not My Place.

A dispute having long existed in a gentleman's family between the maid and the coachman, about fetching the cream for breakfast, the gentleman one morning called them before him, that he might hear what they had to say, and decide accordingly. The maid pleaded that the coachman was lounging about the kitchen the greater part of the morning, and yet was so ill-natured that he would not fetch the cream for her, notwithstanding he saw she had so much to do as not to have a moment to spare. The coachman alleged that it was not his business.

"Very well," said the master, "but pray what do you call your business?"

"To take care of the horses, and clean and drive the coach," he replied.

"You say right," answered the master, "and I do not expect you to do more than I hired you for; but this I insist on, that every morning, before breakfast, you get the coach ready, and drive the maid to the farmer's for milk; and I hope you will allow that to be part of your business."

The coachman and the maiden soon after came to terms.

What Tobacco Is Made Of.

We have heard the tobacco-user claim that the weed was food and drink to him, but never thoroughly believed him until a British Parliamentary report on adulteration set forth the following schedule: "Sugar, alum, lime, flour or meal, rhubarb leaves, saltpeter, fuller's earth, starch, malt commings, chromate of lead, peat, moss, molasses, burdock leaves, common salt, endive leaves, lampblack, gum, red dye, a black dye composed of vegetable red and licorice, scraps of newspaper, cinnamon stick, cabbage leaves, and straw brown paper." This is convincing. Not only is it food and drink, but it is also house and land, paint-shop and literature, with drugs, condiments and chemicals thrown in ad libitum. Verily, tobacco is potent, but a little diffusive.—Boston Transcript.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

There are 16,000 locomotives in the United States.

Nebraska has an area of 75,995 miles, or 48,636,800 acres.

Mrs. A. T. Stewart pays a tax of only $500,000 of personal property. W. H. Vanderbilt pays none.

A county in Texas is said to have expended last year $3,000 for preaching, $100,000 for tobacco, and $300,000 for whisky.

Virginia has 675 colored schools, taught by 415 colored teachers. The male teacher's salary averages $30 a month, the female's $24.

The anthracite coal shipments from Pennsylvania mines for 1879 exceed 25,000,000 tons, against 16,486,000 tons last year, and 19,290,000 tons for 1877.

London measures about thirteen miles from east to west and nine miles and a half from north to south, and is set down as containing 30,000 miles of streets, courts and lanes.

Dakota is the largest of the organized Territories, containing about 150,000 square miles, or an area nearly equal to Pennsylvania, New York, and all the New England States combined.

In 1878 Nevada yielded in round numbers $35,000,000 in precious metal; California, $19,000,000; Utah, $6,000,000; Arizona, $2,300,000; Idaho, $2,000,000; British Columbia, $1,300,000; Oregon, $1,200,000; Washington, $100,000.

About 15,000 varieties of colors are employed by the mosaic workers of Rome, and each of these varieties has about fifty shades; so that in all 750,000 tints are afforded, which the artist can distinguish with the greatest facility. Even with this variety the workers find a lack of tints.

The colonial possessions of Great Britain embrace about one-third the surface of the globe, and nearly one-fourth of its population. The total area of these possessions is about 7,647,000 English square miles, of which 3,000,000 are in America, 1,000,000 in Africa, 1,000,000 in Asia, and more than 2,500,000 in Australia.

In Bavaria 13.42 out of every 100 births are illegitimate children; in Austria, 12.63; in Denmark, 10.39; in Scotland, 8.87; in Germany, 8.75; in France, 7.21; in Italy, 7.07; in England, 5.11; in Roumania, 3.43; in Ireland, 2.36; in Greece, 1.48. The excess in Bavaria and Austria is due to laws prohibiting marriage to those with a certain income.

In 1878 there were erected in Chicago 1,010 buildings, having a street frontage of 31,168 feet, and costing $7,419,100; in 1877 there were 1,398 buildings with a frontage of 35,033 feet, costing $7,552,694; in 1876, 1,586 buildings (including sheds) with a street frontage of 43,222 feet, and costing $8,270,600. The total for the past four years is: Number of buildings, 5,128; street frontage, 27 miles and 338 feet; cost, $29,987,949.

In Philadelphia there are 50,000 men and women employed in the manufacture of clothing, and 20,000,000 suits are made there every year. Cutting machines are finding their way into all the large manufacturing establishments. They cut 1,800 garments in a day of twelve hours. Button-holes are also made by machinery at the rate of 150 per hour. One establishment where these mechanical appliances are used can turn out 100 suits daily ready for wear inside of twelve hours.

Ireland has an area of 32,531 square miles. In shape it is a rhomboid, the greater diagonal of which is 300 miles and the smaller 210 across; greatest meridianal length, 230 miles; greatest and smallest breadth, 180 and 110 miles. Its population is now 5,412,377. The next census will be taken there in 1881. In 1821, when the first complete census was taken, the population amounted to 6,801,827; in 1831, to 7,767,401; in 1841, to 8,199,853. The great decrease from 1841 to 1851, amounting to about 1,600,000, was due to the intervening famine and the increasing emigration.

What a Doctor Claims.

A Pennsylvania doctor claims to have discovered a certain and safe cure for consumption, in the form of crude petroleum, administered in small quantities. He claims that, out of twenty-five cases of well-marked tubercolosis so treated, twenty are, to all means of diagnosis, cured; the rest have been materially benefited, and none have been under treatment more than four months. The nausea attending the use of ordinary crude petroleum led him to adopt the semi-solid oil that forms on the tubing of wells. This, made into from three to five-grain pills by incorporating an inert vegetable powder, was administered from three to five times a day in one-pill doses. The first effect, he says, is the disappearance of the cough; night-sweats are relieved, appetite improves, and weight is rapidly gained. These favorable symptoms continue until the patient is entirely recovered. If half the claims put forward by this disciple of Esculapius be well founded, he has indeed made a valuable scientific discovery.

Longevity of German Generals.

Prussian Generals seem to enjoy a rare longevity. Without reckoning Marshals Von Moltke and Von Roon there is found in the higher grades of the army a body of men who began their military careers three-quarters of a century ago. Gen. Von Schreibershofen, born in 1785, entered the service in 1797, and, after having risen through all the intermediate grades in the long wars which marked the beginning of this century, was created a Major General in 1829. On the 1st of November last he celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his elevation to that dignity. To-day, at the green old age of 95, this veteran displays an almost youthful vigor.

The hardest thing that a preacher has to deal with in his profession is that solemn and critical male member of his flock who possesses the notion that he, far more than the pastor, was cut out for the ministry.

Auburn Courier.
AUBURN, INDIANA, JAN. 29, 1880.
THEODORE REED; ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

Judge Gresham, of Indianapolis, has revoked the commission of two United States commissioners—John J. Hawes and Calvin F. Rooker, within the last few days.

This evening, the First Auxilary Liberal League, of Cincinnati, will give a free entertainment in honor of the one hundred and forty-third anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Payne.

A special to the New York Herald indicates that Grant will withdraw from the presidential contest, which will leave Blaine and Sherman in the lead for the republican nomination.

What do our brothers of the democrat press of northern and convenient portions of Indiana, say to a grand reunion, at Fort Wayne, sometime during the month of February?—Lagrange Democrat.

We say reune, on Friday of any week during the month named.

Were the Stover and McDonald cases so complicated as to require the assistance of Judge Best on the part of the state, or was it a scheme to injure the reputation of certain attorneys connected with the case? The future will probably reveal the intent.

Hendricks 40, Tilden, 1.

[illegible] relative strength [illegible] democratic and republican presidential candidates, as indicated by a paper circulated among the prominent business men and politicians of Auburn, last Tuesday, is as follows:

DEMOCRATS:		REPUBLICANS:
Hendricks	40	Blaine	28
Hancock	3	Sherman	7
Tilden	1	Grant	6
Nominee	2	No choice	2
No choice	1	Nominee	1

Mr. Tilden and Mr. Grant can stand aside, so far as the voters of this community are concerned.

The meeting of the Kelley state committee, held at Albany, New York, on the 21st inst., was attended by prominent anti-Tilden democrats from all parts of the state. It was the beginning of a movement for an anti-Tilden state convention and an anti-Tilden state delegation to the national democratic convention. The following resolutions were offered by David Dudley Fields and adopted:

Resolved, That, as known by the last election, the democratic party, if united, will be a majority in this state.

Resolved, That the democratic party in the state can only become united by avoiding the causes which led to the division in the last election.

Resolved, That we affirm the undoubted right of democrats to reject a nomination made by a party convention, of a candidate who is offensive to a considerable body of the party, but we see nothing in the past or present circumstances of the party in this state to prevent its uniting upon a candidate fairly nominated, who is acceptable to all sections of the party.

Resolved, That, under the circumstances, it is necessary that a convention of the democracy of the state should be convened to appoint delegates to the next national convention of the democratic party, and the executive committee of the state committee is directed to call such convention.

Do our Tilden worshipers in Indiana still think that gentleman can carry New York?

The supreme court of Maine has again decided against the fusionists, which will probably end the fight for the present. The Indianapolis Sentinel says:

"The supreme court of Maine is but a reflex of rascally radicalism throughout the broad land. To demonstrate that this supreme court is simply a batch of average radical rascals, gathered from anywhere where ballot-boxes are to be stuffed, or one state or thirty-eight states to be stolen, we give the decisions of this precious judicial party, once when the proposition was to count out democrats, and more recently the case which has commanded the attention of the country. Here they are in a nutshell, side by side:

1877.	1880.
WHEN DEMOCRATS WERE TO BE REJECTED.	WHEN REPUBLICANS WERE TO BE REJECTED.
It is to be regretted that votes are lost by the negligence of town officers, but the obvious remedy is to choose such as know their duty, and, knowing it, will perform it.	The representative is not to be deprived of his right because municipal officers have neglected their duty.
JOHN APPLETON, CHAS. W. WALTON, JOHN A. PETERS, ARTEMUS LIBBY, WM. G. BARROWS, WM. WIRT VIRGIN, J. G. DICKINSON	JOHN APPLETON, CHAS. W. WALTON, JOHN A. PETERS, ARTEMUS LIBBY, WM. G. BARROWS, CHAS. DANFORTH, JOS. W. SYMONDS.

According to Maine justice, it is law in 1876 to deprive democrats of their seats on account of the negligence of town officers to comply with its forms; but in 1880 it is not law to deprive republicans of their seats for precisely the same reason, though the statute governing elections is exactly the same in both cases. Could the infamy of republican politics in Maine have a more striking illustration?

Get Better Posted.

The correspondent in last week's COURIER, in reference to the school boys on our streets, cannot be a teacher, or he would know that once the pupils are outside of the school grounds the teacher has no control over them. The parents are the ones to refer to, for the young man or girl who is not taught manners at home cannot be expected to learn them upon the street.—Republican.

No, our correspondent is not a teacher—that is, not a school-teacher; but he is evidently qualified to teach the Republican managers considerable concerning the powers and duties of a teacher in the public schools of Indiana. In the absence of the correspondent, it is only necessary in order to expose the inexcusable and gross ignorance of the shining lights (?) whose brilliancy (?) is reflected through the columns of the Republican, that we refer to the following under the head of "The Teacher's Authority over Pupils Going to and Returning from School," to be found among the supreme court decisions, on page 84, of the school laws of Indiana, as amended March 15, 1877. The decision from which we make the extracts, was given by the supreme court of the state of Vermont, but is evidently considered authority by our state superintendent of public instruction, else he would not have cited it. The court says as follows:

"Though a schoolmaster has, in general, no right to punish a pupil for misconduct committed after the dismissal of school for the day, and the return of the pupil to his home, yet he may, on the pupil's return to school, punish him for any misbehavior, though committed out of school, which has a direct and immediate tendency to injure the school and to subvert the master's authority.

It is conceded that his right to punish extends to school laws, and there seems to be no reasonable doubt that the supervision and control of the master over the scholar extends from the time he leaves home to go to school till he returns home from school. Most parents would expect and desire that teachers should take care that their children, in going to and returning from school, should not loiter, or seek evil company, or frequent evil places of resort. * * * * When the child has returned home or to his parent's control, then the parent's authority is resumed and the control of the teacher ceases, and then for all ordinary acts of misbehavior the parent alone has the power to punish." * * * *

The following upon this subject is from an excellent French treatise upon education, by J. Willm, inspector of the academy at Strasburg, p. 176:

"The last question which presents itself is, how far teachers should pay attention to the conduct of the pupils out of school, and especially at the time when they resort to it or return home. The road leading to school is truly a part of it, if we may so speak, as well as the play-ground, consequently any disorders committed by the pupils on it ought to be suppressed by the teacher. He ought especially to watch over them at their play, for the sake of discipline as well as for that of education in general. Their games are, as has been said, of serious importance to him. The conduct of pupils, when under the parental roof, and everywhere but in school or on the road leading to it, escape all the means of discipline; but the teacher ought not to be indifferent to that conduct, especially in the country; he should carefully inquire concerning it for the sake of moral education. For the same reason he will have to watch over his own conduct out of school, and avoid whatever might tend to diminish that respect his pupils owe to him, and which is the chief condition of the success of his mission."

We do not wish to be understood as being personally favorable to the decisions given above, though they would undoubtedly be endorsed by the supreme court of Indiana, and are now regarded as authority by the state superintendent of public instruction, and parents, pupils and teachers may as well govern themselves accordingly, the information (?) of the Republican to the contrary, notwithstanding.

SCIENCE AND PROGRESS.

THE FIRST AMERICAN PATENT.—The first American patent for an invention was issued the Samuel Hopkins at New York, July 31, 1790, for an improved process of making potash and pearlash. Secretary Schurz made a recommendation to congress to purchase this patent for $500. The present possesor of the document is E. T. Hall, of Columbus, Ohio. It is written in a round, old-fashioned hand, signed by George Washington and certified by Ed Randolph, Attorney-General, as being conformable to the act of congress to promote the useful arts, and its delivery to the grantee is certified by Thomas Jefferson, with the seal of the United States.

HOW TO TEACH.—A writer in the new journal, The Practical American, says: The trouble in our public schools is that so many of its teachers are in reality not teachers, but merely disciplinarians and hearers of recitations. It is quite another thing to be a teacher able to call into play the perceptive and reflective faculties of the pupils, and to make them remember the things taught, because they comprehend them, than to confine the chief occupation to the memorizing of lessons from books combined with a restraint worse than a drill parade, and which when imposed upon children for five or six hours a day makes, in their opinion, the school a most detestable institution.

GREATEST HEIGHT OF BALLOON ASCENT.—Many people inquire how high a balloon can ascend. An aeronaut soon reaches a hight where the air is so rarified that it becomes unfit for respiration and most men would faint at a height of 22,000 feet. Gus Lupac in 1804 ascended at Paris to the height of 22,000, or about four miles, and to the permanent injury of his health. Later, in 1863, Glaisher, of London, ascended to a high of 29,000. He first became paralyzed, then unconscious, and would have died had not his assistant opened the gas valve and thus allowed the balloon to descend, when he recovered. This is the greatest height ever attained. The barometer recorded nine inches presure, or one-third of the normal presure of the atmosphere, and this appears to be the maximum that any man can endure.

HOW TO RESTORE DEFECTIVE SIGHT.—The following important statement is given in the Louisville Medical News, and will be found most valuable to those who are forced to use spectacles owing to weak sight caused by a flattening of the cornea, called presbyopia. He says that the use of sulphate of eserin possesses the power of acting especially on the ciliary muscle, and contracting it, which contraction increases the convexity of the cornea. He recommends dissolving one grain of the sulphate of eseria in 1 ounce of water, and putting one drop in each eye at bedtime. It produces at first the opposite defect, a too great convexity of the cornea, which is called myopy, or near-sightedness, which, however soon passes away. He further says he thinks the use of this remedy perfectly safe, and also adapted in cases of glaucoma and other inflammations of the eye, in cases of weakness resulting from overwork, general debility, dipthera, &c. We give this remedy and our authority, but advise caution in using it, because as the effects can only be temporary, a continous use is of course necessary, and experience has yet to prove what secondary effects may result from often-repeated applications.

WAS ADAM BORN IN PERU? Dr. Rudolf Folb, whose linguistic researches in South America are well known, in which he states that the language spoken by the Indians in Peru and Bolivia, especially in Quechua and Aymara, exhibit the most astounding affinities with the Semitic language, and particularly with the Arabic, in which tongue Dr. Folb has been skilled from boyhood. Following up the lines of this discovery Dr. Folb has found, first, a connecting link with the Aryan roots; and, second, revelation that "the Semitic roots are universally Aryan." The common stems of all the variants are found in their purest condition in Quichua and Aymara, from which fact Dr. Folb derives the conclusion that the high planes of Peru and Bolivia must be regarded as the point of exit of the present race.

WHAT A MAN CAN CARRY AND PULL.—Some interesting results have been published respecting the greatest load a man can carry. The maximum load for a moderate distance was found to be 310 pound, but for along distance a soldier marching on level ground could not cary more than 132 pounds distributed over his body. If he carries this seven or eight miles for a day, it is equivalent to a good day's work. This is equivalent to 1,518 pounds carried a distance of 3,200 feet. But if he ascend a ladder, like a hod-carrier, he can only carry 120 pounds continually, and in a day will only carry 1,230 pounds 3,200 feet high. As to pulling, under the most favorable circumstances and for continous work, an effort can not be gained exceeding from 26.4 to 33 pounds raised from one-eighth to one-half feet per second, which is equivalent to about 4,000 foot pounds raised one foot, 4,000 foot pounds, or one-eight of horse power.

He Got Something Frisky.

[Baltimore Bulletin.]

"Got something frisky?" he asked, as he walked into a livery-stable and called for a saddle-horse; "something that will prance about lively and wake a fellow out of his lethargy? I used to ride the trick mule in a circus, and I reckon I can back anything that wears hair." They brought him out a calico-colored beast with a vicious eye, and he mounted it and dashed off. Before he had gone two blocks the animal bucked, crashed through a high board fence and plunged into a cellar, tossing his rider over the top of an adjacent wood-shed, and landing him on the ragged edge of a lawn-mower. They bore him home, straightened him out, and three surgeons came in and reduced his dislocations and plastered him up with raw beef. In a few weeks he called at the stable, and said if they had a gentle saw-horse with an effectionate disposition, a bridle with a curb-bit and martingales, and a saddle with two horns and crupper to it, he believed he would go up in the hay-mow and gallop around a little where it was soft and it wouldn't hurt him if he went asleep and fell off, as he did the other day.

Bass-Drum for a Sick Man.

[Boston Commercial Bulletin.]

"Toward the latter part of the war," said the colonel, "bands became rather scarce in the Confederate service and we were rarely regaled with the strains of martial music unless it was from the Federal forces. On the retreat from Sharpsburg, during a brief halt, the weary soldiers, as was their custom, flung themselves down on either side of the road for what rest they could get. Just at this juncture came trudging down the center of the road a solitary musician with a big bass-drum. His appearence excited the liveliest emotions among the boys, which finally found vent through a tall, tallow-faced North Carolinian, bringing his piece to the ready, halted the astonished musician, at the same time brawling out: 'Say, mister, can't you come down here a piece an' play something kinder soothing on that air thing—for a sick man?"

A Married Woman's Trials.

[Stockton Herald.]

A lady living in the southern part of the city was sitting up about 11 o'clock a few evenings ago, waiting for her husband to come home. The lamp was in her bed-room and she was in the parlor. Hearing a noise outside of the door-yard fence, as if a man who was drunk was trying to find the gate, she went out, and shure enough a drunken man was there. She helped him into the parlor, as she had been used to doing, and placed him carefully on the lounge. After a hard struggle she got his coat and vest off and then came to his feet. She pulled at least five minutes at his boots (as she thought they were), to get them off, but they would not come. At length she felt up about his ankles and found that the man had shoes on—something that her husband never wore. Striking a light she dicovered that she had a tramp on the lounge who was drunk through and through. What followed can easily be imagined.

—The motion for a new trial in the Dyer case, at Albion, will be argued next Monday.

—John Gross and family have returned from Ohio. John has not improved any in health.

—Dave Hampton is back from his visit to Richmond, and says he had a "slashin' good time."

—Wm. Clayton, a former resident of Leo, Allen county, was buried in the Auburn cemetery yesterday.

—Conductor Misner, of the Wabash, was in town Sunday, visiting with our townsman Mr. T. J. Cuppy.

—Geo. Grund is on the sick list. He has about four inches of sore throat and carries his neck in a sling.

—The weather is somewhat colder this morning and the indications are that it will continue for a while at least.

—The question that still harasses the public bosom in this community is: Who stole Penfield & Emanuel's coal?

—Ike and Johnnie Jones, Luther Roth and several other b'hoys will start for the far west the first of next month.

—As shown by the marriage record, the boys and girls have "caught on" with a vim this month. Nothing like it.

—The Kendallville Standard office is for sale. It will sail as soon as the fellow comes along who can raise the wind.

—Last week's Kendallville Standard makes the startling announcement to its readers that "The weather still continues."

—J. A. Porter will erect a frame business room, in the spring, on the lot where Tom Cool's meat market now stands.

—We are informed by one who ought to know, that railroad business in Garrett will be very lively during the coming season.

—Mrs. Minnie Kline, daughter of L. D. Britton, who has been clerking at Willis' book store, has returned to her home at Corunna.

—A buggy-load of hoodlums from Garrett made more noise in town Monday than would be expected from a cage of Bengal tigers.

—Sherm. Hollister got shamefully caned last Saturday evening, at his restaurant. See particulars of the outrage in another column.

—Mr. T. C. Mays, who has been nursing a very sore face, will be able to resume his duties on the Toledo Commercial in a short time.

—Judge Borden's charge to the jury, in the Stover case, occupied thirty-five minutes, and was favorably commented upon by the attorneys generally.

—The court-room, during the entire week's trial of George Stover, has been crowded with interested people, nearly one-third of whom were ladies.

—Mrs. J. A. White, of Mendota, Ill., and Mrs. Mary Cartright, of Fort Wayne, are visiting in town, the guests of Mrs. J. A. McKay and daughter.

—Miss Mary Pitcher anticipated a trip to Angola, last Saturday, but business cares and anxieties prevented. She will go in the sweet after a while.

—Cook Ford is fully established in the livery business at Waterloo, and is now ready for the boys to commence taking the damsels out for an airing.

—Messrs. Willis & Co's new store, next to the Physicians' drug store, is now running under a full head of steam and presents an attractive appearance.

—While Mr. Eckhart is using his utmost endeavors to build up a trade that will eventually be a great benefit to the town, our citizens should help in the construction of the proposed sidewalk.

—There are only nine separate items concerning "the mud" in last week's Hicksville News. Local matter must have been beautifully "skeerce" around Hicksville, or else Tom's head was badly mud-died.

—The days are getting longer now, in a marked degree. There are probably about the same number of hours in each day, but what we mean is that there is much more daylight now than there used to was.

—The testimony of Peter Helwig, given in the Stover trial, has a tendency to injure, rather than advance the interests of certain officials who are candidates for re-election. Who is entitled to the $100 reward.

—Judge John Morris, of the law firm of Coombs, Morris & Bell, Fort Wayne, was in town a few hours Monday. Judge Morris is well known in this region, having been a resident of this place a number of years ago.

—Samuel Sloan, of New York, has been elected president of the Fort Wayne and Jackson railroad, with R. G. Ralston, of the same place, secretary. The "Saginaw" part of the road's name has been eliminated.

—Mr. L. D. Britton and Mr. T. F. Jordan, of Richland township, both carpet-baggers (according to Baxter) from Holmes county, Ohio, called to see us Tuesday last. We are always glad to meet such staunch democrats.

—The death of Elmer Bradley, the man who was run over by an Eel-River train last Saturday morning, an account of which appears elsewhere, was a tragic one indeed, and furnishes another sad lesson to those who will stop to think.

—M. Cicero Emanuel, Esquire, of Spencerville, occupied a prominent seat at the reportorial desk, Monday evening, while the jury was receiving its instructions, and the result of his labors will doubtless appear in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

—There appears to be some difficulty in school No. 11, Richland township, caused by reckless rifle practice by one of the scholars, thereby endangering the lives of some of the pupils. If reports are true, the matter needs looking after by the school officers.

—Somebody, about a week ago, imbued with the idea that Valentine's day came a month earlier this year, sent a highly engraved mule cut to Dan. Hickey, of the Jackson road,—and Dan. was hot. So was the mule, for it was immediately consigned to the stove in the baggage-car.

—The social of the Young Ladies' Christian Temperance Union, announced for to-morrow evening, has been postponed one day; it will take place, therefore, Saturday evening next, and will be entertained by Miss Sadie Hollister. An invitation is extended to all who are interested.

—In view of the fact that the roads will soon be in a passable condition, we shall expect our "wood subscribers" to come to time according to contract. We cannot use the wood in July, but want it now; and if it doesn't come in soon, there will be hoopin' and whalin' and snatchin' of teeth.

—A certain person whom we might mention, has in their possession, or did have last week, a glove buttoner with chain and charm attached, which belongs to Mr. Joe Abright, and the sooner the article is returned to Abright's jewelry store the better it will be for all parties. Joe was not asleep when it was taken.

—The pleasant features of our young friend, Rob. McClellan, will be seen in its old haunts no more for the present. Rob. left yesterday afternoon for Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, where he will stand behind the counter in a grocery store. We join his numerous friends in hoping he may get home-sick soon and come back to Auburn.

—Harry C. Bennett, for some time past a faithful and attentive clerk at the Central hotel, expects to take his departure next week for Bryan, Ohio, where he has accepted a similar position in the Fountain City hotel of that place. He is certainly well adapted to the hotel business, and will be missed at the Central.

—Occasionally, amongst our advertising customers, we run across a man who gets his back up on account of some trifling personal feeling (which in nine cases out of ten he has no grounds for) and orders his little 3-inch ad. out of the paper, happy in the firm belief that the paper will cease to flourish and that the office must suspend business at once.

—Tommy Starr, of the Hicksville News, copies our article headed a "Debased Wretch," relative to the dastardly trick a thing played upon a young girl of that vicinity recently, and says: "We will only add that the villain alluded to hails from DeKalb county." We did not state where he hailed from, and don't care; he is a dirty scoundrel, all the same, and ought to be skinned alive.

—Rev. H. Johnson last Sunday started for Waterloo by rail from the Wabash depot, but when near the Jackson depot his engine "slipped her eccentrics" and he was obliged to push it back on foot. The machine was the one used by Mr. Bell, roadmaster of the Wabash railway, and Mr. Johnson thinks it is a stupendous failure.

—Willis & Co. have moved their large stock of books, stationery, news, notions, etc., into the room in the McIntyre block, formerly occupied by H. H. Stamets, where they will be pleased to see all their old patrons and as many new ones as may wish anything in their line. Come one and all, and we will make it to your interest to come gain. 3-4t.

—One uneasy individual at the court-room, Monday evening, who bore a striking resemblance to Darwin's missing link between a man and a monkey, created considerable amusement for some of the girls. He got down on his knees twice, in the attitude of prayer, and at the second rising some irreverent individual added to the ludicrousness of the scene by remarking "Amen."

—F. E. Davenport returned from Chicago Tuesday, where he went to perfect some arrangements relative to the manufacture of his capsule filler. He has given the right of sale to Messrs Park, Davis & Co., of Detroit, and has realized quite a speck in the transaction. Now if he can only invent some process by which a man can swallow raw quinine without thinking he has committed suicide, the world will be indebted to him and Frank's fortune will be assured.

—The prisoner, McDonald, who is now on trial in the circuit court, is evidently determined to escape if possible. After he was taken into court yesterday morning, Sheriff Leas concluded to search the prisoners cell as he had done frequently before. During the examination the sheriff found secreted in the prisoner's bed a dangerous weapon in the form of a slung-shot which the prisoner had made by plaiting strings torn from the edge of a towel, to the end of which was attached a cast iron washer about three inches in diameter and three-fourths of an inch thick, the same having been taken from the end of an iron rod projecting through the stone which forms one side of the cell. The discovery was a fortunate one, as the prisoner would no doubt have watched his opportunity to use the weapon on the sheriff or his deputy.

A FRIGHTFUL DEATH.

Ushered into Eternity Without Warning.

The announcement on our streets, last Saturday morning, that a man had been run over and instantly killed by a train on the Eel-River division of the Wabash railway, down near the depot, produced more excitement than our town has known for many a day, and at an early hour Main street was alive with people hurrying to the scene of the accident. As a matter of course, a Courier representative was amongst the number, who, upon reaching the depot, witnessed a more ghastly spectacle than he ever cares to see again. Stretched at full length upon a board in the freight room, stark naked, his body being prepared for the burial clothes and coffin, lay all that was left of Elmer Bradley, and a sickening sight it was. His left arm was cut off diagonally at the muscles near the shoulder and his hip on the same side was gashed and lacerated to the bone, while on the right side the leg was nearly severed from the body by a horrible gash which penetrated the intestines and exposed them to view. His face on the same side was literally raw, the skin being peeled off and hanging over on his neck, and a hole near the temple, about two inches in diameter, revealed the interior of the skull. Such was the appearance of the unfortunate man's body while being prepared to send home.

The accident occurred near Ensley's brick house on the avenue, or about one-third of the way from the Eel-River depot to the junction, and it is necessarily a matter of surmise as to the exact circumstances of the man's getting there; but it is generally conceded that he was on his way to the junction, where he expected to take the 4 o'clock train home on the Baltimore & Ohio road, and being highly intoxicated, as he had been all day Friday, he fell on the track and lay there regardless of consequences. However this may be, he was there, and freight train No. 36 going east and due here at 12:57 came thundering along, down grade, and hurled him in his sad condition into eternity, without an instant's warning.

Elmer Bradley was about 30 years of age and resided at Concord, this county, a little place about 7 miles east of here and 3 miles west of St. Joe, where he leaves a young widow and one child about eight years old. His wife's maiden name was Louise Johnson, she being the youngest of a family of eight daughters, all of whom are married and living in that vicinity. Many of our people here, though strangers to her, are in deepest sympathy with her, though it was remarked in the writer's hearing, by one of the deceased's relatives, that it is better for her and her little boy as it is.

Married.—At the residence of Jacob Walborn, Esq., Monday, January 26th, 1880, Mr. Geo Hanmer and Sarah Gilbert, daughter of Mr. Richard Burlaston, formerly a resident of this place.

STOVER STUCK.

Ten Years Near Lake Michigan.

The trial of George Stover, which consumed all last week and one day of this, and which has furnished food for sensation seekers, wound up last Monday evening. Judge Borden read his charge to the jury at 7 o'clock p. m., occupying thirty-five minutes, when the jury retired. At about 10 o'clock the court-house bell rang, indicating that the jury had agreed, and there was a general rush from all quarters of the town. Immediately after the entry of the prisoner, who maintained the same coolness and disinterestedness which has characterized him throughout the trial, the verdict of the jury was handed to the judge, who read in substance as follows: "We, the jury, find the prisoner guilty, as charged in the indictment, and affix the punishment at ten years in the penitentiary, at hard labor, and assess a fine of five dollars." The prisoner was apparently unmoved by the verdict, as he doubtless anticipated as much, or more.

Alexander McDonald, Stover's supposed accomplice, is now going thro' the mill, and his fate will probably be sealed by to-morrow. Since the publication of the testimony in these cases would have completely crowded out other matter of equal importance, we concluded at the outset not to undertake it. We have endeavored, however, to keep the main points before our readers.

Caned by a Mob.

One year ago last Saturday, January 25, a number of our citizens were invited by Sherman Hollister, of restaurant fame, to participate in the celebration of his birth-day anniversary, and they had a festive time in the fullest sense of the word. In commemoration of that event and the recurring anniversary of Sherm's birthday,—which was his 46th,—the same party met at the restaurant last Saturday evening, with the single exception of M. Seller, who was unavoidably absent, and organized the "Hollister Birthday Anniversary Club" which will hereafter meet annually at the same time and place, until every member shall have passed away.

The club numbers twenty-one persons, whose total weight is 3,176 pounds, and consists of the following folks: Dr. J. H. Ford, Jno. L. Davis, Dr. T. G. Matheny, S. U. Tarney, Jno. Robbins, T. C. Mays, R. McDougal, M. Houston, J. H. Henry, Albert Robbins, F. D. Ryan, R. Elson, F. E. Davenport, Mr. and Mrs. Hollister, Miss Sadie Hollister, Miss Zelpha McBride, M. Seller, Rev. H. J. Norris, James Potter and James Gilliland.

It will at once be surmised that, with such a crowd assembled, there was some fun; but the funniest and happiest part must be enlarged upon. In the midst of the frolic, and quite unexpectedly, Dr. J. H. Ford stepped out on the floor and, with a neat little speech, proceeded to administer a caning to the host, the weapon used being a handsome, twenty-five-dollar, gold headed cane, bearing the inscription: "Presented to Sherman Hollister by H. B. A Club, Jan. 25, 1880." Sherm. says that for a moment or two he was never quite so completely befuddled, but others say that he bore up under the hammering like a little man, and the festivities continued until about 11 o'clock, when the club adjourned for one year. May they all be alive and kicking when that day rolls around again.

Eckhart Carriage Works.

Having learned that the new addition to the Eckhart Carriage Works was about completed and ready for occupancy, and having some curiosity to see the beginning of an enterprise to which, in future years, the citizens of Auburn can point with pride, we plunged into the mud with our eyes "sot" on the object of our curiosity. After wading through slush, jumping swalls and climbing fences, we arrived at the works and were met by Mr. Eckhart, the gentlemanly proprietor, who showed us through the several shops and explained the character and amount of work that will be turned out when the institution gets under full headway. The old buildings are used for blacksmith shop, the woodwork shop and the trimming room. The new building is 32x60 feet, the lower story of which is intended for a wareroom for finished work; on the second story we found a large and commodious paint shop and a neatly finished varnish room. Above the paint shop is a large attic with an outside entrance where a large amount of lumber can be stowed away to dry. Besides the buildings mentioned, Mr. Eckhart has a barn full of lumber and material for use during the coming season. In each of the shops we found several first-class mechanics just commencing on the first lot of ten fine top buggies, to be followed by another lot of the same number, so that by the time the spring trade opens, the wareroom will be filled with as fine a lot of buggies and carriages as can be found in any market. Mr. Eckhart has started out to build up a permanent trade in first-class work, and will use none but extra-stock, to be manufactured by experienced workmen. He expects to turn out 100 new jobs during the coming summer that will be a credit to himself as well as the town. He has the nerve and energy to accomplish his undertaking, and deserves the good will and encouragement of all our public spirited citizens. Success to the Eckhart Carriage Works; may the time come when they will rank with the best in the country.

The New Atlas.

We are informed by the publishers of the forthcoming atlas of DeKalb county, that the remainder of the work necessary to the publication will soon be completed. A short time will be given, however, to add a few illustrations of some of the best buildings and residences in the county. Messrs. Beer & Co. will insert a fine view of the court-house and jail, gratis. Their artist is now at work completing a sketch of the same. There are also numerous other orders which have been given for sketches, and some of them have already been finished.

We hope to see our work handsomely illustrated with portraits and residences of our principal men. We are sure that DeKalb county has all the essentials for so illustrating it. As there will probably be no other atlas of this county published for many years, it is desirable that this one shall be a work to represent fully the leading citizens and interests of the county; and we are sure that our representative, enterprising men will take such an interest in the matter as will make it a complete success.

Coroner's Inquest.

I, the undersigned coroner of DeKalb county, state of Indiana, on the 24th day of January, 1880, in Union township, in said county, being legally authorized to enquire and true presentment make in what manner and by whom Elmer Bradley, whose body was found dead on the railroad track between Auburn junction and Auburn depot of the Butler and Logansport division of the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific railroad, on the 24th of January, 1880, after having heard the evidence and examined the body, do find that the deceased came to his death by being run against and carried some 20 or 30 rods on said railroad track by engine No. 210 with train No. 36 east bound, belonging to said company, and that the deceased was lying on said railroad track in a state of intoxication. Given under my hand and seal this 24th day of January, 1880.

J. J. Latson, Coroner.

—Joshua Miller is about to give up hauling wood to Garrett. He says the roads are getting bad.

—The schools are all in a flourishing condition, but they are too short, only an eleven weeks term.

—The "educational association" at Cedar Creek, notwithstanding the bad roads, has been a success.

—We were informed that J. W. Ammond and Charley Bizzle had a little altercation in Jones' saw mill last week. We have not heard the particulars, only that Charley let John have one right in the face.

—Cedar Creek had a temperance meeting last Friday evening, the first thing of the kind ever in that place. Four signed the pledge. We hope a great reformation will take place as it is greatly needed there. The speaking was good, especially the advice to young ladies, which created considerable amusement.

—The so-called sanctified and the non-sanctified christians have gotten into quite a tangle. Because a certain minister does not preach "second blessing," but preached that, in his opinion, the Bible does not teach such a doctrine some of "Christ's little ones" have become so envious toward him, that they have determined not to go to hear him any more. Beautiful encouragement for sinners when those who claim to be christians, try to injure one an other. O, ye "saints," "let your light so shine before the world that the people may see your good works." O. K.

UNDER THE STARS.

BY CLEMATIS.

Oh! waters of March that ceaseless flow,
Oh! human hearts with their tides of woe;
Over rivers of grief, of pain and tears,
That the stars look on through the passing years;
Oh! the torrents of sin that hopeless flow,
The bitter blasts that o'er human lives blow;
Oh! the cruel faces behind prison bars,
That mockingly stare at the beautiful stars;
Oh! the misery and sin under the stars,
The beautiful stars.

See the pale mother as she kneels by her bed,
And the stars cast a halo o'er her silvered head,
Praying for a dear one in anguish of heart,
Who never has chosen the better part;
Who long ago wandered far from his home,
And left his poor mother alone, all so lone,
Under the stars, the pitying stars.

And the wan mourner as he bends o'er the bier,
And drops a bitter and anguished tear;
Only one year ago she stood by his side,
And the sun ne'er shone on a lovelier bride;
Now the stars shine on a still, white face,
Waxen hands folded with a silent grace;
Fled from him now all joy and mirth,—
All his hopes buried in the silent earth—
Under the stars, the sorrowing stars.

Here stoops a miser, sallow and grim,
O'er his battered coffers filled to the brim;
Not a joy for him does the whole earth hold
But to count in the starlight his yellow gold;
Nothing to him the want and woe
That the stars look on as they onward go,
Only lives to worship his yellow gold
Till he sleeps alone in the silent mold
Under the stars, the golden stars.

Here a gaunt prisoner, hands stained with blood;
Memories pour o'er him in a bitter flood—
Memories of childhood and a stainless youth,
Of a mother who taught him the ways of truth.
Now he shiveringly lists to the clank of his chains,
And wonders can he e'er wash from his hands the stains:
And he hopelessly stares through the rusty bars
At the ceaseless march of the beautiful stars.

Yonder a Magdalen in the dim starlight
Wonders in sin through the darkness of night;
Here a wanderer, steeped in sin to the lips,
Though he loathes the cup that he eagerly sips;
Mothers with children crying for bread;
Mothers watching o'er their silent dead.
Ah! the anguish and woe of the human heart,
The misery and sin that's of life a part
Under the stars, the pitiless stars.

Mother and mourner shall their loved ones meet?
Miser and wanderer will He in mercy greet?
Magdalen and prisoner will He wash in His blood?
Bid them be clean ere they cross the dark flood?
Shall they be found without blemish or stain?
Shall they sing the sweet anthems where He joyfully reigns,
Above the stars, the paling stars?

APPLETON, Wis.

THE CREOLE.

BY AN OLD SALT.

In 1820, the waters in the vicinity of the West India islands swarmed with fierce, ruthless pirates, respecting neither sex or the flag of any country. Many a rich merchantman suddenly disappeared, without a trace remaining to tell either the fate of crew or vessel.

In the height of the excitement, when merchantmen were forced to carry both guns and extra men, the Navy Department fitted out the corvette Port Fire, peculiarly adapted, from her great speed and light draught of water, to cruise successfully in the shoal waters of the West India station. The vessel was commanded by Ralph Jenkins, whose hair had grown gray in the service of his country, while his First Lieutenant and executive officer was a Georgian, Jack Hayes by name.

It was toward the close of a long sunny day in March that the lookout on the foretopsail yard reported, "Sail O!"

"Where away?" demanded the officer of the deck.

"Right ahead, sir!"

"Can you make her out?"

"I can't say exactly, sir; but she looks like a brig."

All hands were called to make sail, and, clothed in folds of snow-white canvas, the Port Fire rapidly neared the stranger.

The wind was rapidly dying out, blowing in fitful gusts and flaws from off the land, then from a point right ahead, and finally boxing all around the compass. At last a dead calm rested on the water with the exception of a few spirts of air aloft, which occasionally filled the light sails of the corvette, forging her ahead, and gradually lessening the distance intervening between the man-of-war and the stranger.

It was 4 bells, or 10 o'clock at night, before the corvette was close enough to scan the vessel. It was a brig, lying like a log in the water, bowing and dipping her bluff bows into the long, easy swell of the tropics. The large square stern and low, flat counter pronounced her at once a sugar drogher.

"She has the look of a Frenchman, Mr. Hayes," remarked the commander, as he scanned her closely through his night-glass. "I see a flutter of feminine apparel, too. She must have passengers. Better hail her, sir; she may have something to communicate."

"Brig ahoy!" demanded Mr. Hayes through his trumpet.

"Sar!"

"What brig is that?"

"Ze Marie Antoinette, du Havana, to Bordeaux," came hoarsely back.

"This is the United States corvette Port Fire on a cruise. Have you seen any suspicious vessels since you left port?"

After a moment's hesitation, a voice replied:

"I am the only person on board who can speak English. We have seen no vessels of any kind, with the exception of one this afternoon, and that was away under the land; could not make her out, but thought it was a schooner."

By direction of the Captain, Jack informed the speaker that the Port Fire would remain in her vicinity until she gained an offing, as the locality was anything but safe for a vessel of her class.

A smart little breeze had sprung up, and with royals and top-gallant sails down on the caps, courses hauled up and staysails stowed, the corvette edged off to windward, running a parallel course to the brig, which lumbered along, creaking and groaning in every timber.

The moon was sinking to rest in the west, obscured every few moments by light, fleecy clouds that moved slowly across its disc, impelled by the trade-wind, and, as the corvette's bell announced the hour of midnight, the final ray of the luminous orb danced and shimmered across the bright, bubbling waters, and disappeared beneath the horizon. The stars and planets twinkled and flickered above, reflected in myriad numbers by the bright water below.

Unable to court slumber, Jack Hayes sought the quarter-deck, where the officer of the watch was slowly pacing to and fro.

"Where is the brig, Mr. Lorner?"

"Down to leeward, sir, and some distance astern."

"Ah, yes. I think I can make her out. But—hark! Surely that was the report of a pistol. There it is again—and screams, as true as we are afloat. Keep her off, sir. Call all hands to make sail and I'll report to Capt. Jenkins. There is some rascally business going on aboard of that brig which we must have a nearer look at."

In obedience to the summons of the boatswain's mate, the crew rapidly gained their stations, and in five minutes the Port Fire, under a cloud of canvas, was again heading for the brig. The battery had been cut loose, the crew peeping forth through the open ports as they rapidly neared the stranger.

In a loud voice Capt. Jenkins hailed to know what was the cause of the alarm.

"Nothing at all," was the ready response. "The crew were mutinous, and I fired my pistols over their heads."

"Rather strange, that, Mr. Hayes—eh?"

"Yes, sir; and that voice does not sound like the one who hailed me the first part of the evening, saying he was the only one who could speak English."

"You are right, sir. Call away the first cutter. We'll take a look at him, anyway."

Scarcely had the falls of the boat been cast loose when a voice, muffled and compressed, was heard:

"We are boarded by pirates," followed by a heavy thud and a low groan.

In an instant the armed boat's crew, headed by a senior Lieutenant, had leaped over the side, the oars struck the water with a simultaneous splash, as the excited seamen exerted themselves to the utmost to dash alongside the brig.

In the meanwhile the Port Fire had slowly forged ahead of the brig, her maintopsail to the mast, shivering and shaking as she came up and fell off from the wind. About three cables' length to the leeward of the brig was the low hull, and bare, rakish masts of a schooner.

The quick eyes of Jack Hayes detected her in a moment, and his orders came sharp and clear from the quarter-deck.

"Clear away the starboard battery! Load with grape! Sail-trimmers, to your stations! Fill away the main-yard!"

As the corvette gathered headway and moved through the water he gave the order:

"Load your guns, take good aim, fire!"

The flash of the guns lit up the water with a momentary glare, followed by the groans and imprecations of wounded men. Again came the orders from the quarter-deck:

"Load! Solid shot—run out one point abaft the beam—fire!"

Again did the streams of fire burst from the side of the corvette. The smoke of the guns hung over the water, so that it was impossible to ascertain the execution done by the iron missiles, but the crash of timbers and a cloud of splinters that fell pattering in the water assured the crew of the corvette that they had not expended their ammunition in vain.

Before another castigation could be administered, however, the pirates had got their craft in splendid trim, and with every stitch of canvas set taut as a board, with sheets hauled flat aft, were dancing up to windward with the speed of a shark in pursuit of prey.

At that moment the first cutter returned, the officer in charge hurriedly making his way to the quarter-deck, where he was met by Capt. Jenkins.

"The brig has been boarded by pirates, taking the half-sleepy watch entirely by surprise. The Captain and mate offered a slight resistance, but were immediately overcome and murdered. There is an English gentleman on board with his daughter. He is a planter, I believe. He it was who, bound and half choked, said there were pirates on board, and received a terrible blow on the head for his temerity. The pirate Captain has made good his escape to the schooner, taking with him the young daughter of the unfortunate gentleman. There are several on board who require the services of a surgeon."

The surgeon, with a full supply of medical comforts, was soon dispatched for the brig, while the corvette, with every stitch of canvas set that would draw, was soon in full pursuit of the piratical craft, which was scarcely beyond range of the bow-chasers.

The breeze continued to freshen, and it was soon proved conclusively that the schooner was no match for the well-trimmed man-of-war.

"Try the effect of our forward guns, Mr. Hayes. Let the Captains of the battery aim high. On no account hull her for we might injure the lady. Cripple his spars, and we'll soon be alongside."

Carefully the gunners trained their pieces, and soon huge rents in the canvas could be seen. A shower of splinters from the mainmast soon followed, and a moment after the lofty spar toppled over the side.

The schooner lay a helpless wreck on the water, while the frowning battery of the corvette stared the blood-stained rascals in the face.

With a desperate courage, worthy of a better cause, the pirates worked with desperation to clear away the wreck, which prevented them from working their guns. But as the boats of the Port Fire dashed alongside they manned the low bulwarks, cutting and hewing at the blue-shirted seamen, knowing full well that they were fighting with halters about their necks.

Every inch of the deck was disputed, and it was not without some slain and a few desperate wounds that the crew of the corvette gained a foothold.

The man-of-war could easily have blown the pirate out of water as she lay at her mercy, rolling to and fro under the heavy guns of the corvette, but with the lady on board such decided action was impossible.

The leader of the gang was a huge, burly fellow, who wielded his cutlass with skill and deadly effect. Seaman after seaman went down before him as he fought like a tiger at bay.

With a clash the cutlass of the desperate scoundrel crossed with the blade wielded by Jack Hayes, who had attempted in vain to engage the rascal. Suddenly, before a cut could be made by either party, the pirate staggered, his cutlass spun through the air, while he, groping wildly with his hands, fell prostrate on the deck. A random ball had pierced his heart, and with his fall the gang lost courage, threw down their arms, and sullenly allowed themselves to be ironed and transferred to the Port Fire.

Entering the cabin, Jack beheld the form of a female stretched on the transom, half concealed by the flowing drapery of a curtain. Attired in a loose but well-fitting dress of white, which was confined at her waist by a broad blue sash; her hair black and luxuriant, falling around her waist, the bright olive complexion, small hands, exquisitely-turned ankle, and the tiny foot which peeped from beneath the folds of her dress proclaimed her at once to be a native of Jamaica, better known, perhaps, as an English Creole.

She had fainted from excess of terror, the terrible uncertainty of her position, together with the noise and excitement of the engagement, proving too much for her.

Before the Lieutenant, somewhat perplexed at the situation, could take measures to bring the maiden to herself a carpenter's mate hastily entered the cabin, reporting the prize as rapidly sinking. The pirates had scuttled her, determined that she should not fall into the hands of the victorious man-of-war's men.

Hastily taking the insensible girl in his arms, Jack hastened from the sinking wreck, regained the corvette, depositing the burden on the cushioned transom of Capt. Jenkins' cabin, where every attention was devoted to her.

Soon her eyes opened, only to close again with a shudder, while a sigh escaped from her lips. Gradually she recovered her full powers of animation, and gazed wildly about her.

In a soft, low, soothing tone the old commander soon calmed her fears, allayed the feverish excitement and assured her of her [illegible] nothing to fear; all danger had vanished; the last vestige of the bloody craft had sunk beneath the waves, and, as daylight in flaming colors tinged the eastern horizon, the corvette was standing for the brig with all sail set.

Rose Foster's first inquiry was for the welfare and safety of her dear father. They had left their valuable plantation to indulge in a little pleasure excursion, traveling through France, which had been the native country of her mother, whom she had lost in early childhood.

As the corvette rapidly neared the brig, the planter's daughter could scarcely control her impatience in her eagerness to learn something regarding her father, whom she knew had been grievously wounded. The forms of men could be seen moving about the brig's deck, while Jack, in obedience to a sign from his commander, jumped into the gig to ascertain for the fair passenger the exact condition of her father's wounds, received in her defense.

He was met at the gangway by the surgeon, who, with a sorrowful shake of his head, confirmed the Lieutenant's worst suspicions. The old gentleman had never rallied from the terrible blow he had sustained on the head, but had gradually sank lower and lower until he had finally breathed his last.

Gently as possible the terrible truth was broken to the orphan, who sobbed and moaned in the arms of the Captain, who with all the tenderness of a woman offered such consolation as he could.

With the loss of her father she had no relative in the world, no blood relation upon whom she could call for assistance or advice. Possessed of wealth, with a large and valuable plantation, the poor girl knew not what to do, or where to go. In an agony of grief and despair she begged of Capt. Jenkins to assist her with his ripened wisdom, which he promised to do, and the course of the corvette was directed to be laid for the island of Jamaica.

In the meanwhile Jack Hayes, by direction of his commander, had been enacting a drama on deck.

All hands had been piped aft, and the First Lieutenant briefly stated to them all the character and calling of the schooner lately captured and destroyed. The prisoners, some ten in number, had been caught in the act of piracy, with the blood of their victims still red on their hands.

Whips were rove off from the yard-arms, the nooses placed about the hardened villains' necks. Five minutes for prayer was allowed, which was consumed in ribald jest.

With a wave of his hand the Lieutenant replaced his watch in his pocket, the men grasped the lines with a firm grip, and the next instant the last of the piratical gang swung suspended in mid air.

All traces of the execution were carefully removed before Rose was allowed to visit the broad deck of the corvette. Every precaution was taken to soothe her, and none tried harder or with more success than Jack Hayes.

Her beauty, intelligence, winning manners, together with the mantle of misfortune which had so suddenly enveloped the Creole, all tended to excite the deepest feelings of love and sympathy in the manly bosom of the Lieutenant.

Every opportunity was seized by Jack to court the society of the fair Creole, and before the Port Fire dropped anchor in the harbor of her destination the two were evidently on the best of terms.

The old gray-haired Captain smiled softly to himself as he noted the young people together, and during the succeeding twelve months, when the vessel was not cruising, he allowed his executive every chance to visit the fair orphan.

Finally the announcement was made of the approaching marriage of the two, and the entire ship's company were present when the ceremony was performed, the old Captain giving the bride away.

Jack soon after resigned to look after the immense interests of his wife's property, and around the hospitable board of the planter and ex-Lieutenant none found a warmer welcome than his old friends and shipmates of the Port Fire.

Alfred DeMusset and the Dogs.

Alfred DeMusset always declared that he hated dogs for the reason that twice in his life an animal of the canine race had come within an ace of wrecking his fortunes.

The first time was at a royal hunting party when the poet, Louis Philippe's guest, when a bird was flushed, fired hastily and sent the citizen King's favorite pointer to meet Cerberus.

The second time was, when a candidate for the academic, DeMusset went to pay the customary visit to an influential immortal whose chateau was in the environs of Paris.

At the moment that the poet rang at the gate an ignoble whelp of incredible ugliness, covered with mud, rushed to meet him with joyous barks and fawned upon him to the detriment of the poet's new pantaloons.

Disgusted as DeMusset was, it would have been perilous to drive off the immortal's faithful dog, so he was compelled to let the frightful animal lick his hands, cover him with caresses and mud, and precede him to the drawing-room.

A moment later the academician entered. DeMusset noticed his embarrassment, at which he was not surprised, considering the behavior of the animal. They adjourned to the dining-room, followed by the dog, which, after giving vent to his delight by various gambols and cries, placed two muddy paws on the cloth, seized the wing of a cold chicken, and began contentedly to devour it.

"That's the most abominable brute I ever heard of," thought DeMusset, and continued aloud, "You are fond of dogs, I see."

"Fond of dogs!" echoed the immortal. "I hate dogs."

"But this animal here?"

"I have only tolerated the beast because it is yours, sir."

"Mine?" said DeMusset; "I thought it was yours, which was all that prevented me from killing him."

The two men roared with laughter, and DeMusset made a friend.

Late that day a yellow dog crossed the frontier of the Rhine at Strasbourg with the air of an animal that scored upon the tables of its memory a decidedly unpleasant recollection, and headed for Constantinople with undiminished celerity.

Postage Stamps.

Their Language.—The language of postage stamps, instead of flowers, has been invented by a practical American. Thus, when a postage stamp is placed upside down on the left corner of the letter, it means "I love you;" in the same crosswise, "My heart is another's;" straight up and down, "Good-by, sweetheart, good-by;" upside down in the right-hand corner, "Write no more;" in the center at the top, "Yes;" opposite at the bottom, "No;" on the right-hand corner at a right angle, "Do you love me?" in the left-hand corner, "I hate you;" top corner on the right, "I wish you friendship;" bottom corner on the left, "I seek your acquaintance;" on a line with the surname, "Accept my love;" the same upside down, "I am engaged;" at right angles in the same place, "I long to see you;" in the middle at the right-hand edge, "Write immediately."

Stamp-Collecting.—It is said that postage-stamp collecting originated in India, where the missionaries are able to reclaim from the heartless Hindoo parents the little babies they are accustomed to sacrifice before their idols, by trading postage stamps for them. For some reason the barbarians covet these paper tokens, either to offer to their gods after the manner of the Chinese, or to decorate their huts. The fact, becoming known in England, has worked a change in the economy of canceled stamps. There are charity schools in England to which admittance is gained by presenting a certain number of defaced stamps. All large counting-houses throughout the realm carefully preserve every envelope, and the junior clerks make it their business to soak off the Queen's heads and paste them on huge rolls of wall paper. They are presented to some worthy lad who makes an exchange of them for learning.

Dying Words.

It is probably natural that at the last the scenes which have made the strongest impressions in life should be recalled by memory. The old mountaineer, when he comes to die, with his last whisper says his snowshoes are lost; with the stage driver he is "on a down-grade and cannot reach the brake;" the miner cannot get to the air-pipe; the sailor says "eight bells have sounded," and the gambler plays his last trump. A little girl died here a few years ago, and, as her mother held her wrist and noted the faint and flickering pulse, a smile came to the wan face and the child whispered: "There is no more desert here, mamma, but all the world is full of flowers." A moment later the smile became transfixed. In an Eastern city, not long ago, a Sister of Charity was dying, and at last from a stupor she opened her eyes and said: "It is strange; every kind word that I have spoken in life; every tear that I have shed, has become a living flower around me, and they bring to my senses an incense ineffable."—*Virginia (Nev.) Music as Medicine.

Sidney Lanier has been lecturing on the "Doctors of Shakespeare's Time." Mr. Lanier finds that music was regarded as physic, a true remedial agent, as were aloes and cassia and other drugs. In "Pericles," for instance, the physician Cermion actually calls in the service of music to bring Thaisa back from a fainting fit. Dr. John Hall, who, in 1607, married Shakespeare's youngest daughter, Susannah, possibly was the model from which Cermion was made. This Dr. Hall was the son of the man who wrote a work called "An Historical Expostulation Against the Beastly Abuses, bothe of Chirurgery and Physike in Our Tyme." "Macbeth" says:

Throw physic to the dogs;
I'll none of it.

In "Romeo and Juliet" we have a sketch of the apothecary of the day.

A LEGAL ROMANCE.

The Case of Corporal Pryor N. Coleman.

The history of the various trials of Pryor N. Coleman, corporal of Company G, First Tennessee Federal cavalry, during the war, for the murder of Mourning Ann Bell, alleged to have been committed on the 7th of March, 1865, is one of the strange romances of the land. He was charged with the offense, tried by court-martial, convicted of murder in the first degree at Knoxville, on the 27th of March, 1865, and sentenced to death by hanging. The judgment was approved in due form, but he escaped from the military authorities and thus defeated the execution of the death sentence.

Nine years thereafter, when civil authority had been fully restored in all the Southern States, Coleman was arrested, indicted, and tried in the Criminal Court of Knox county, Tenn., for the same murder. To the indictment his counsel pleaded not guilty, and a former conviction by a court-martial for the same particular offense. A demurrer to the plea was sustained on the ground—first, because the defendant's conviction by court-martial under the laws of the United States was not a bar to an indictment for the same offense; and, second, because he was also guilty of an offense against the laws of the State. The trial then proceeded, and Coleman was again convicted of murder in the first degree for killing Mourning Ann Bell, and sentenced to death.

An appeal was thence taken to the Supreme Court of Tennessee, and, after elaborate argument, the ruling of the court below and the death sentence were affirmed. Pending the appeal to the Supreme Court, a writ of habeas corpus was applied for to bring Coleman before the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee, and his discharge from the civil authorities demanded on the ground that he was unlawfully restrained from his liberty by the Sheriff of Knox county on the charge of murder, because he had been previously convicted by court-martial for the same offense under the laws of the United States. The Circuit Court decided that Coleman was held in contravention of the laws of the United States, and ordered his release from custody. The order for his release was presented to the Supreme Court of the State with a motion for the discharge of the prisoner, and on the 5th of February, 1867, the court decided that the Federal courts had no authority to interfere with the exercise of jurisdiction over offenses against the laws of the State, and declared the order of release a nullity.

The case was then finally appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, where it was argued during the October term of 1878, and Justice Field delivered the decision of the court in June last, pending which Coleman remained in the custody of the civil authority of Tennessee. The Supreme Court held that the ruling of the State Supreme Court must be reversed and the prisoner discharged from the keeping of the Sheriff of Knox county; but, as the record proved that he had been lawfully convicted by a court-martial under the laws of the United States, he must be delivered back to the military arm of the law, from which he escaped in 1865, for the execution of the death sentence. This decision brought the question of his execution before President Hayes, and his order of June 6, 1879, directed that, "in consideration of the long delay which has intervened since the trial," the sentence should be commuted to imprisonment for life, and Corp. Pryor N. Coleman is now in the Albany penitentiary for penal servitude during the remainder of his days.

Altogether the case of Coleman is one of the most remarkable of the many interesting complications in the administration of justice which has arisen during and since the war. One of the peculiar legal romances of the law is in the fact that, until the issue was finally brought to the highest judicial tribunal of the country, where conflicting judgments in lower courts could be overruled, the prisoner escaped the death penalty by pleading in the State courts that he had already been condemned for the same offense by the military courts of the United States; in the Federal District Court he claimed immunity from the judgment of its laws because he was already condemned in the State courts. Between the disputing jurisdictions he saved his life until time had so softened the hand of justice as to secure a commutation of his sentence.

He Meant Business.

Sidney Cole, aged about 19, owner of three-fourths of a large plantation in Franklin parish, La., rode up to the gate of J. B. Wofford, manager of the plantation, and informed Wofford he had come to kill him. Wofford expostulated in vain. Cole dismounted and advanced, pistol in hand, toward the house. Mrs. Wofford, realizing the danger of her husband, called out to Wofford to arm himself, which he did by seizing a shotgun. Stepping out he confronted Cole, who continued to advance, saying, "I have come to kill you, —— you. I mean business." Whereupon Wofford remarked to him, "If you mean business, here it is," at the same time discharging his weapon, the load taking effect in the breast of Cole, killing him instantly. "Excusable homicide" was the verdict of the Coroner's jury.

OUT IN THE COLD.

BY S. G. LONG.

Out in the cold now I'm wandering alone,
Far from my friends and far from my home;
Far from the scenes of my childhood so dear,
Shrinking before the cold world's heartless jeer.

Once I had friends I thought loving and true;
Once, amid pleasure and honor, I grew;
Once, Oh! the word has a sorrowful tone,
For pleasure has left me and honor is gone.

Children at one time I fondled with glee;
Where are they now, with light hearts and free?
Where are the dear ones I once loved so well?
Why have they left me, can any one tell?

Ah! I remember my poor wife had died;
Myself and my two sons stood close by her side;
She took both their hands, and whispering said—
Take care of thy father when mother is dead.

The homestead I gave them; 'twas all I could give;
Beneath its old roof they said I could live.
But soon a change came, and I, poor and old,
Was turned from its threshold out in the cold.

Father, forgive them the deed they have done,
Though they have plenty and I have none;
Though their old father is left all alone,
Far from the ones he loves, far from his home.

Soon the cold waters of death rippling by
Will waft my frail spirit to regions on high;
There will I meet my dear children of old,
That once turned their father out in the cold.

"Goobers."

There may be people in this world who do know what a goober is, but there are none who have not heard of the luscious and seductive peanut. The peanut and the goober are one and the same. There are seven counties in Virginia that make a specialty of growing the peanut. The crop year begins Oct. 1, and ends the following September. Last year the peanut crop amounted to 900,000 bushels, and this year it will touch a million. They sell down in Ole Virginia for $1 a bushel, which makes a pretty good item when rolled up together. The modus operandi by which the nuts are separated, cleaned and classed is somewhat as follows: The third story of the building contains thousands of bushels of peas in bags. First, there is a large cylinder, in which all the nuts are placed, in order that the dust and dirt may be shaken off of them. They pass from this cylinder into the brushes, where every nut receives fifteen feet of a brushing before it becomes free. Then they pass through a sluice-way to the floor below where they are dropped on an endless belt, about two and a half feet in width, and passing along at the rate of four miles an hour. On each side of the belt stand eight colored girls, and, as the nuts fall from the sluice on the belt, the girls, with a quick motion of the hand, pick out all the poor-looking nuts, and by the time the belt reaches the end two-thirds of the nuts are picked off, allowing only the finest to pass the crucible. Those that do pass drop through another sluice and empty into bags on the floor below. When the bag is filled it is taken away by hand, sewed up and branded, with the figure of a rooster prominent on its sides. The peas caught up by the girls are thrown to one side, placed in bags and carried into another room, where they are again picked over.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

NURSING THE SICK.

Some sensible person, who has evidently had experience in attending to invalids, thus speaks of the importance of decision and quietness in the sick-room:

"Consult your patient's wants, but consult him as little as possible. Your decision need not be very obvious and positive; you will be most decisive if no one suspects that you are so at all. It is the triumph of supremacy to become unconsciously supreme. Nowhere is this decision more blessed than in a sick-room. Where it exists in its genuineness the sufferer is never contradicted, never coerced; all little victories are assumed. The decisive nurse is never peremptory, never loud. She is distinct, it is true—there is nothing more aggravating to a sick person than a whisper—but she is not loud. Though quiet, however, she never walks tip-toe; she never makes gestures; all is open and above-board. She knows no diplomacy or finesse, and, of course, her shoes never creak. Her touch is steady and encouraging. She does not potter. She never looks at you sideways. You never catch her watching. She never slams the door, but she never shuts it slowly, as if she were cracking a nut in the hinge. She never talks behind it. She never peeps. She pokes the fire skillfully, with firm, judicious penetration. She caresses one kind of patient with genuine sympathy, she talks to another as if he were well. She is never in a hurry. She is worth her weight in gold, and has a healthy prejudice against physic, which, however, she knows at the right time how to conceal."

TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION.

Three millions of persons die annually of consumption. Medical resources seem to be baffled by this malady. Dr. Talbot Jones confesses, in the New York Medical Journal, that climate is the physician's only dependence for the cure of his consumptive patient. The article expresses the following opinions:

1. No zone enjoys entire immunity from pulmonary consumption.

2. The popular belief that phthisis is common in cold climates is fallacious, and the idea, now so prevalent, that phthisis is rare in warm climates is as untrue as dangerous.

3. The disease causes a large proportion of deaths on the seashore, the mortality diminishing with elevation up to a certain point.

4. Altitude is inimical to the development of consumption, owing chiefly to the greater purity of the atmosphere in elevated situations, its freedom from organic matter, and its richness in ozone.

5. Moisture arising from a clay soil or due to evaporation is one of the most influential factors in its production.

6. Dampness from the atmosphere, from whatever cause, or in any altitude, predisposes to the development of the disease, and is hurtful to those already attacked.

7. Dryness is a quality of the atmosphere of decided value.

8. The most unfavorable climate possible for a consumptive is one of uniform high temperature and a high dew point (warm and moist).

9. The effects due to change in the atmosphere are by no means so pernicious as are generally supposed, and on this subject present views require modification.

Dr. Jones commends the climate of Minnesota, and thinks those predisposed to consumption, or laboring under its first stages, would very likely be benefited or cured by a residence there.

Between the pleasant rolling prairie, the wooded lake region, and the dense pine forests of the northern section of the State, they can choose what seems most agreeable and best adapted to them, while the dry, bracing atmosphere will enable them to live much of their time out of doors without fear of taking cold.

He insists, however, on the inutility of sending patients thither who are in the advanced stages of the disease.

Old Nanny's Light in the Window.

On the Michigan Central railroad, ten miles from Detroit, stands an old farm-house, now desolate, and fast going to decay. There, until lately, lived a poor woman, whose husband and sons had been road-hands, and lost their lives in the service. Seven or eight years ago, when her last child left home to meet a violent death on this same road, the men of the rails became interested in that quaint old farm-house. One night they saw a bright light in one of the windows. Its rays streamed out over the flowers, and fell upon the rails along which the wheels thundered, and the engineer wondered over the signal. The lamp was there the next night, and the next, and it was never missed for a single night, until one evening a month ago. Old Nan, deprived of husband and children, made friends with the rushing trains and their burdens. The trainmen soon found that the lamp was for them, and they watched for it. During the early evening hours, they saw old Nanny's face behind the light or at the door, and a thousand times conductors, engineers and brakemen have called cheerily through the darkness—"Good-night, Nanny. God bless you!" Winter and summer the light was there. Winter and summer the trainmen looked for it, and the more thoughtful ones often left a bit of money with the station men beyond to help the old woman keep the bright rays shining. The lamp was not there for one train, but for all, and all men understood the sentiment and appreciated it. One dark night, not long ago, when the wind howled, and the rain beat fiercely against headlight and cab, the engineers missed the light. They looked for it again and again, as one who suddenly misses an old landmark in a city, and when they failed to find it the hand instinctively went up to the throttle, as if danger lurked on the curve below. Next day men went down to the little old house, fearing old Nanny might be ill. There sat the lamp on the window-sill, but the oil was exhausted. In her bed, seeming to have only fallen asleep, was the poor old woman, cold and dead. Life and lamp had gone out together, and men of rough manner and hardened heart replied, as they heard the news: "Poor old woman! May her spirit rest in heaven!"—Youth's Companion.

Keeping Children After School.

There is one common practice of the public schools which ought to be abolished at once and everywhere without question or parley. That is the practice of imprisoning the children in the school-houses beyond the school hours. Pretty nearly every school-house in the land is thus turned into a penitentiary in which children are immured every day, some of them for imperfect recitations, others for faults of deportment. This method of punishment might, if the teachers were all judicious, be resorted to occasionally with good effect; but teachers are not all judicious, and thousands of children are thus detained every day to whom the detention is a serious injury and a grave injustice. For some trifling breach of order, like turning in the seat or dropping a pencil, for some small failure in a recitation, and often for no fault at all—whole classes being kept on account of the indolence of some of their members, and the innocent thus suffering with the guilty—the children are shut up in the school-houses, sometimes during the intermissions, often after the close of school. Thousands of children in delicate health, to whom the regular school hours are too long, are permanently injured by this system of confinement. If only the stupid and the willful and those in sturdy health were thus punished, there would be less reason of complaint; but any careful investigation will show that such discrimination is not generally made, and, from the nature of the system, cannot well be made; and that the injury to the health of pupils resulting from the practice more than outweighs any good that may result from it. The health of the pupil is a subject to which the average school-teacher gives but little consideration; any practice, therefore, which is liable to result in the impairment of the pupil's health ought to be forbidden by law.

This plea is based upon an observation of the working of this system in several towns and cities, and upon the concurrent testimony of many medical men. In some places the rules of the governing boards forbid the imprisonment of children, but the rules are generally set at naught by teachers. They ought to be enforced. It must be that there are methods of discipline for schools less injurious and more effectual than imprisonment.—Good Company.

To Sweep and Dust a Room Properly.

This is an art, and like all fine arts has a right method. Well done, it renovates the entire room, and the occupant takes possession feeling that all things have become new. It is not merely a performance to be done by the hands, but a work into which taste and judgment, in other words brains, must enter. Are there closets opening into the room to be swept? Arrange the shelves, drawers, or clothing preparatory to sweeping day, then let this be the first to be swept. Cover the bed with soiled sheets, as also all heavy articles that cannot be removed, first, however, having carefully dusted and brushed them. Remove all the furniture that can easily be set in the hall or adjoining room, having first dusted it; then, taking a step-ladder, begin to sweep or brush, or wipe the cornices and picture cords and pictures. Draw the shades to the top of the window, or, if there are inside blinds, dust them carefully. Open the windows. All the dust left in the room now is in the carpet or air, and the current of the windows will soon settle it. Now begin to sweep, not toward a door or corner, but from the outer edges of the room toward the center, where the dust will be taken up with a small brush and dust-pan. Go over the room once more, this time with a dampened broom; that removes the last bit of dust, and gives the carpet a new, bright appearance. Replace the articles of furniture as soon as the air is entirely free from dust, and the room is new and clean. All this seems an easy thing to do, but there is not one in a hundred who will follow out the detail. Some will sweep the dust into the hall or from one room to another, and then wonder why their house is so soon dusty again. Others forget cornices and pictures, and thus leave a seed of future annoyance; while a third class will do all but use the dampened broom, which is as finishing touches to a picture.

Astronomical Progress.

Mr. Proctor, the astronomer, recently expressed the opinion that Mars was the only planet beside the earth old enough to be inhabited. The others, he thinks, are still glowing with heat. He also uttered the following opinion:

"The stars are rapidly ceasing to be regarded as objects of beauty simply, and the time is approaching when intelligent people will be ashamed to gaze in indifferent admiration upon the firmament and acknowledge their ignorance in a field which the vast strides of modern science have made accessible to all.

"Draper's discovery of oxygen in the sun is the most important fact in modern astronomical research, because it shows that the sun is in part composed of elements like the earth's.

"Saturn's rings will eventually resolve themselves into moons, and the dark places on the moon are not mountains or seas, but simply indentations, and therefore less luminous. The black spots visible upon the surface of the sun are but holes through the surrounding envelope through which only the parent mass can be seen."

A Brief Story.

A tall, old gentleman of large frame, crowned with flaxen hair, visits the New York Tribune counting-room now and then, with Jersey mud upon his boots, and asks if there is not enough money on hand to allow him a little as a stockholder. "When Horace Greeley was alive," he said once, "I used to get enough from my dividends to support me. I am getting too old now to work, and I need the money. I own one share of the stock, which my son paid $10,000 for. He gave it to me to live off as long as I lived." "Who was your son?" "Theodore Tilton."

INDIANA ITEMS.

W. R. ALBRIGHT, ex-Sheriff, has died at Tipton.

THE raging Wabash has done great damage in the overflow of the low lands all along its course.

THE settlements of County Treasurers with the State Treasurer show 10 per cent. better collections than last year.

AT Belleville, in a fight between Wm. Millikin and Henry Crone, Elwood Millikin defended his father by fatally stabbing Crone in the back. The dispute was over a dog.

HENRY C. BATEMAN, of Lewisville, Henry county, after losing $1,200 at poker, attempted to commit suicide at his hotel in Richmond, but failed from taking an overdose of drugs.

A MAN living near Shelbyville recently killed a black snake which measured fifty-seven inches in length. His snakeship was quite lively, and had evidently mistaken the time of year.

THE State House Commissioners have decided to close up the State House grounds for the winter, as much damage is liable to be done to the foundation already put in, by numerous visitors.

TRAIN sixteen on the Indianapolis, Peru and Chicago railway broke in two going down the grade near Denver, the hind end striking the front end, completely wrecking ten cars, fatally injuring a tramp, and slightly injuring two brakemen.

THE Supreme Court of Indiana holds that husband and wife are competent witnesses for or against each other, save with respect to confidential communications made during wedlock, and when the husband is suing for damages by the seduction of his wife.

THE administrators of the late John Purdue's estate, J. J. Perrin and J. H. Wiebers, paid over to M. L. Pierce, Treasurer of Purdue University, the sum of $29,019.57, it being the final payment of the sum of $150,000 donated by Mr. Purdue.

THE State Dairymen's Association have elected the following officers: President, Asher Kellum; Vice President, G. Jackson; Secretary, E. J. Beeles; Treasurer, G. C. Stephens. It adjourned to meet on the Thursday after the first Monday in January, 1881.

THE State Board of Agriculture elected the following officers: President, W. H. Ragan, of Hendricks; Secretary, Alexander Herron, of Fayette; Treasurer, J. A. Wildman, of Marion; General Superintendent, Fielding Buler, of Marion. The Secretary is the only officer re-elected.

THE Indiana Poultry Association elected the following officers: President, A. C. Bale; Vice President, T. N. Barker; Secretary and Treasurer, W. J. Elston. The report shows that the receipts of the recent exhibition, which was under the auspices of the society, was sufficient to pay all premiums, and leave a balance in the treasury.

THE Indiana Mexican Veterans' Association, fifty strong, met recently. A letter was received from Joe Lane, of Oregon, regretting the apathy of Congress toward the claims of Mexican soldiers to a pension. A memorial was adopted asking Congress to equalize bounties. Among those present was Jacob Fox, of Dearborn county, who fired the first gun in the war. He was a member of Ringgold's battery, and began the music at Palo Alto.

TWELVE heirs to the fabulous Springer estate of $80,000,000 have turned up in Howard county, namely: Charles F., Thomas W., Leander F., George A., Margaret H., Harry M., Louis H. and Louisa H., children of Louis F. Springer, who died in Kokomo in 1859; and Ed E. and William Springer, of another family. There is little doubt that the children of Louis F. Springer are legitimate heirs of the estate. Before his death Mr. S. prepared a genealogical chart, at great expense and labor, tracing his lineage without a missing link back to the ancient family stem, whose progenitor was Charles Christopher Springer, a Swedish nobleman, and who was the founder of an American colony that settled on the site where the city of Wilmington, Del., now stands, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, and which tract of land, embracing 300 acres, valued at $80,000,000, has recently been declared the legitimate inheritance of the lineal descendants of Charles Christopher Springer.

Smithington and His Wife.

Smithington's wife is not kind in double harness, and not suitable for a gentleman to drive. Smithington was talking to Potts about the way people went on—and off nowadays.

"What would you do," said Potts, who was strong on the pistol theory, "if some other fellow ran away with your wife? Excuse the illustration; but I want to bring it home to you."

"I shouldn't hesitate an instant," responded Smithington.

"You'd kill her?"

"No, sir; I think I should refrain from unmanly violence."

"You'd kill yourself?"

"Like never mind I would."

"Well, what would you do then!"

"Make friends with the victim right off, and give him some substantial testimony of my esteem. Only, begad, if I ever invited him to dinner, he would have to come alone."

Story of Henry Clay.

One day, during President Monroe's administration, Mr. Clay was invited, with other friends of the President's, to dine at the White House. A few days before some friends of Mr. Clay's, living in Indiana, had sent him a bottle of wine which had been made in that State. Mr. Clay thought that he would take the bottle of wine up to the White House and have it opened at the table, and show the guests how fast they were progressing in the West. When the party was seated at the table Mr. Clay told a servant to open the bottle and serve some of the wine to the guests. They all tasted of it and pronounced it very good, until it came to Mr. Monroe. "Well, Mr. President, what do you think of it?" said Mr. Clay. "Well," answered Mr. Monroe, "it is very good, but it tastes to me exactly like old Kentucky whisky." On investigation Mr. Clay found that his son Tom had, some days before, emptied the bottle of wine for his own benefit and then had filled it up with Kentucky whisky.

GRANT AND THE OLD RING.

Chorpenning Creswell, who wants a "strong man" in the White House, and Boss Shepherd were among the last to shake hands with Grant when he started from Washington on his trip to Mexico. They were among his special intimates during two terms, and they look forward to a third term in the hope of a permanent restoration of shoddy and stealing. This is the faith of all the ring chiefs and great thieves. They say, "Put us once more in office, and, with the purse and the sword, we shall know how to retain possession, no matter which way elections may go."

The Grant movement involves, therefore, much more than a third term. It contemplates a radical change in our institutions, to be brought about by the agency of a subservient Supreme Court, which, in the event of success, would be appointed by Grant—there being four or five prospective vacancies—and a standing army to support its decrees. He packed that court in 1870 to reverse the judgment in favor of specie payments, as obligatory under the constitution, and thus prepared the way for the crash of 1873.

Give him the opportunity and he would pack it again for even a worse object. Nothing would be easier than to find venal and partisan Judges, not only ready but anxious to overthrow the local Governments of the States, and to build up a centralized Government on the ruins of a system by which alone the Union can be preserved. Destroy it, and there will be no United States.

Hence, the full meaning of the scheme which Conkling, Cameron and other Republican managers are now forwarding with reckless indifference to consequences and with supreme contempt of all rivalry, must be looked squarely in the face. It is a foul conspiracy to seize and to despoil the Government, by a corrupt cabal and by ambitious leaders who have staked money, character and hopes of distinction on the coming contest.

The promoters of this plot want Grant out of the country during the political agitation in Congress. They kept him traveling for over two years, and footed the bills, with the Presidential campaign in view. They recalled him from a projected journey to Australia to start the recent costly ovations, which were a prepared part of the programme. They will bring him back through the South next spring just before the meeting of the National Convention. And then it is intended to rush his nomination through with the shout of a hired mob at Chicago.

Perhaps this plan can be worked out successfully, and perhaps not. The friends of Blaine and Sherman and other aspirants will have to submit tamely before it can win. There is abundant time for reflection and for concentration in the next three or four months. But whether this opposition be well organized or not, there are elements inside the Republican party quite independent of any leadership that will insure Grant's defeat if the conservative opinion of the country is represented by a candidate known to have been faithful to the Union in its day of trial.—New York Sun.

Longevity.

From the days of Pliny to our own we have accounts of persons living ten, twenty, thirty and even forty, or more, years beyond a century. Though the accuracy of the records is in such cases open to doubt, yet there are ample reasons for believing that many persons have rounded out their full hundred years of life.

Though life up to such an extreme age may not seem particularly desirable, it is, nevertheless, true that a virtuous old age—with the passions dead, the ambitions sated, and its work all done! with pleasant memories of the past, calm and hopeful anticipations of the future, and quiet contentment of each day as it passes—may be full of as real happiness as any previous periods in the lives of men.

Men, now, generally die before their time. Indeed, some scientists affirm that, as the normal limit of animal life seems to be at five times the years of the growth, man should live to an age of five times twenty years. With this view, the last twenty is the proper period of gradual decay—or old age.

The tendency to early decay, or to more violent terminations of life, is probably determined by the rate at which vital force is expended. Persons who use it up faster than it is fully supplied, especially at the period when much of it should be expended in building up and consolidating the system, cannot expect a long life. It may be thus expended by vicious indulgence, habitual care, anxiety and fret, and by overwork, whether of the body or the brain.

At the same time, it must be admitted that longevity seems often to be simply a matter of inheritance. One who belongs to a long-lived family will be likely himself to be long-lived.

This, however, is not an exception to our previous statement. Such persons start with a vigorous life force, which easily renews itself after expenditure. And there is reason to believe that those whose heredity is against them in this respect may, with care, become the first of a better line of posterity, thus largely restoring and transmitting the lost vigor inherited from indiscreet ancestors.

THE Superintendent of the Cincinnati public schools has adopted the plan of celebrating the birthdays of distinguished authors, wherein great advantages in teaching history have already been realized.

ONE-THIRD of the gold that is mined goes to wear and tear, one-third goes into circulation, and one-third into the arts and manufactures.

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

APPROACH OF COMETS.—Although the near approach to the earth of several comets has been known, the least distances of only two have ever been determined with any degree of accuracy. On July 1, 1770, a comet was within 1,390,000 miles of the earth—the closest approach of one of these bodies of which astronomers have any certain knowledge. Its apparent diameter was 2½ deg., or nearly five times the apparent diameter of the moon. It is not surprising that the apparition of such a monster should cause a panic of terror among unenlightened and superstitious inhabitants of the earth.

ARE BEARS LEFT-HANDED?—Long before the writer tried his 'prentice hand at trapping, says a writer in Forest and Stream, he was told by a veteran bear hunter that all the bears he had taken in traps—and they were a goodly number—were caught by the left foot. The statement was discredited, till experience seemed to verify it where the traps were set at a coop or its equivalent. Several caught in deadfalls also had the left leg as well as the head inside of the coop, the bait being so far back as to oblige them to step inside with one foot to reach it. It would thus seem that where a bear is attracted by a lure he, soldier-like, steps off left foot forward.

POWER OF SEA BREAKERS.—From experiments which were made some time since at the Bell Rock and Skerryvore light-houses, on the coast of Scotland, it was found that, while the force of the breakers on the side of the German ocean may be taken at about a ton and a half upon every square foot of surface exposed to them, the Atlantic breakers fall with double that weight, or three tons to the square foot; and thus a surface of only two square yards sustains a blow from a heavy Atlantic breaker equal to about fifty-four tons. In November, 1824, a heavy gale blew, and blocks of limestone and granite, from two to five tons in weight, were washed about like pebbles at the Plymouth breakwater. About 300 tons of such blocks were borne a distance of 200 feet, and up the inclined plane of the breakwater, carried over it, and scattered in various directions. A block of limestone, seven tons in weight, was in one place washed a distance of 120 feet. Blocks of three tons' weight were torn away by a single blow of a breaker, and hurled over into the harbor; and one of two tons, strongly trenailed down upon a jetty, was torn away by an overpowering breaker.

HOW AN OWL'S HEAD REVOLVES.—A contributor to the American Naturalist, who had read a funny story about an owl wringing his own neck by looking at a man who was walking around him, tested the matter by experiment. He obtained a fine specimen and placed him on top of a post. "It was not difficult," says the writer, "to secure his attention, for he never diverted his gaze from me while I was in his presence. I began walking rapidly around the post, a few feet from it, keeping my eyes fixed on him all the while. His body remained motionless, but his head turned exactly with my movements. When I was half way round his head was exactly behind. Three-quarters of a circle were completed, and still the same twist of the neck and the same stare followed me. One circle and no change. On I went, twice round, and still that watchful stare and steady turn of the head. On I went, three times round, and I began really to wonder why the head did not drop off, when all at once I discovered what I had failed to notice before. When I had reached half way round from the front, which was as far as he could turn his head to follow my movements with comfort, he whisked it back through the whole circle so instantaneously and brought it facing me again with such precision that I failed to detect the movement, although I was looking intently all the time. I repeated the experiment many times afterward on the same bird, and I had always to watch carefully to detect the movement or the readjustment of his gaze."

THE MANUFACTURE OF SLATE-PENCILS.—The process of making slate-pencils is thus described by the American Stationer: Broken slate from the slate quarries is put in a mortar run by steam, and pounded into small particles. Thence it goes into the hopper of a mill, which runs into a "bolting-machine," where it is "bolted," the finer, almost impalpable, flour that results being taken to a mixing-tub, where a small quantity of steatite flour, similarly manufactured, is added, together with other materials, the whole being made into a stiff dough. This dough is kneaded thoroughly by passing it several times between iron rollers. Then it is conveyed to a table, where it is made into "charges"—that is, short cylinders, four or five inches thick and containing some eight or twelve pounds each. Four of these are placed in a strong iron chamber, or "retort," with a changeable nozzle so as to regulate the size of the pencil, and subjected to tremendous hydraulic pressure, under which the composition is pushed through the nozzle in a long cord, like a slender snake sliding out of a hole, and passes over a sloping table, slit at right angles with the cords to give passage to a knife which cuts them into lengths. They are then laid on boards to dry, and after a few hours are removed to sheets of corrugated zinc, the corrugations serving to prevent the pencils from warping during the process of baking, to which they are next subjected in a kiln, into which superheated steam is introduced in pipes, the temperature being regulated according to the requirements of the article exposed to its influence. From the kiln the articles go to the finishing and packing room, where the ends are thrust for a second under rapidly-revolving emery wheels, and are drawn neatly and smoothly pointed ready for use.

A Five-Franc Piece.

"I say, old fel, you haven't got a five-franc piece about you that you don't know what to do with, have you?" "There's one." "Thanks—but, hello, I say, you know, it's bad!" "You asked me for one I didn't know what to do with!"

The Hair.

This fashion of crimping and curling the hair of children is positively iniquitous. Wee creatures of 3 or 4 years, and even younger, are arrayed in curl papers by affectionate and admiring mothers who are bent upon making the children charming, and who do not stop to consider how far they may be defeating their own ends by the action, or how much pain they may be inflicting on the objects of their fond solicitude. An authority on that subject says: "Up to the age of 6 or 7 children retain what is called their 'baby hair,' which is injured, not improved, by cutting. It is quite different from the harsher hair which succeeds it. If the hair curls naturally it looks charming dressed in that fashion, but putting it in papers is sure to injure it and pull it out by the roots. The use of curling irons is yet more objectionable; anything that tangles and cuts the hair is bad in the extreme, and it is to be regretted that mothers draw so heavily upon the capital of their children's hair, instead of using the yearly increasing interest of its beauty and value." By keeping the scalp of the head clean, and the hair brushed into silky softness, its beauty can be preserved until late in life.

A Relic of Wilkes Booth.

Miss Mary McHenry, of Philadelphia, has sent to Gen. Dunn, to be placed in his Lincoln collection, a curious relic of Wilkes Booth, with the following statement: In August, 1864, Mr. J. Wilkes Booth registered at the McHenry House, Meadeville, Pa. He was there on the 12th of that month. After his departure it was found that he had, with a diamond, inscribed upon a pane of a window of his bedroom these words:

Abe Lincoln,
Departed this Life August 13, 1864,
By the effects of Poison.

The glass remained in the window undisturbed until the country was shocked by the murder of Mr. Lincoln on April 14, 1865. A few days after that event Mr. R. M. N. Taylor, proprietor of the McHenry House, cut the pane from the window, framed with it the autograph of Mr. Booth, which Mr. Taylor cut from the hotel register, and sent the whole to Gen. Dunn, just as it now is.—Indianapolis Journal.

Brown Paper Against the Cold.

The "old woman's" remedy for a "cold on the chest," a sore throat, or a bruise, which consisted in an application of brown paper steeped in beer or vinegar, owed its efficacy to the heat-retaining properties of the paper. A wet pad of this material, as far as the surface next to the skin was concerned, acted almost as well as a layer of wet linen rag protected with a thick covering of flannel. In short, stout paper of the commonest sort is an effective non-conductor, and may be advantageously employed as covering for beds or to eke out scanty clothing. A piece of thick paper inserted between the lining and the cloth of a waistcoat or in the back of a thin coat will render it warm as well as light. The suggestion is a small one, but it is simple to carry into effect, and will be found effective.

PHOTOGRAPHED IN MOTION.

Instantaneous Pictures of Horses While Running and Trotting.

[New York Times.]

Professor Manly Miles lectured before the New York Academy of Comparative Anatomy, in East Thirty-fourth street, last evening, on "The Horse in Motion." The lecture was profusely illustrated with views of celebrated trotting and running horses taken instantaneously while at top of speed by the new automatic electro-photographic process. A screen of white canvas stood at one end of the room, and upon this the views, magnified to fifty diameters, were projected by the stereopticon. A large gathering was present, including many veterinary surgeons and several distinguished horse-fanciers. All of them manifested great interest in the exhibition, and frequently interrupted the professor with loud applause.

Artists and painters, Professor Miles said, had always been wrong about the actual motion of the horse. They drew him as he appeared to them, but unfortunately, that appearance was not correct. The impressions made on the retina of the eye were only a blending of the animals, which, by reason of their velocity, the retina could not distinctly retain. The views he would exhibit were taken by Ex-Governor Leland of California, in the fall of 1879. Twelve cameras, manufactured in London for the express purpose, were placed side by side upon the Palo Alto track. The distance between each was 21 inches, and as the horse Abe Egerton passed at a speed of 2:24 he touched twelve successive wires, by which the photographs were transferred, one after another, to as many plates, this giving in detail twelve different positions occupied by the animal in a single stride of twenty-two feet. The time occupied in transferring each photograph to the plate by the electric attachment was estimated at 1-2000 part of a second. The result has been to clear up many errors in regard to the true position of the horse, especially the error of Stonehenge, the English authority, who held that, in trotting, the hind legs move more rapidly than the fore legs, and that the chief function the latter had to perform was to support the animal. Governor Lelands experiments had demonstrated conclusively that the fore legs moved as fast as the hind legs, performing as much of the leverage and sustaining as much, or nearly as much, of the strain as the hind legs. Another notion which has been proved fallacious was that soft fetlocks or pasterns were fatal to speed. The instantaneous photographs showed that, so far from this being true, the swiftest horses possessed the most flexible and lastic pasterns; that all horses, in planting their feet on the ground, bent the pastern to a degree hitherto not dreamed of. M. Marie, a French investigator and author of eminence, had satisfied himself by a long and ingenious series of experiments that the horse, with all four legs off the ground was actually lower down than when he struck the roadway again. This also had been disproved by the photographs.

At this point the gas was turned off and the magnificent views were thrown on the canvas. The first series was of Egerton, a graceful trotter, doing his mile in 2:24. On the screen the limbs looked greatly elongated, and were twisted under and about the animal in all sorts of apparently impossible attitudes. No one would take him for a handsome horse. In the third scene he was pictured "in the air," that is, with all four feet off the ground. The feet were flying in all directions, and the effect was ludicrous. Several of the views illustrated the marked flexibility of the pastern spoken of by the professor. On striking the ground, the pasterns of the fore and hind feet were represented almost on a level with the surface, and the beautiful elasticity and powerful leverage with which they were afterward raised upward, forcing the body ahead, was greatly admired. In all cases the foot was represented as striking the ground with a backward motion, the heel or ball of the foot being the first to strike. Photographs of Occident, going at a 2:21 gait, differed very little from those of Egerton. The most remarkable views were a series of twelve, representing the pretty and docile racing mare, Sally Gardner, making a mile in 1:40 and a fraction. They were taken at intervals of a little over two feet, showing each distinct position assumed during a single stride. At times she was standing on the tip of one hoof and brandishing the other three feet wildly in the air, at others was thrusting all four in different directions like the spokes of a tireless wheel. In fact, the professor said that the movements of a racer's limbs were much on the same principle as those of wheel-spokes. When Sally left the ground and rose in the air the audience laughed long and loud. The mare looked exactly like a crazy mule with all four legs tangled inextricably beneath her. The lecturer explained that when the photographs were put in the instrument known as the "zoatrope," and blended together, the horses assumed a more graceful outline—one more in consonance with those of the painters and artists.

To Whom it May Concern.

Having sold my real estate, and given my wife, Ellen Fitzgerald, one third of the purchase money of said real estate and one-third of all my personal property, I forbid all and every person or persons from trusting or harboring her on my account, from and after this date.

Special Announcement.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishers of the STATE SENTINEL which enable us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the COURIER and WEEKLY SENTINEL one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "THE LAW OF THE FARM," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.

2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.

3rd What the deed of a farm includes.

4th The farmer's rights in the road.

5th As to farm fences.

6th As to estray and trespassing animals.

7th The farmer's liabilities for his animals.

8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.

9th Of water rights and drainage.
10th Of trespassing on the farm.
11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The INDIANA WEEKLY STATE SENTINEL is an eight-page paper, (the same as the COURIER) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the COURIER subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

Pause, Ponder and Pruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infinitesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company, Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, New York, New York. 43-1y.

THE EXODUS INVESTIGATION.

The Testimony of Prominent Colored Men Before the Committee.

As proof conclusive that the North Carolina negroes are being brought to Indiana, by republican politicans for the express purpose of voting the republican ticket in 1880, we append the following statements which were made under oath:

Charles N. Otuy (colored), editor of the Washington Argus, a weekly paper, devoted to the interests of the colored race, and principal of Howard University school, testified that he is a native of North Carolina, a graduate of Oberlin college and of Howard University; that he had visited his native state every year since he left it, and has made a careful study of her people. His last visit was only a few weeks ago, when he delivered an oration at Raleigh, at a celebration of the issuance of the emancipation proclamation. He further testifies that he was one of the founders of the National Emigrant Aid society, having himself drawn up its constitution. Its object was to furnish aid to colored people fleeing from oppression, such as the destitute crowds accumulated at St. Louis on their way to Kansas from Mississippi and Louisiana. At one of the first meetings, however, a Mr. Mendenhall made a speech, suggesting that it would be advisable to divert emigrants from their then objective point (Kansas) and send about 5,000 into Indiana, as that was a doubtful state in the coming election. Mr. Otuy testified that no one objected to his suggestion at the time except himself. He continued: "I felt that we had been used long enough as tools; I knew that the former use of us had not redounded to our advantage. In the south, as one man, we had voted the republican ticket, and our reward was buckshot from Ku-Klux, and no protection from the national government. Hence I was opposed to the longer use of my people by any political party, and as soon as I saw that the exodus was to be used politically, I withdrew from the society. There were others in the society who afterwards expressed some sentiments, but they remained in the organization." The witness in further explanation of his decision said he argued with his friends in the society that in Kansas the colored immigrants might acquire homesteads—in Indiana and Ohio they could not. To the first named state they had received an invitation, but to the two last named they had not been invited. He next informed the committee that when the exodus from North Carolina first began he addressed a letter to the most prominent colored men in the state, asking what caused this sudden uprising. All the answers were that there was no cause for it; that the more ignorant were deluded by three men named Perry, Williams and Taylor, who had been north and returned with such glowing news that the people could not resist them. An investigation revealed the fact that these three men had been among the most ignorant country people, and had told them that the United States government wanted them to go to Indiana and would give them money to begin with; that they would receive $1.50 per day during the winter, and from $2 to $2.50 during the spring, summer and fall. Some who hesitated were told that they would receive new suits of clothes at Washington. These men registered the names of those consenting to go, charging them from 25 cents to $2, according to their ability to pay. They called meetings in the country churches, held with closed doors, and bound to secrecy those whom they had deluded. The first batch that went, being few in number, were well received and immediately employed. These wrote back to their friends advising them to come, and hence, said the witness, it is easy to understand the great exodus from North Carolina. Mr. Otuy, in the course of his further statements, described conversations personally held by him in North Carolina, during the past few weeks, with James H. Harris, Osborne Hunter, Jr., M. V. Turner and other very prominent colored men, and with Governor Holden, Richard Badger and Col. Ike Young, prominent radical republicans, and all were in full accord with the foregoing explanations of the real causes of the exodus. They all likewise agreed that the condition of the colored people of North Carolina, although susceptible of improvement by the contemplated amendments to some of the laws, and especially by the restoration of their rights to elect certain county officers is, on the whole, highly favorable, and that there is no adequate incentive whatever for the colored people to leave the state. In fact, said the witness, every intelligent colored man in the state is opposed to it, and the six colored newspapers of North Carolina are all fighting it, and I say that although an exodus from the southern states may be a blessing, the exodus from North Carolina is a fraud and a curse. While testifying to the existence of most kindly relations between the white and black people in North Carolina, he described a liberal provision made by the North Carolina legislature, largely upon Governor Vance's recommendation, for the education of colored people, both in common and normal schools, and for the benefit of the colored deaf and dumb, blind and insane, and after speaking of the number of colored lawyers who have made a name at the bar, doctors who have a lucrative practive, farmers who own their farms and carry their own cotton to market. He continued: "I lived in the west two and a half years, and I never saw in Raleigh, N. C., such a poor, ignorant class of black people as I saw at Oberlin, Ohio, the paradise of colored people. There were many rich colored men there, there were colored men doing good business, but the poor people were poorer than I ever saw at any town in North Carolina. Now, this was in their Heaven. My God! what will they do in Indiana, which state up to a few years ago had a law on her statute books that a negro could not live in the state?"

Mr. O'Hara (colored), the other witness, testified that he had held office in Halifax county for a number of years, as chairman of the board of county commissioners, chairman of the board of education, and county examiner. He has been a member of the North Carolina legislature, and of the constitutional convention, was one of the presidential electors on the republican ticket in '76, and is now contesting a seat in the national house of representatives. He gave a very favorable account of the condition and treatment of colored people in North Carolina, but in regard to their industrial and political status he testified that, although there was at one time some "bulldozing" in the counties bordering on South Carolina, there never has been any political persecutions in the counties affected by the present exodus, and is none now in any part of North Carolina. Nothing was more common on election days than to see a white landlord and colored tenant coming to town in the same buggy and voting different tickets. White mechanics in North Carolina had no prejudice against working with colored mechanics, and no discrimination was made against the colored people in the courts and juries.

Senator Windom remarked at this point that he had been looking for a negro paradise, and now he had found it in North Carolina.

The witness in response to interrogatories to the cause of the exodus from this state, said it was the result of efforts of agitators going about the country, and not a spontaneous emigration. The less industrious class of colored men (what might be termed the floating populace) were duped by the representation that they would get $1.50 per day in Indiana and a new suit of clothes, together with goverment aid of some sort as they passed through Washington, and they were similarly deceived by false representations contained in circulars purporting to be issued by railroad companies in Kansas and elswhere. In the course of his testimony he expressed the opinion that the intelligent negro of the south has more to fear from white republicans in the south than from democrats. He explained this on the ground that white republicans want all the offices themselves, and if colored men claim a division, they combine against the negro. In this way, he said, he had been counted out from his election as congressman, because he had opposed a white republican's candidacy for the nomination as sheriff.

M. T. Lowman, sheriff of Putman county, Indiana, a resident of Greencastle, Ind, was sworn, and produced a printed circular which he obtained from one of the North Carolina emigrants after he had reached Greencastle. This circular, it was afterward proven by another witness, had been printed in the office of the Greencastle Banner during the latter part of last July, and that the editor of that paper, J. H. Clay, colored, was the author of it. This circular, Lowman said he was informed by a colored man who gave it to him, had been circulated quite extensively among the colored people in North Carolina. It urges them to come to Indiana, setting forth the attractions of that state, stating that its climate was healthful; that free schools for both races were maintained; that there were numerous colored churches, and that the blacks and whites stand equal before the law, and also stating that thousands of good farm hands and house servants could readily find employment at remunerative wages, especially urging those who contemplate coming to do so the present summer and fall (of 1879), so as to get located in time to make their contract with the farmers next year.

Miscegenation.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Sentinel.

SIR: Will you please write an article on miscegenation? The ladies of this town, democrats and republicans, ask it as a favor. The ladies look upon the Journal of your city as a miscegenation paper, because it has said that nobody's daughters demand white husbands or none, except those of democrats. In view of the great number of negroes now coming to Indiana, the Journal's position is regarded as exceedingly objectionable.

A FRIEND OF WOMEN.

Monticello, Ind., Jan. 20.

We are aware that the Journal's vile innuendo, that the daughters of republicans do not demand white husbands or none, has created a profound sensation throughout Indiana. The intimation is so vile, so filthy, so abominably nasty, so repulsive, so libidinous, so prurient, that republican women feel that a most damnable insult has been offered them. But what is miscegenation? Webster defines it as follows:

["Latin; miscere, to mix, and genere, to beget; a mixing of races; amalgamation. A recent and ill-formed word; it should be miscegeneration."]

With this definition in view, it will be well to quote the Journal of December 4, 1879:

"NOBODY'S DAUGHTERS DEMAND WHITE HUSBANDS OR NONE, EXCEPT THOSE OF DEMOCRATS."

To mix races is what miscegenation means. It is for negro men to marry white women, and for white men to marry negro women. It means to pollute white blood with negro blood. It means a mixture of hair and wool; flat noses with Roman and Grecian noses; to make thick lips thin, and thin lips thick; to take off some of the negro's heel and splice on to the white man's heel. It means yellow instead of blonde, and to deepen the tinge of the brunette to darkness. It means to fill the land with hybridism and a race of human mongrels. It means that the Caucasian blood shall mingle with the negro blood, and that the most exhalted of the human race shall be brought down to the level of the most inferior race. It means to bridge the chasm which the Creator's fiat placed between the white and black races, and that the sublime in human nature and in human aspirations shall abandon its upward march and grovel in the abominations of miscegenation; and what, we ask, is better calculated to bring about this new era of abominations than to declare "that nobody's daughters demand white husbands or none, except those of democrats."

Indiana is not praying for such a reign of filth. It is not true that "nobody's daughters demand white husbands or none, except those of democrats." In the name of the daughters of republicans, we repel the Journal's innuendo. But the singular feature about this monstrous intimation of the Journal is that it should have been made at a time when negro republican kidnappers were in North Carolina concocting the most infamous falsehoods to induce pauper negroes to immigrate to Indiana; and while this execrable business was going on in North Carolina, republican papers in Indiana were endeavoring to show that the barefaced lying of the black scamps in North Carolina was truth; and it was at this juncture that the Journal declared that "nobody's daughters demand white husbands or none, except those of democrats." Was this language used as an inducement for pauper negroes to immigrate to Indiana? The daughters of republicans feel justly indignant; they feel the insult keenly, and the report has gone abroad to the detriment of Indiana. The Sentinel has done what it could to correct the Journal's intimation, but it seems that the more the republicans think about it the madder they become.

No Home for Him Without Power.

[New York Sun.]

Gen. Grant, who has changed from a simple, honest, hard-drinking woodsman into a man of the most insatiable ambition, cannot bear to spend even a few months in his native land unless he is in office.

He tried very hard to get nominated for a third term before; but his party, which had some principle at that time, frowned upon the attempt to disregard a time-hallowed tradition. Then Grant went abroad and remained until near the expiration of his successor's term. He came home and was able to stand this republican atmosphere for a short time. But with the monarchical notions he had imbibed he soon got tired of it, and repaired to Cuba, where he could bask in royal favor.

The first news from him is that this man who could not find time to be at the deathbed of his more than friend and brother, Gen. Rawlins, or at the deathbed of his own fond and honored father, has found time to send a cable telegram to the king of Spain, congratulating him on some royal occasion.

Would-be-king to king!

He who hurrahs for a third term is no true American. Mark that; and regard as an enemy of your country every man from whose throat such a hurrah comes without choking him.

THE BOOMING BROOMSTICK.

A Bishop Beautifully Belabored by a Bouncing Woman.

[Salt Lake Tribune.]

The other day a little flurry was created on one of our principal streets by the sight of a dignified and portly individual, no less a personage, in fact, than one of the bishops of the church of J. C. of L. D. S., rushing along the sidewalk in breathless haste, closely followed by an indignant woman armed with a broom. Twice or thrice in the course of the pursuit the flying bishop recieved a well-directed blow from this weapon, which had the effect of causing him to break into a mad gallop which he kept up until he disappeared around the nearest corner. An inquiry as to the meaning of this unusual spectacle developed the following facts:

A good saint, whom we will call brother Jones, because that isn't his name, has resided in Salt Lake City many years, and accumulated considerable property, but he has always lived beneath his religious privileges, and contented himself with one wife. On the day referred to the bishop, feeling called upon to admonish him with regard to his glorious privileges of the Later-day dispensation, called at his home and reproved him, in the presence of his wife, telling him that his chances of exaltation would be slim indeed if he did not set about looking up another spouse at once. Sister Jones only waited to hear him finish the first sentence of the latter portion of his admonition, then seizing the broom, she exclaimed:

"Get out of this, you villain; I'll teach you to come into an honest woman's house and advise her husband to take another wife. Take that, and that"—laying the broom-handle vigorously about his head and shoulders. The wretched bishop grabbed his hat and made for the door, but before he could reach it the blows fell thick and fast on his defenseless head. Once outside, he thought himself safe, but he discovered his mistake. Nemesis was behind him in the shape of that broom, and his flight—through the gait and down the street—was accelerated every few steps in the way we have described. When he reached home and counted up his bruises, he registered a vow. Henceforth when he counsels an erring brother he will choose his opportunity more wisely, and the admonitions that he gives on Celestial marriage will be uttered far from the hearing of indignant wives armed with brooms.

A SMART MAN.

[Richmond Herald.]

Jesse Lovely, while out west, was in search of a man whom he wished to see on a matter of business. After riding for half a day and losing the way in that sparsely settled country, he drew up his steed in front of a log cabin. A female came to the door. "Will you be kind enough to tell me, Miss, where Mr Wm. Humphrey lives?" said Jesse. "I don't know," very blandly replied the young lady, "but Squire Roberts, who lives about half a mile from here, can tell you. He is a very smart man." Jesse rode on in the direction the fair enchantress indicated. Coming to the house, he cried out. "Hello!" The squire, with his shirt collar open, his spectacles on top of head and his pants in his boots, made his appearance at the door. "I are he," said the squire with an air of importance that would have been more becoming to a king. "Squire Roberts," said Jesse, "can you tell me where William Humphrey lives?" "I kin," said the squire in a self-gratulatory manner that he was able to answer the question, and proceeded, "If he are where I anticipated he are, he are forty miles distant on Peter Creek. Although his residence are exclusively adjacent to mine, I know nothing of his wharefores or his whichabouts." Jesse waved his hand in polite salutation to the squire and rode on to find his man as best he could with the information he had recieved from the squire to whom the blushing maid had directed him as the servant of her section.

The Wisdom of Dumas.

Brunettes decieve—blondes betray.

Give money, but never lend it. Giving it only makes a man ungrateful; lending it makes him an enemy.

If men would spend in doing good to others a quarter of the money they spend in doing harm to themselves, misery would vanish from the earth.

Man was created to utilize everything—even sorrow.

A woman's venality is the punishment of the man that buys her.

The only thing I am astonished at is that people are astonished at anything.

AGENTS WANTED

THE NEW STYLE

$25 FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.

THE USUAL $85 MACHINE REDUCED TO 25.

$150 per Week Made Easy.

Horse and Wagon Free to Agt's

The CHEAPEST and BEST in the World.

Too Long in Use to Doubt its Superior MERITS

No Money to Pay until Machine is Delivered to you and Examined.

It makes the shuttle, double-thread, lock-stitch, (the same on both sides of the work), which received the highest reward at the Centennial exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., 1876. And is complete with a larger assortment of attachments for fine work than any other machine, and reduced to only $25.

It is an easy and pleasant machine to operate, requires the least care, produces every variety of work, and will last until the next century begins. Strong, simple, rapid and efficient.

Use it once and you will use no other. The money cheerfully refunded if it will not outwork and outlast any machine at double the price.

Agents sell them faster than any other in consequence of their being the "best at the lowest price."

Each machine thoroughly warranted with written guarantee for five years. Kept in order free of charge; money refunded at once if not satisfactory.

It is the most solid, reliable, and satisfactory machine ever invented for all kinds of family work. It is an acknowleged unequivocal mechanical success, thoroughly tested and used in thousands of homes. An efficient, silent, rapid, reliable and ever-ready helper to the weary wife or seamstress, it will do the work of a family for a lifetime, or it will earn from $4 to $5 per day for any one who wishes to sew for a living. This machine costs less than half the price of any new machine of like quality. Has extra long, large-sized shuttle, easily removed. Extra large sized bobbins, holding 100 yards of thread, doing away with the frequent rewinding of bobbins. It is built for strength and constant hard work. Interchangeable working parts, manufactured of fine polished steel. Will run for years without repairs; is simple to learn, easy to manage, understood perfectly in an hour, and always ready in a moment to do every description of heavy or fine work, at less cost or trouble than any other machine at any price ever did or can do. It will sew anything a needle can pierce, from lace or cambric to heavy cloth or harness, with any kind of thread, and will run off twenty yards per minute; it uses strong, straight needles, and never breaks them. It cannot miss or drop a stitch, ravel or break the thread. If you have any other machine, buy this and have a better one. The ease and rapidity of its motion and quality of its work, are its best recommendations. It will hem, fell, tuck, braid, cord, bind, gather, quilt, ruffle, pleat, fold, scallop, shirr, roll, baste, embroider, run up braids, etc, with elegance, ease and quickness, unsurpassed by any machine ever invented.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

The price for our new machines are less than those asked by dealers in second-hand, rebuilt and refinished machines, or those selling out old stock to close up business, many such inferior and old style machines being offered as new at reduced prices; beware of imposition and only buy new machines. There are no new first-class machines offered as low as the "FAMILY," by many dollars.

Machines Sent for Examination Before Payment of Bill.

Extraordinary inducements offered to clergymen, teachers, storekeepers, etc., to act as agents. Horse and wagon furnished free. For testimonials see descriptive books, mailed free with samples of work, liberal terms, circulars, etc. Address

FAMILY SEWING MACHINE CO.

755 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Pause, Ponder and Pruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others. The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infinitesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company. Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, New York, New York. 43-1y.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

Two HEAVY freight trains collided between Cameron and Sterling, Pa., on the Philadelphia and Erie railroad. Engineer Dean, of the train going west, the fireman, and the head brakeman on the train going east were killed, and three tr in-hands were so badly injured that they cannot live.

AFTER two trials on the charge of murdering Mary Stannard, the Rev. Mr. Hayden has been released on $5,000 bail. It is hardly to be expected that he will again be tried unless new and positive evidence against him should hereafter be discovered.... A dispatch from Providence, R. I., says that a party of boys playing on the ice on Randall's pond, near North Providence line, broke through and were drowned.

MRS. MARY R. LINDERMEIER died at Philadelphia, last week, of hydrophobia, after four days of indescribable agony.

THE WEST.

A CHICAGO desperado named Davis entered a private residence at midday and at the point of a pistol compelled the lady of the house to divulge where her husband's money was secreted. Within three days he was on his way to the State penitentiary under a fifteen years' sentence.

THE building occupied by the Globe printing office, at Cherry Vale, Kan., with sleeping-rooms on the upper floors, and a furniture store below, burned a few days ago, and E. C. Henderson, foreman, and William McCain, a printer of the Globe office, perished in the flames.

INTELLIGENCE comes from Las Vega, New Mexico, of a bloody battle between citizens and a party of cow-boys. The latter rode into town late at night, intending to wreak vengeance on the City Marshal, whom they found at a dance. After the exchange of a few shots the officer fell, mortally wounded. The lights were then put out, and the fight continued in the dark, the friends of the dead man taking a hand. When the combat ended, it was found that two of the attackers had been killed. The rest, some of them wounded, no doubt, made their escape.

LARGE audiences were the rule at McVicker's Chicago Theater last week, the attraction being the Boston Theater company in "Drink," an intensely realistic and exciting drama. The company giving this play could scarcely be improved upon, and the performance throughout is one of the most powerful and artistic ever seen in Chicago. The play is put upon the stage in a style rarely equaled at any theater, and which, for completeness and painstaking detail, cannot be surpassed. Drink" is retained all the present week.

IT is reported that the Atchison and Nebraska road has been leased to the Burlington and Missouri River railroad in Nebraska, and has thereby become a branch of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad.... The Mississippi River Improvement Committee, after a somewhat protracted session at St. Louis, adjourned until the 14th of February, when it will reassemble in Washington, presenting its report to Congress about the 1st of March. This document will recommend the carrying out of plans made by the committee, and ask for an appropriation of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 for that purpose.

A SUMMARY of the crimes committed in Chicago during seventy-six days (says the Times of that city), shows that there have been eleven assaults which have resulted in death; eight which have not yet terminated fatally, but which are likely to do so, and miscellaneous stabbings, punchings, and gougings too numerous to mention.

ADVICES from New Mexico report that Maj. Morrow has been compelled to temporarily abandon the pursuit of Victoria's bloodthirsty band of savages, on account of a lack of commissary supplies. The command had been in the mountains without rations for ten days, and were fighting daily. In the last two days of the fight Maj. Morrow captured 100 horses and mules. The Indians abandoned large quantities of property stolen in Mexico, bolts of calico, cotton cloths, etc. Maj. Morrow is reported as having punished the Indians severely. It is thought, judging from the number, that the band is composed of all the Indians who have been living in Mexico.

HORACE THOMPSON, one of the wealthiest and most prominent citizens of St. Paul, Minn., died of pneumonia, last week, in New York, where he had gone. He with his wife and daughter and a party of Western friends were on a pleasure excursion.... Nearly every day numbers of Southern negroes pass through Kansas City, bound for Kansas. Most of them are well-nigh penniless.

THE SOUTH.

BY the falling of a building being raised at Opelika, Ala., four colored men and one white man were crushed to death.

ISLEY and Joseph Presswood, while under the influence of whisky, quarreled about a girl at Sweetwater, Monroe county, Tenn. Joseph, during the difficulty, drew his revolver and shot Isley through the heart. The murderer then fled, and has not been found.

THERE is no abatement, but apparently a steady increase, of the negro exodus from the South. Colored immigrants arriving in St. Louis en route for Kansas report that great numbers are waiting on the banks of the Mississippi river for passage on steamboats that will take them to the North; and it is said that if they are refused transportation by the boats they will form huge caravans and make their way on foot to the land of promise. In Indiana the arrivals are on the increase, and a great deal of sickness and suffering is said to prevail among the new-comers.... The steamer Charmer, with 2,100 bales of cotton, was totally destroyed by fire, in Red river, near Bayou Sara, La. Eight lives were lost—two chambermaids, two cooks, two cabin boys, one fireman, and one deck hand. The boat and cargo were valued at $130,000.

IN consequence of Maj. E. A. Burke, State Treasurer of Louisiana and editor of the New Orleans Democrat, asserting in his paper that Maj. Hearsey, formerly an editor of the same paper, was a liar, and in consequence of the bitter reply made by Hearsey, a duel was fought by the two "Majahs" on the Metairie Ridge, a famous dueling ground near the Crescent City. After firing two shots each friends interposed, and the difficulty was adjusted.

A WAR of races has broken out in Shenandoah county, Va., where the proprietors of several iron furnaces are endeavoring to substitute black for white labor. Several riots have occurred, and the Governor has directed a local militia company to assist the Sheriff in preserving the peace.

GENERAL.

GENS. GRANT and Sheridan arrived at Havana Jan. 22, and received a cordial welcome on the part of the authorities and people. They were given quarters in the Captain General's palace. Gen. Grant intends to visit Hayti and one or two other adjacent islands, and expects to sail for Vera Cruz on the 11th of February.... De Lesseps is soon to visit New York. He is confident of his ability to raise in France twice the amount of money needed for the Panama canal, and his faith in the success of the project is evidently unbounded.

GEN. GRANT arrived in Cuba just in time to experience a shock of earthquake. Nothing of the kind ever occurred in the island before, and many of the frightened people of Havana passed the night in the public squares.

BISHOP SIMPSON, of the Methodist Church, is the last claimant of the honor of suggesting Sherman's "March to the Sea," conflicting views as to which have culminated in the libel suit of Gen. Boynton against Gen. Sherman. The Bishop narrates that just after the battle of Lookout Mountain he expressed to Gen. Grant wonderment that no effort had been made to cut the Confederacy in twain by sending a force across the mountains of Tennessee to the Atlantic coast.

THE Chicago Times says "it is generally believed in New York that wheat must come down. Although prices have declined of late, grain is still too high for export, and ocean freights are so low that cargoes cannot be carried except at a loss."

JAY GOULD has been elected, President of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, thus bringing it into the Wabash system.

WASHINGTON.

THE visit of the Ute chief Ouray and his companions to Washington has apparently been satisfactory to him and Secretary Schurz, so far as promises are concerned. The present understanding is that the Utes shall abandon the greater part of their immense reservation, and be allotted land in severalty in the Grand River valley. The Colorado Senators were inclined to insist on the removal of the Indians from the State, but, as Ouray intimated that he would fight before he would leave, the suggestion was not pressed. Pledges have again been given that the murderers of Thornburgh and Meeker shall be given up.

LEEDS, ex-chief clerk of the Indian Bureau, testified before the Senate committee appointed to investigate the removal of the Cheyennes to the Indian Territory, and their outbreak, that it was a fact, as claimed by the Cheyennes, that they were starved at the agency, and that, although Commissioner Hayt knew the facts, he did not furnish the Agent with the supplies called for by the treaty. For the five weeks previous to the outbreak of the Cheyennes in September, 1878, the amount of food they received varied from twelve to twenty ounces daily each, while the treaty specified twenty-eight ounces. Leeds pointed out serious inaccuracies in Hayt's statement of the food furnished to these Indians.... Senator Johnston, of Virginia, and Speaker Randall are confident that Congress will adjourn by the 15th of April.

GEN. ADAMS left Washington for Colorado last week, with Jack and Sowerick, of the White River Utes, and Wash, an Uncompahgre. Jack and his companion are charged with the delicate duty of bringing in the twelve guilty White River Utes, dead or alive. Wash carries the orders of Ouray to his tribe, who are to do all in their power to assist Jack in his undertaking. Adams will take no part in the actual work of capturing or killing these outlaws. That work is left wholly to the Indians themselves.

POLITICAL.

THE Tammany Democrats of New York held a conference at Albany a few days ago. The resolutions adopted "affirm the undoubted right of Democrats to reject the nomination, made by a party convention, of a candidate who is offensive to a considerable body of the party, but we see nothing in the past or present circumstances of the party in New York to prevent its uniting upon a candidate fairly nominated who is acceptable to all sections of the party".... The working up of a Blaine boom in Ohio has been begun in Columbus by the organization of a stalwart Republican Club, having for its object the promotion of the Presidential prospects of the Maine Senator.

THE Blaine boom is a-booming in Pennsylvania. It is said the press of Western Pennsylvania is solid for him.... The Boston Transcript, which is a sturdy opponent of Grant's renomination, publishes interviews with a number of leading business men of Boston, all of whom declare a third term contrary to the genius of our institutions.... The delegates to the Pennsylvania Convention have been chosen in Philadelphia, and a poll shows that fourteen are for Blaine, thirteen have no choice, four are for Blaine or Grant, three are for Grant, three are for Conkling, one is for Hayes, one is for McManes, one is for Blaine or Washburne, and six are undetermined..... A New York dispatch says that some leading politicians profess to believe that Gen. Grant will have the votes of fully four-fifths of New York's delegation to the Chicago Convention, and that the remainder of the vote will be cast for Sherman. They think that Grant will be nominated by the votes of New York and Pennsylvania, and two or three smaller Northern States, added to those of the entire South.... The Nebraska editors in convention have cast their Presidential preferences as follows: Nine for Blaine, six for Grant, and one each for Sherman, Seymour, Washburne, Bayard, Butler, Gen. Hancock, Vic Woodhull, Bessie Turner and Chief Ouray.

GEN. GARFIELD has written a letter, in reply to an inquiry by Ohio State Senator Horr, on the subject of the Presidency, in which he expresses the hope that Ohio will, as a unit, present and press the name of John Sherman to the Chicago Convention.

THE vacancies in the New York Democratic Committee have been filled by Tilden men, thus securing to the ex-Governor absolute control of the opening proceedings of the State Convention. It is said the Kellyites will send a separate delegation to the National Convention.... It is thought that Philadelphia has the best chance for securing the National Democratic Convention.

FOREIGN.

TWENTY-SIX Home-Rule members of Parliament, at a meeting at Dublin the other day, adopted resolutions declaring their sympathy with, and promising their legitimate support to, the tenantry struggling to retain possession of their lands.... Affairs in Afghanistan are in a very muddled and critical condition. The natives are massing their forces to expel the invaders, and it is likely that they will at least make it exceedingly uncomfortable for them.... French scientists have no doubt of the success of Edison's electric-light experiments. They regard him as one of the greatest inventors the world has ever produced, and predict for him a lofty pinnacle of fame when his present critics and detractors shall have been forgotten.

THE earthquakes in Cuba are causing much alarm among the inhabitants of the island.... The Nationalists of the County Mayo, Ireland, have decided to start Michael Davitt and Thomas Brennan, under indictment for sedition, as the candidates of the county for Parliament, on the understanding that if elected they shall not take their seats. The prospects of their election are considered good.... A basin of petroleum, said to be as large and rich as the one in Pennsylvania, has been discovered in Hanover, Germany.... The death of Mohammed Jan, the Afghan leader, is reported from India.... Gen. Garibaldi, in a communication, has thanked King Humbert that Italian laws enabled him to obtain a divorce from a wife with whom he never lived, and to marry the woman who is the mother of his children. The King is said to have sent a cordial reply.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

MR. Morgan offered a resolution in the Senate, Jan. 22, which was adopted, calling on the Interior Department for information in regard to land grants. Mr. Teller offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Secretary of the Interior to inform the Senate whether any member of the Board of Indian Commissioners had become interested in Indian contracts. It was resolved that when the Senate adjourned to-day it be to meet Monday. The Bayard resolution was taken up, and Mr. Coke, of Texas, made a speech thereon. Mr. Ferry presented a resolution authorizing the sale or lease of the Gratiot military reservation. A bill was introduced by Mr. McMillan to protect the navigability of navigable rivers, and prevent deposits of saw-dust and other materials therein. The President withdrew the nomination of William P. Seymour as Census Supervisor of the —— district of Indiana.... In the House Mr. Buckner's bill, requiring the national banks to keep one-half of their reserves in coin met with a defeat, the motion to engross the bill receiving only 79 votes to 158 in the negative. The House then went into committee of the whole upon the rules, when considerable fun was evolved out of the dry subject by Messrs. Frye and Cox.

The House was in session on Jan. 23, not very much business being transacted, however. Bills introduced: By Mr. McLane, providing that there shall be established a sinking fund in the treasury of the United States, into which the Central Pacific road shall pay $1,200,000 per annum, and the Union Pacific $850,000 yearly; by Mr. Springer, authorizing certain books and mementoes in possession of the Government to be placed in Memorial Hall of the Lincoln Monument Association, Springfield, Ill., which was passed; by Mr. McCook, a joint resolution, which passed, for the erection of a military storehouse at Omaha. The Speaker announced the appointment of the following special committee on payment of bounties, pensions, and back pay: Coffroth, Geddes, Myers, McMillan, Harmer, Caswell, and Thomas. Mr. Henderson, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a resolution, which was passed, calling on the Secretary of War for information relative to the obstructions in the harbor at Rock Island, Ill. A number of private bills were passed. Mr. Hoar, of Michigan, replied to Mr. Cox's sarcastic speech of the day before in the same vein, and Mr. Hawley arose to a question of privilege upon the report in the Globe, which he claimed misrepresented his remarks.

In the Senate, on assembling Jan. 26, the Vice President presented a communication from the Secretary of the Navy in answer to a resolution, stating the interests of the country and the naval service require that the Pensacola navy yard be put in a state of efficiency, at the estimated cost of $676,907, $86,709 of the amount being necessary for rebuilding marine barracks destroyed during the war. The bill to locate and purchase a new site for a United States naval observatory passed. A bill was presented for an appropriation of $100,000 for a headquarters building on the Fort Snelling reservation. Petitions were presented against the Detroit bridge and for other objects. The Judiciary Committee reported adversely upon the repeal of existing laws for the removal of causes from State to Federal courts, so as to confine the jurisdiction of the latter to cases arising under the constitution and laws of the United States. The President nominated Pascal P. Kidder to be Collector of Customs of the District of Dunkirk, N. Y.; Ryude Lawler to be Collector of Internal Revenue of the Fourth District of Missouri; John Cook, of Illinois, to be United States Indian Agent at Rosebud Agency, Dakota; Milo A. Boynton, of Michigan, to be United States Indian Agent at Moquis Pueblo Agency, Arizona; Luther Harris, of Pennsylvania, to be principal clerk on private land claims at the General Land Office.... In the House, the Clerk presented the credentials of J. F. Philips, Representative-elect from the Seventh Congressional District of Missouri, and Mr. Phillips took the iron clad oath. Among the bills introduced and referred were the following: By Mr. Manning, providing that the number of Justices of the United States Supreme Court be increased to twenty-one, divided into three divisions, and presided over by one Chief Justice and two Assistant Chief Justices, to be appointed by the President from Associate Justices; by Mr. Garner, to establish a United States Superior Court, and to abolish the Court of Claims; by Mr. Ross, appointing George B. McClellan Manager of the National Soldiers' Home for Disabled Volunteers; by Mr. Sparks, for the appointment of Gen. Palmer as Manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers; by Mr. Bragg, for the appointment of Maj. D. W. Fulton as Manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers; by Mr. Garfield, to reorganize the Inspectors General Department; by Mr. Valentine, for the appointment of a commission to ascertain and report the losses sustained by the citizens on account of Indian depredations; by Mr. Urner, for a monument to F. S. Key, author of the "Star-Spangled Banner;" by Mr. Mason (by request), to incorporate the Cosmo-American Colonization and General Improvement Bureau in the United States. Mr. Kelley's resolution was adopted which declares the negotiation of commercial treaties by the President unconstitutional. Mr. Springer introduced a bill amendatory of the Election laws, which provides that before the appointment of Supervisors of Elections is made the Circuit Court shall cause notice of petition of citizens for such Supervisors to be served on the Congressional candidates of the two largest parties, and the court shall appoint for each voting precinct one Supervisor on recommendation of each of such candidates. It also provides that all applications for the appointment of Special Deputy Marshals shall be submitted to the Circuit Court, and before the appointment of any Marshals notice shall be served on the candidates of the two political parties casting the greatest number of votes at the election for Congress; and also that an equal number of appointments for each voting precinct shall be made on the recommendation of each candidate. It repeals all laws which authorize the arrest of any person violating any United States Election law without warrant, and provides that no law shall authorize any Supervisor of Election or any United States Marshal to interfere in any manner with judges or inspectors of elections.

The bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter was reported back to the Senate on the 27th of January by the Military Committee, with a favorable report; a minority report was also presented. Mr. Edmunds offered a resolution, which was agreed to, instructing the Committee on Judiciary to inquire whether, in the settlement of adjustment between the United States and certain railroads, any discrimination has been made in favor of one or more such companies as against others, and if so, what further legislation on the subject is expedient. Mr. Pendleton introduced a bill to authorize the appointment of medical inspectors in the navy to the office of the Chief of Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and to remove the disability of the present incumbent. A number of petitions were presented in favor of the Weaver Bounty bill. Bills were introduced and referred as follows: By Mr. Butler, to incorporate the Cosmo-American Colonization and General Improvement Bureau; by Mr. Coke, providing for the payment of the awards made to the Creek Indians who enlisted in the Federal army, loyal refugees and freedmen; by Mr. Wallace, to increase the pensions of all wounded soldiers of the War of 1812 who now receive less than $15 per month; by Mr. Logan, to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods; a joint resolution to increase the officers of the army allowed to be detailed as professors of military science at colleges and universities; by Mr. Teller, to regulate Indian affairs. Mr. Bayard then made a carefully-prepared speech upon financial matters, taking his anti-legal-tender resolution as the subject. It was a pronounced hard-money document.... In the House, a bill was passed appropriating $100,000 for a monument at Yorktown, and $20,000 toward the centenary celebration. A bill passed setting apart for park purposes certain lands in California on which are growing the "red wood" or "big trees;" also a bill for the relief of certain actual settlers on the Kansas trust and diminished reserved lands in Kansas. The House then went into committee of the whole upon the rules, with the five-minute rule in force.

As soon as the journal was read in the Senate on the 28th of January, Mr. Ferry presented the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted: Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Zachariah Chandler, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Michigan, and for nearly nineteen years a member of this body. Resolved, That to express some estimate laid of his eminent services in a long public career, rendered conspicuous by a fearless, patriotic devotion, the business of the Senate be now suspended, that the associates of the departed Senator may pay fitting tribute to his public and private virtues. Resolved, That the loss the country sustained in the death of Mr. Chandler was manifest by expressions of public sorrow throughout the land. Resolved, That, as a mark of respect for the memory of the dead Senator, the members of the Senate will wear crape upon the left arm for thirty days. Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives. Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn. Mr. Ferry then delivered a eulogy upon the public and private life of the deceased at considerable length. The following Senators followed in shorter addresses laudatory of the late Senator from Michigan, after which the body adjourned: Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Hamlin, Blaine, Logan, Wallace, Conkling, Hoar, Morrill, Ransom, Blair, Cameron and Baldwin.... In the House, the Committee on Postoffices and Post-Roads reported a bill declaring all public roads and highways post-routes. After some discussion the vote on seconding the demand for the previous question resulted 83 to 44. No quorum. The House passed the following bills: Granting a pension to the widow of Lieut. Hiram H. Benner, and appropriating $4,100 for the erection of a monument to Gen. Herkimer. The Senate bill appropriating $75,000 for the purchase of a new site for the United States Naval Observatory was taken from the Speaker's table and passed, with an amendment providing that, if practicable, the site shall be on an even degree of longitude west of Greenwich. Mr. Brewer offered a resolution calling on the Supervising Architect of the Treasury for information as to the number of public buildings now in process of erection, or which may have been completed within the last three years, and reasons why such buildings have cost, or will cost, more than the amount limited by law. Mr. Davis introduced a bill imposing a tax on smoking opium, etc. The morning hour having expired, the House went into committee of the whole on the revision of the rules. A message was received from the Senate, transmitting the resolutions adopted by that body relative to the late Senator Chandler. Speeches were then made in eulogy of the late Senator by Messrs. Newberry, Williams, Hubbell, Brewer, Conger, Burrows, Hawley, Dunnell, Stone, Keifer, Briggs, Crapo, Barber, Willets, and Garfield.

SENATE EXODUS INVESTIGATION.

Synopsis of the Testimony Elicited by the Voorhees Committee.

J. P. Dukehart, Southern Passenger Agent of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, testified that he went to North Carolina to get the transportation of the emigrants for his line, and got it. He made a contract with a negro named Evans to work up the exodus, the railroad paying Evans $1 for each full ticket, and 50 cents for each half ticket it sold through his agency. Reports were circulated among the colored people that work was abundant in Indiana at $1.50 a day. The railroad company sold in all 763 tickets, of which 235 were for children under 12, and the total number of adult males transported was about 200. H. W. Mendenhall, of Indiana, a clerk in the Treasury Department, testified that he assisted in organizing the Emigrant Aid Society about a year ago. He thought the movement would become quite extensive. He had stated if Indiana could offer any inducements to negro emigrants it would be well to have them go there, as they were generally Republicans, and would strengthen the Republican party. Witness did not know of any Republican politicians in Indiana engaged in the movement as a political measure.

Warren C. Fearing, colored, employe of one of the executive departments at Washington, and Secretary of the Emigrant Aid Society, testified that he had received letters from his relatives in North Carolina reporting that the colored people of that State received very low wages, and were dissatisfied with their treatment and wanted to emigrate.

Charles N. Otuy, colored, editor of the Washington Argus, a weekly paper devoted to the interests of the colored race, and Principal of the Howard University school, testified that he is a native of North Carolina, graduate of Oberlin College and of Howard University; that he has visited his native State every year since he left it, and has made a careful study of her people. He said he was one of the founders of the National Emigrant Aid Society, but when he became satisfied that it was being used as a political machine he withdrew from it. The witness did not know but the exodus from other Southern States would be a blessing to the colored race, but from North Carolina, where he was well acquainted, he was satisfied that "it was a fraud and a curse." Every intelligent colored man in the State, and the six colored newspapers in North Carolina, were fighting it. There was an adequate motive, he said, for the colored people of that State to abandon their homes, and the delusion under which they now labor was attributed to deceitful agents from the North.

THE UTE INVESTIGATION.

Resume of the Testimony Taken by the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

The testimony of Lieut. Cherry, who was with Maj. Thornburgh's command in the Milk creek fight, refuted most of the statements of the Ute savages respecting that affair. He was present at the conference between the Major and Jack, and says that the former made it very clear that the troops would halt some distance from the agency, and not go nearer unless called on by Meeker. The first shot was fired by the Indians, and was aimed at Cherry, but it missed him and killed a soldier who stood beside him. The Lieutenant declared that Thornburgh was confident from the first that the Utes meant to attack him, and was tempted at one time to hold several of them then in his camp as hostages, but was afraid to assume the responsibility of such action.

Miss Josie Meeker's testimony before the committee was to the effect that the Indians were incited to the outbreak by their intense native aversion to take on civilized modes of life. They argued that, if once they began to plow the land and raise stock, they would be expected to continue in the new life. Their young men would grow up with no taste for the chase and the wild, savage life which has characterized them for centuries. Another hardship would be the stoppage of Government annuities, which is now the sweetest boon to the Indians of Colorado. Thornburgh may have acted with too great precipitancy, and his campaign threw the Utes into great consternation.

Miss Meeker said that a good many of the soldiers were furiously drunk at the time of the Thornburgh fight. There were barrels of whisky in the vicinity to which the soldiers had full access. At the time of the massacre of her father the Indians were in liquor. She denied that the exchange of the 18,000 acres for 7,000 acres by the Southern Utes could have furnished the pretext for the outrage, because the White River Utes lost nothing by the exchange. More than that, they professed to be glad that their Southern brethren had been outwitted. "If you had held on to your land as we do, you would not now suffer," said they, in derision. She also disposed of the story of the Fort Rawlins affair, wherein it is alleged by Leeds and Gen. Fisk that the Indians were deprived of food and clothing for a long time. She said that this never affected the White River Utes in the least, and that they never made it the basis of a complaint.

An Apology.

A colored cook, expecting company of her kind, was at a loss how to entertain her friends. Her mistress said: "Chloe, you must make an apology." "La, missus! how can I make it? I got no apples, no eggs, no nuffin, to make it wid."

THE MAINE MUDDLE.

Nothing of interest transpired at the Maine State capital, on the 22d. The Fusionist Legislature discussed the propriety of removing to Biddeford, the Mayor of that city having offered to protect the Legislature, should it hold its sessions there. In the Republican House resolutions were introduced and referred providing for the election of a Governor, beginning with this year, by a plurality instead of a majority vote. The Fusionists were still in possession of the Treasury Department, and the Republicans were counseling together regarding what course they should pursue to get possession of the money-bags. Nearly all the available State funds being deposited in a Boston bank, subject to the order of the Fusion Treasurer, it would require the signature of that functionary to draw any of them out.

The Republicans at the Maine capital were somewhat excited on the 23d by reports that the Fusionists intended to forcibly seize and occupy the State House, and Gov. Davis called out three companies of militia, with which he garrisoned the Capitol. The Republican Legislature adopted the resolutions providing for an amendment to the constitution making a plurality sufficient to elect in gubernatorial contests. The Fusion Legislature tabled the proposition to submit questions to the Supreme Court. The Republicans were concentrating a large militia force at the Capitol, and there were reports that the Fusionists were to be dispersed at the point of the bayonet.

The situation at Augusta, Me., as outlined in the dispatches of Jan. 24 and 25, was about as follows: Republican Gov. Davis had garrisoned the State Capitol thoroughly, and had a Gatling gun commanding the entrance. The Republicans claimed that the Fusionists were organizing a force for capturing the State House, and were drilling in secret. The Republican Legislature adopted measures looking toward the repression of the Fusionists. The Fusionists claimed that all these preparations were made without ground, and that the scare was caused by a lot of boys pasting up three-cornered pieces of paper as a practical joke. Fusionist Gov. Smith issued a proclamation stating that his supporters contemplated no violence, and stating that the placing of troops and artillery in the State House was but another act in the military usurpation under which the State was languishing. He claimed that he was the legal Governor, and expressed the belief that his authority would soon be recognized by all good citizens. Both houses of the Fusion Legislature voted to send a series of questions to the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court of Maine rendered a decision on Jan. 27 covering the questions submitted to them by the Fusion Legislature. As was anticipated, the decision affirmed the validity of the Republican Legislature, and was adverse to the Fusionists upon every point. The opinion, which is signed by all the members of the court, concludes with these words: "A legally-organized Legislature being now in existence and exercising its constitutional functions, it follows that no convention of members-elect of either house can exist which can be treated as a nucleus for another organization. Two Governments claiming to be in existence as valid and entitled to obedience of the people, both cannot rightfully exist at the same time; but one Government can be recognized and obeyed. The responsibility and solemn duty are imposed upon us to determine which is entitled to judicial recognition. We, therefore, after due deliberation and consideration of all matters involved, affirm and declare our judgment to be that the Senate whose presiding officer is Hon. Joseph A. Locke, and the House of Representatives, whose presiding officer is Hon. George E. Weeks, constitute the legal and constitutional Legislature of the State."

The Fusion Legislature, after a prolonged secret session, adjourned on the 28th of January, to meet the first Wednesday in August next. Many of the members go home not to return here before that date; others go back to the people of their districts to abide by their decision as to joining or remaining out of the State House Legislature, while still others have taken their seats among their Republican brethren. The Republicans at once removed the militia from the State House. The Fusion Gov. Smith has gone home, and the "war" is considered at an end.

The Case of Fitz John Porter.

The minority of the House Committee on Military Affairs, consisting of A. G. McCook, of New York; B. F. Marsh, of Illinois, and Thomas M. Browne, of Indiana, in their report to Congress on the Fitz John Porter case, oppose the proposition of the majority of the committee that Porter be restored to his rank and pay. They say: "His trial was held within a month of the battle of Manassas, and when witnesses who were present on the side of the national forces were easily obtained. The movements of the armies were fresh in the minds of those interested. The court was composed of men eminent in their profession, six of them graduates of West Point, some intimate personal friends of accused, and some have become equally eminent in civil life, and nothing has been shown to convince us that they were not honestly anxious to do justice in accordance with their oaths, without partiality, favor, or affection. They conclude that Porter was without excuse for having remained so long inactive in the presence of the enemy with two fine divisions while a great battle was being fought in his vicinity, and that had he acted as he should have done, by freeing the rest of the Union line, he would probably have prevented the reverse which the latter sustained at the close of the day. The committee say they have "concluded to recommend the passage of a joint resolution removing so much of Fitz John Porter's sentence as prohibits him from holding any office of profit or trust under the Government."

Stuart's Artistic Treatment of the Eyes.

The late Henry Shaw, the father of "Josh Billings," of Lanesboro, when a young lawyer in New York city, was very intimate with Gilbert Stuart, and used to pass much time with him. Those who were acquainted with Mr. Shaw can easily imagine how a gentleman with the painter's gifts would become attached to Mr. Shaw, who was a man of rare genius, and one of the most accomplished and fascinating conversationalists that this or any other country ever produced. Stuart painted the portrait of a lady in New York who was fussy, critical, overexacting and nice to a degree that tried in the extreme his rather-excitable temperament. The portrait was changed again and again; the shade of the hair, the color of the eyes, the expression of the mouth, the pose of the head, the arrangement of the drapery, etc., were repeatedly altered at the suggestion of the lady. One day madame came in with several friends to see the portrait; and, as usual, she began to criticise, and said: "I do not think, Mr. Stuart, you have given my eyes the right expression." The patience of the artist was exhausted; he could stand no more. Walking up to the portrait, and drawing back his fist, he thrust it through the canvas, and exclaimed in blunt, but vigorous Anglo-Saxon: "Madame,—your eyes!" throwing the canvas aside—the portrait was finished. He had given it the last touch.

THE system by double entry, originally called Italian book-keeping, was taken from the course of algebra which was published by Burgo, at Venice, in the fifteenth century. It was made known in England by James Peele, in 1569.

ALL SORTS.

THE richest man in Italy is Count Telfner, who a year ago married a sister-in-law of Mackey, the American millionaire, for his second wife.

IN a lawsuit at Rushville, Ind., involving a question of paternity, a baby was put in evidence, in order to show its resemblance to the alleged father.

JAMES O'BRIEN is 41 years old, has passed twenty-two years in Pennsylvania prisons and has just been sentenced to ten more, all for robbery.

THERE are 3,000,000 working women in our country dependent on their own resources for a livelihood and such home comforts and surroundings as they can create.

THE statistician of the Agricultural Department puts this past year's increase in value over the crops of 1878 at more than $400,000,000.

THE value of farms in the United States is $11,000,000,000, and the annual product is $3,000,000,000. In four years, therefore, the farm products equal the value of the farms.

MISS ANDREWS, of Appleton, Wis., received from her father a check for $8. She raised the figures to $85, spent the money for finery, and said when arrested, "I didn't think there was any harm in doing as I pleased with my own papa's check."

A LARGE elm tree stood on the spot where a man at Lewistown, N. Y., decided to build a residence. He did not cut it down, but built around it. The odd sight is presented of a tree top growing out of the roof of a handsome residence.

THE Pope's new paper the Aurora, sells for 20 centesimi, or 4 cents, and is printed on whiter paper than any other journal in Italy. The leading articles are written by men of European reputation, and refer chiefly to social and political topics connected with religion. The type is very large.

BROOKLYN has one church for every 1,721 of population; Washington has one for every 932; Cleveland has one for every 1,044; New Orleans, one for every 1,345; Cincinnati, one for every 1,350; Baltimore, one for every 1,412, and Boston, one for every 1,665. St. Louis has one for every 1,850 of population; New York, one to 2,613.

THE tar got cold and hard while the mob was getting ready to punish James Gayton at Warren, R. I. They were out of doors on a cold night, and nobody had a match to light a fresh fire under the kettle. So they rolled the naked man in the snow until he was chilled almost to death, and let the outrage go at that.

GEN. WALKER favors the employment of women as census-takers. Without caring to discuss the merits of this scheme we wish to say that in case it is carried out future historians will be puzzled to account for the fact that in 1880 there were no unmarried women in America over 25 years old. The sex will never go back on its own members.

THE most agreeable of all companions is a simple, frank man, without any high pretensions to an oppressive greatness; one who loves life, and understands the use of it; obliging alike, at all hours; above all, of a golden temper, and steadfast as an anchor. For such an one we gladly exchange the greatest genius, the most brilliant wit, the profoundest thinker.—Lessing.

Save the Rags.

The price of paper has been advanced from 6½ to 10 cents all over the country. If this price is maintained, the public will be compelled to pay more for their newspapers. Many daily papers have already increased their price from 20 cents to 30 cents per week, and weekly papers from $1.50 to $2.00.

The advance in paper can be stopped if the people will save and sell their old paper and rags. Three months' saving of rags and old paper by the entire population, and selling them in the markets, would check the advance in paper. Rags are worth 3 to 3½ cents per pound.

Every newspaper in the land should appeal to the people in this matter. And they should also economize in the consumption as much as possible.

THE fact of the ex-Empress Carlotta being fat and well is considered by many very experienced physicians as eminently against her chances of recovery. Where the general health becomes strong, recovery is said to be rare.

SOME of the English slaveholders in Brazil find themselves in a bad fix. They have been holding slaves who ought, according to law, to have been long since manumitted, and the Brazilian Government decrees that they must give to each man wages for the whole period of such detention.

MAJ. GEN. WARREN and Capt. Cotten recently visited the battlefield of Five Forks, Va., to make a survey for use in the official investigation of the General's conduct in the fight there. The wife of the owner of the property thought their designs were evil and ordered them off. As they kept on working she leveled a musket at them and declared she would shoot if they didn't go. They went.

THE French are about to follow the lead of the Germans in introducing subterranean telegraph lines. M. Cochery, the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, recently applied to the Government for a credit of 8,000,000 francs for the establishment of underground wires along some of the principal lines to take the place of the aerial ones, in case the latter should be interrupted by the weather or other causes.

NO LESS than sixty-five railroads representing a nominal investment of $249,000,000, were sold under foreclosure during 1879. Of this amount one-third represents capital stock which has been totally lost. It is a curious fact that, during four years, one-fifth of the railway mileage and capital of the United States has changed hands by forced sale. During this year several railroads will be or have been sold. Among these is the Atlantic and Great Western, representing not less than $105,000,000.

AN indication of the augmentation at an early date of the volume of European immigration to the United States is the increase in the amount of money transmitted from this country to Great Britain, Ireland, and Germany through the international money-order system. The amount sent to Great Britain and Ireland during the last quarter of 1879 was nearly double that during the same period of 1878. To Germany the increase was not quite so proportionately large, but during the last month of the quarter it was very great. These remittances are made by the very poorest classes, as no order can exceed $50, and the average does not exceed $25.

SENATOR SHARON built a magnificent residence in San Francisco five years ago, but upon the death of his wife, shortly after he had established his family in it, he sold the building and all its furniture to W. S. O'Brien. Now the appraisers of the personal portion of that millionaire's estate have been making estimates of the value of the furniture. Senator Sharon paid $125,000 for the furniture, and, though many of the rooms have not been used a single day, the appraisers value the whole lot at $26,000. For instance, the furniture of the library, which cost $17,000, is valued at $2,700; that of the "pink room" cost $7,680 and is valued at $1,186; that of the "drab room," $5,000; value, $1,168; and that of the "green room," $4,000; value, $800.

THE abuses of the franking system in England at first were so great that we find a witness employed by the post-office giving evidence before a Parliamentary committee that, among other ridiculous articles which had been sent through the postoffice free, were: "Fifteen couple of hounds to the King of the Romans;" "Two maid servants, going out as laundresses to my Lord Ambassador Methuen;" "Dr. Crichton, carrying out with him a cow and divers other necessaries;" "A box of medicine for my Lord Galway, in Portugal;" "A deal case with flitches of bacon for Mrs. Pennington, of Rotterdam," and "Two bales of stockings for the Ambassador to the Court of Portugal." These, however, were all Government franks; but, as at that early period no limit was put to the size or weight of Parliamentary franks, there is no reason for doubting the assertion that live deer, haunches of venison, pianos, etc., had been sent free through the post by members of both houses.

THE present Irish agitation reminds a correspondent of the plan proposed by Sir John Hawkshaw, years ago, to Lord Palmerston for improving the condition of Ireland. Sir John had visited Ireland as chief of a commission to report if any engineering project could be devised which would be beneficial to Ireland, and would give profitable employment to those in need. He reported against any such scheme, but proposed to Lord Palmerston that Parliament should guarantee a bounty of £50 to every Irishman who should marry an English or Scotch woman, and the same amount to every Englishman or Scotchman who should marry an Irish woman. This proposition to breed out the difficulties was seriously entertained by Lord Palmerston's Cabinet, but, owing to his Lordship's death soon afterward, was never brought to any determination.

CONGRESSMAN BELFORD, of Colorado, has been looking up statistics in reference to Indians in the United States, and, as the results of his investigation, he finds that since the organization of the Government 929 treaties have been made with 327 tribes or bands of Indians. The total number of Indians on reservations, according to later census returns, is about 240,000, and the extent of their reservations is 236,559 square miles, or 151,397,763 acres. This would give every Indian, young and old, nearly one square mile of ground. These figures include the Indian Territory, the population of which is placed at 75,000 and its area at over 41,000,000 acres. In Dakota 27,000 Indians have nearly 35,000,000 acres, or over two square miles for each Indian. The 22,000 Indians in Montana have over 34,000 acres, while the 3,000 in Colorado have nearly 12,000,000 acres, or about six square miles for every Indian.

GOV. WESTCOTT, a somewhat singular character, died recently in Montreal, Canada. He had at one time been a gentleman of wealth and position in the South, but was driven from his native State, Florida, when the War of the Rebellion closed with the downfall of the Confederacy. From first to last he maintained the most undying contempt for what he called "Yankee institutions," and notwithstanding that his relatives were enjoying wealth and position in Florida, the Governor never would return to his native land. He was born in Alexandria, Va., in 1802, but was a scion of a well-known New Jersey family. He was a Democrat, and served, politically and in the army, under President and Gen. Jackson, and was a Judge and a Governor of Florida before its admission to the Union. He died as he had lived, in a most eccentric fashion, having said a few hours before his death, to a gentleman who attended him in his illness: "I am going to die at 2 o'clock; close my eyes and cross my arms." He, singularly enough, died accordingly. His body was embalmed, and sent to the South to his friends.

SELECTED MISCELLANY.

WEST VIRGINIA has, out of 442,014 population, 81,490 "illiterates."

A WEAK mind is like a microscope, which magnifies trifling things, but cannot receive great ones.—Chesterfield.

OUR striving against nature is like holding a weathercock with one's hand; as soon as the force is taken off it veers again with the wind.

THE more a man knows about any subject the greater will be his charity for and sympathy with views differing from his own.—Sunday Afternoon.

OUR system of thought is often only the history of our heart. Men do not so much will according to their reason as reason according to their will.

JEROME said that he had seen many who could suffer great inconvenience in their body and goods, but none that could despise their own praises.

THOMAS MORE, being sent for by the King when he was at prayers, returned answer that he would attend him when he had first performed his service to the King of Kings.

WE will not accomplish much without zeal and enterprise. But the mistake is often made of supposing that zeal is hurry, rush, recklessness and indifference. It is not so; steady momentum is often more effective than unrestrained vigor.

Carrying Pistols in Arkansas.

A man was arraigned in Little Rock on a charge of carrying a revolver.

"Haven't you got better sense than to carry a pistol like this?" asked the Judge, holding up a pepper-box pistol.

"Yes, sir."

"Don't you know that the law says you shall be fined $25?"

"Yes, sir; but I didn't know it was any harm to carry such a pistol."

"But it is, sir. Any man that would carry such a pistol ought to go to the penitentiary for life. Suppose you were to get into a fight, having such a pistol. While you were trying to shoot the other fellow would run away. You may go this time, but if I ever hear of you carrying such a worthless pistol again I'll get up a petition to the Governor and have you hung. No wonder we are slandered at the North when such trifling men as you are carrying pistols that could only hurt a man by lying on his stomach and refusing to digest."

COUNSELOR KENEALLY remarked to Counselor White, during the argument of a cause in a St. Louis court: "Your statement is essentially false." Counselor White replied to Counselor Keneally, "You are a willful and deliberate liar." Two ink-stands were quickly flung, blackening the faces and clothes of the learned gentlemen, who then clinched and fought until forcibly separated by the court officers. Judge Wickham fined them $50 apiece, which they paid. They then went into the Clerk's office, where they threw paper weights, books, heavy stamps and chairs at each other.

FARM NOTES.

PIGS need dry beds as well as other animals.

FEED the sheep well, give them fresh, pure water, and keep them out of the wet.

AMERICAN honey in the comb has become a popular article of diet in England, and very large shipments are made.

SOILS which are heavy and contain much inert vegetable matter are in England called deaf, which is a good and poetic characterization.

ENGLAND is the only country in which, for the most part, the land is owned by one man, farmed by the second and tilled by a third.

MR. WILLIAM NOLEN, of Convenience, Fayette county, Ohio, sold a calf weighing 739 pounds. He was only 8½ months old, a cross between Galloway and Devon.

MR. SEWARD, of Marengo, Ill., has learned, by actual and careful experiment, that it costs about $5 more to to make a 600-pound animal of a spring calf than it does to bring a fall calf to that weight.

CHOPPED vegetables, such as cabbages, turnips and onions, may be fed to poultry during the winter with profit, especially if a larger supply of eggs is desired. Chopped onions are excellent for all kinds of fowls, and quickly drive all kinds of vermin away.

AS soon as I have my poultry houses closed I take the manure and spread it over my wheat field or on a poor spot on my meadow, and a man with one eye can soon see where I put it. To put hen manure in a barrel and keep it a year before placing on a crop is, according to my experience, a wrong way. —D. N. Kerr, Lehigh Co., Pa.

LAST spring I sowed an ounce of sage seed, costing 20 cents, from which I now have 1,000 good strong plants. I transplant in rows about three feet apart and two feet in the row; use the plow and hoe freely, with good mulch late in fall to prevent freezing out during winter. [illegible] crop more easily managed or more profitable in a small way.—O. Moffit.

THE St. Patrick, one of the new varieties of potatoes recently [illegible] to the attention of our farmers, is said to be a most excellent sort and well worthy of extended culture. It has a smooth, white skin, few and shallow eyes, producing but few small tubers, maturing early and very compact in its habit of growth. It bids fair to become a popular market variety.

WALDO says in the Ohio Farmer that he remembers one year making a very large profit from an acre of land, managed in this way: He first grew a crop of Tom Thumb peas, which matured in time for cucumbers, for pickles, and then he grew 500 bushels of turnips, sowed broadcast among the cucumbers. He found that these crops will mature without crowding each other, if properly managed.

A NEW and valuable variety of celery which originated near Newark, N. J., is attracting considerable attention among market gardeners. It is called the golden dwarf, and in size and habit of growth is much the same as the dwarf white kinds, except that when blanched the heart, which is large and full, is of a waxy, golden yellow, rendering it a most striking and showy variety, for either market or private use. It is entirely solid and of most excellent flavor, and one of the best keepers during winter we have ever known. The habitual daily use of this esculent cannot be too highly recommended. It is said to promote digestion, quieting to the nerves and is highly recommended in connection with good nutritious food as a sort of vegetable tonic.

THE tendency of agricultural refinement is to make a good deal of expense about butter-making. The movement is meant for the benefit of those who can afford it, however. People who pay a large price for butter will not fling away their money so long as they make certain that it is really as much better, on the average, than other butter as the price would indicate. That sort of management paying merit, and merit only, will, in the end, elevate the standard of our butter-making as nothing else will. The man who puts capital into dairying and works it there intelligently, employing the best help, and keeping the best stock of cattle in the best manner, should have his reward. After a while, be sure the good of his methods will not die with him.

EVERY farmer, says the Country Gentleman, has noticed that about the time of wheat harvest, if the fowls are allowed the run of the fields and barnyards, there is a material increase in the egg supply. I think the second fact is the natural result of the first. I have fed corn, oats, barley, buckwheat, flax, and sunflower seeds, and have found nothing equal to whole wheat as food for fowls. For young chicks it seems especially adapted. After two or three days of feeding on soft food the young chickens will pick up the whole wheat quite greedily, and will thrive on it as on nothing else. Growing chickens have a large demand for lime, and especially bone material, and this is more nearly supplied in whole wheat than in any other grain. If wheat were $2 per bushel it would still be the cheapest food for young chicks. Farmers can, however, economize by feeding wheat screenings and damaged wheat, which, though unsalable, is nearly as good for chicken feed.

Sunday a Holiday.

In Germany, Sunday is a recognized holiday. Work is forbidden, but all are free to enjoy themselves after their own fashion. The shops are open between church services. The postal service is limited to shorter hours; letters and parcels are not delivered as often as on other days, and there are similar restrictions on the telegraph service. On the other hand, the railway traffic is left quite free, and not only do trains run as on other days, but by almost every line there are also extra trains for the convenience of the holiday-makers. Indeed, in many places, especially in Austria, companies choose Sundays and holidays for their great excursions; extra trains are put on, especially in the morning, and arrangements for dancing for the people, popular concerts, etc., are fixed almost exclusively for these days. This is especially the case in places where the population is chiefly Catholic. The inns and taverns do most of their business on Sunday, because the people are at leisure.

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

MUSTY books may be made sweet by applying oil of lavender mixed with alcohol. If this application is made to new books they will never become musty or moldy.

CIDER may be preserved and kept sweet by putting it in wine bottles, adding a teaspoonful of white sugar to each bottle and corking tightly. The corks should be tied down.

EGGS often turn black when boiled hard. If they are put in boiling water ten minutes, and then into cold, the yelk will remain a bright yellow.

ROAST GOOSE.—A goose should be roasted in the same manner as a turkey. It is better to make the stuffing of mashed potatoes, seasoned with salt, pepper and onions to the taste. Apple sauce is good to serve with it. Allow fifteen minutes to a pound for a gosling, and twenty or more for an older one. Goose should be cooked rare.

HAVING derived so much satisfaction from the use of a very simple remedy for ridding our pantry of those little pests, the red ants, I am tempted to send the same to your household column for the benefit of other sufferers. It is only necessary to cover the shelves where you wish to place meat or other articles of food with newspapers. The ants will not go over the printed matter. The newspapers may be covered with other paper, if desired. We and others who have tried it have found it a sure and permanent relief.

R. M. S.

[illegible].—The quantity given here will serve for a mess of five or six. One cup of molasses, one cup of beef suet, freed from fiber, and chopped fine; [illegible], one cup raisins, picked, seeded, chopped, and dredged with flour; three cups sifted flour, one teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful ground cinnamon, one teaspoonful of ground cloves, one-half teaspoonful soda, one egg. Put soda into molasses and stir very hard; beat the egg well and stir it into the molasses, then add the flour, salt, spices, suet and fruits. Put into prepared bag and boil three hours.

STOCK FOR SOUP.—This receipt will be found useful, as in a family not too numerous enough stock can be made for a week. Take four pounds of lean beef, cut it into small pieces, slice an onion, saw a hock-bone of beef, remove the marrow, and fry the cut beef and onion in the marrow to a full brown; put fried meat, onion and fresh hock in two gallons of cold water; let it simmer all day; at night strain through sieve, and replace in kettle; throw in some egg-shell and clear; strain through a cloth into an earthen crock; in the morning skim the stock to remove grease; this stock may be used for vegetables or for any kind of soup; of course it is of a rich brown color.

He Would Write to Their Parents.

The Richmond (Va.) Herald tells this good story: Col. X., of John Morgan's cavalry, was not a martinet, but, bearded like the pard, he had a military air. Discipline was his hobby. The soldiers of his regiment were young men from 18 to 25 years old—all of them blue-blooded. To restrain these Hotspurs required tact, skill and firmness. It was no easy task to curb this "jeunesse doree." But the Colonel did it, and this was the way he did it:

An inspection having been ordered, the Brigadier and his staff visited the Colonel's camp for the purpose of conducting it. While the regiment was in line, undergoing inspection, two privates, who had been ranging the night before in search of buttermilk, and had endeavored to sneak into camp unobserved, were detected by the outpost sentinels and brought under arrest to Col. X. at the head of his regiment. The Colonel, cocking his hat on three grains, sternly ordered them to his tent to await his coming after inspection, remarking to Gen. D. that he would make an example of these rovers. Arrived at the tent with the General and staff, after ranks were broken, the Colonel arraigned the culprits before him.

"Young gentlemen," said he, severely, "you are aware that you have been guilty of a serious offense against the discipline of my camp?"

"Yes, Colonel," was the meek reply.

"Well, sirs," thundered the Rhadamanthus, "I desire you distinctly to understand that if this offense is repeated I will write to your parents about it. Go to your company."

Turning to the surprised officers looking on, he said:

"You see how severe I must be with these young fellows. Discipline must be preserved."

Hopeful's Opposite.

In the public schools at Minneapolis they train the youthful mind in the use of words of opposite meaning. The teacher, for example, asks the class what is the opposite of "rich," the answer being "poor," and so on. After a series of such questions, a teacher one day asked the class: "What is the opposite of hopeful?" when a bright little fellow briskly arose and with confident promptitude cried out: "Rarus." Those who are aware of or remember the contest of speed between the two fast trotters of those names at the Minnesota fair, and the extraordinary popular excitement at Minneapolis on the subject, will appreciate this juvenile antithesis, which we take to be the best mot of the season.—St. Paul (Minn.) Pioneer-Press.

GEN. GARFIELD, of Ohio, will take his seat in the Senate of the United States before he is 50 years of age.

WHY.

Some Things It Is Hard to Understand.

Why an endless procession of drinkers from a public dipper will, without exception, drink close to the handle.

Why half the human race was not born without hearing and the other half without speech. Then the talkers might talk on in uninterrupted flow, and the hearers exercise their especial gift without their present pruriency to speak.

Why people will go into society to get bored when they can get bored just as well at home.

Why the young lady who will eagerly chew boarding-house mince pie will cheerfully eschew boarding-house mince meat.

Why a man's stomach will be so everlastingly squeamish at home, and at the eating-house display a faith like a grain of mustard seed.

Why a woman will make excuses for her bread when she knows it is the best she ever made, and knows her "company" knows it.

Why a "young gentleman" swears so much louder and more copiously when stranger ladies are within earshot; or, in other words,

Why the desire to make a fool of one's self springs eternally in the human breast.

Why we are so much angrier against him who shows us our error than him who leads us therein.

Why everybody is so prompt to answer, "How do you do?" when you ask that inevitable question. And

Why you seem to be perfectly satisfied with the information contained in this echo.

Why one's piety strengthens as his health weakens.

Why people will get married when courtship is so sweet.

Why a man who claims to have found marriage a delusion will again embrace that delusion upon the first convenient opportunity.

Why cold weather comes during the season when it is least agreeable.

Why it is so much easier to be polite to people whom we shall probably never see again than to those whose good opinion we have every reason to cultivate.

Why boys should run after the girls when there is a whole houseful at home.

Why Jane finds Sarah's hateful brother so attractive, and why the hateful brother of Jane finds favor with Sarah.

Why a man should court the good opinion of another, when he can never hope to secure his own self-respect.

Why it is so much easier to close a door in summer than in winter, considering that exercise is generally considered distasteful in warm weather and pleasant in cold.

Why one feels bad when appearing in company in shabby garb, knowing well that one's shabbiness gives more pleasure to others than one's rich clothing.

Superstition Attached to Stones.

The opal, one of the most beautiful of all the precious stones, has had any amount of superstition attached to it. By some the ill-luck attributed to its use is said to have arisen from Sir Walter Scott's mention of it in "Anne of Geierstein." He ascribed it to supernatural agency; and long after that novel was published the belief in its evil influence was so strong that no one would wear an opal. That may have been the first conception of evil from wearing opals, but we think it sprung from Eastern superstition, or at least that there were many and various legends connected with it. Some believed that it often changed from the brilliant luster to a smoky, dull color, and that any such change foreshadowed misfortune and trouble, but did not bring it. We know of an instance where a lady brought an elegant opal necklace to a jeweler's, desiring to sell it. They attempted to dissuade her from such folly, saying that, the setting being old-fashioned, they could give her very little for what was really valuable. To this she replied that the necklace was given her as a bridal gift forty years before, and she never had had an hour's luck since they came in her possession, and she would never carry them home with her. No matter how little they were willing to give her, she would leave them. She did so, but we have never heard if, by disposing of her opals for a mere trifle, she escaped subsequent misfortune.

Leap Year's Difficulties.

He was a nice young man, with cane, high hat, and patent-leather boots. He strolled leisurely down Fourth avenue, puffing daintily upon a cigarette and occasionally twirling the waxed ends of his mustache. He was accosted by a stout woman with a florid complexion.

"Top of the morning to ye, Mister Charley," said she.

"Good morning, Mrs. McGuinness," said the nice young man.

"Me darlint boy, would ye—" and she bestowed a bewitching smile upon him. He dodged out of her reach. The recollection that it was leap year rushed upon him. He answered:

"Madame—really I can't—I am very sorry if I cause you pain—but my affections have already been bestowed upon another—and madame—I can't—I can't marry you."

She gazed at him in astonishment, and then said indignantly:

"Who axed ye to marry me! The idea of the likes of me, a poor lone widdy, wid four children to support by washin', axin' ye to marry me. I was only goin' to ax ye for that dollar for washin'."

He sighed and gave her a dollar, and walked sadly away.—New York Sun.

The First American Patent.

The first American patent for an invention was issued to Samuel Hopkins, at New York, July 31, 1790, for an improved process of making potash and pearlash. A recommendation to the House of Representatives to appropriate $500 for the purchase of this patent is made by Secretary Schurz. The present possessor of the document is E. T. Hale, of Columbus, Ohio. It is written on a sheet of parchment in a round, old-fashioned hand, signed by George Washington, and certified by Ed Randolph, Attorney General, as being conformable to the act of Congress to promote the useful arts, and its delivery to the grantee is certified by Thos. Jefferson, with the seal of the United States.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

THERE are 25,000 English women in India.

OHIO spent $7,711,325 last year for the maintenance of her public schools.

THIS year Arkansas ranks next to Texas as a cotton State, producing 650,000 bales.

TEXAS raised 800,000 bales of cotton in 1879, nearly one-fourth of the entire crop of the United States.

IT is estimated that 9,000 miles of new railways will be built in 1880, much of which will be laid with steel rails.

OF the 335 Sunday-schools in New York, seventy-five are Episcopalian, the largest number of any one denomination.

A STATISTICIAN computes that 2,500,000 watches and 4,000,000 clocks are annually turned out in different parts of the world.

ROME, with a population of 158 000 souls, has 372 public primary schools, with 482 teachers and 14,000 children attending them.

EMINENT German statisticians calculate that the amount of money spent in railroads since the invention of the locomotive reaches the vast sum of $15,000,000,000.

THE Fiji islands, which are now a district of the Australian Wesleyan Methodist Church, have 841 chapels and 291 other preaching places; 10 missionaries, 48 native missionaries, and 23,274 members, exclusive of 39 European members.

SOME idea of the amount expended annually in patent medicine, in England, may be drawn from the accounts published of the last financial year, which show that no less than 16,727,669 stamps were affixed to those medicines, the duty amounting to £122,385 19s. 4½d. As the duty at its highest rate is only 1½d in the shilling, it follows that more than £1,000,000 must have been paid by the public for patent pills and other compounds.

A Ring of Charles I.

Several ring stories are related in connection with the unfortunate Charles I. In Herbert's narrative of the last days of the monarch, he mentions: "The same evening, Jan. 28, 1648, two days before his execution, the King took a ring from his finger, having an emerald set therein, between two diamonds, and gave it to Mr. Herbert, and commanded him, as late as it was, to go with it from St. James' to a lady living then in Canon Row, on the back side of King street, in Westminster, and to give it to her without saying anything. The night was exceedingly dark, and guards were set in several places; nevertheless, getting the word from Col. Matthews Tomlinson, Mr. Herbert passed currently, though, in all places where sentinels were, he was bid stand till the corporal had the word from him. Being come to the lady's house he delivered to her the ring. 'Sir,' said she, 'give me leave to show you the way into the parlor,' where, being seated, she desired him to wait till she returned. In a little while after she came in and put into his hands a little cabinet, closed with three seals, two of which were the King's arms, and the third was the figure of a Roman; which done, she desired him to deliver it to the same hand that sent the ring, which ring was left with her, and, afterward, Mr. Herbert taking his leave, he gave the cabinet into the hands of his Majesty, who told him he should see it open next morning. Morning being come, the Bishop (Juxton) was early with the King, and, after prayers, his Majesty broke the seals and showed them what was in the cabinet. There were diamonds and jewels—most part broken, and Georges and Garters. 'You see,' said the King, 'all the wealth now in my power to give to my children.'"—All The Year Round.

Outdone by a Boy.

A lad in Boston, rather small for his years, works as an errand boy for four gentlemen who do business there. One day the gentlemen were chaffing him a little about being so small, and said to him:

"You never will amount to much; you never can do much business; you are too small."

The little fellow looked at them.

"Well," said he, "as small as I am, I can do something which none of you four men can do."

"Ah, what is that?" said they.

"I don't know as I ought to tell you," he replied.

But they were anxious to know, and urged him to tell what he could do that none of them were able to do.

"I can keep from swearing!" said the little fellow.

There were some blushes on four manly faces, and there seemed to be very little anxiety for further information on the point.

A Rubber-Producing Insect.

An insect which produces a species of India rubber has been discovered in the district of Yucatan, Central America, by an American explorer. It is called "neen," and belongs to the Coccus family; feeds on the mango tree, and swarms in these regions. It is of considerable size, yellowish-brown in color, and emits a peculiar oily odor. The body of the insect contains a large proportion of grease, which is highly prized by the natives for applying to the skin on account of its medicinal properties. When exposed to the heat the lighter oils of the grease volatilize, leaving a tough wax behind, which resembles shellac, and may be used for making a varnish or lacquer. When burnt this wax produces a thick, semi-fluid mass, like a solution of India rubber, and it is expected that this glutinous liquid will be very valuable for cement and water-proofing.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

NOTICE OF MEETING
Of the Democratic County Central Committee.

The members of the democratic county central committee of DeKalb county, Indiana, are requested to meet at Auburn,

Friday, February 20th, 1880,

at 10 o'clock a. m., for the transaction of important business. A number of new propositions will be submitted for the consideration of the committee and it is important that every township be represented.

The following named persons constitute the committee:

J. Quince,	Butler	township.
J. J. Walter,	Jackson	"
S. S. Shutt,	Concord	"
G. H. Munn,	Newville	"
Joseph Wilson,	Stafford	"
Wm. H. Madden,	Wilmington	"
D. D. Moody,	Auburn	precinct.
D. Y. Husselman,	Waterloo	"
B. D. Thomas,	Keyser	township.
C. B. Kagey,	Richland	"
Sol Reinoehl,	Fairfield	"
B. C. Waterman,	Smithfield	"
Joseph Sewell,	Franklin	"
B. F. Cornelius,	Troy	"

W. L. BLAIR, Chairman.

Col. Nelson Trusler, United States district attorney, died suddenly in the Grand opera-house at Indianapolis, last week. He was buried at Connersville last Sunday.

* * *

The senate has confirmed the nomination of Francis P. Griffith supervisor of census for this, the sixth district of Indiana. Again we inquire, Who is Francis P. Griffith?

* * *

The supreme court of this state has decided that, in selling land for taxes unpaid for seven years, the county treasurer is not authorized to accept a bid for less than the entire amount of taxes, penalty and interest.

* * *

It has just leaked out that the republican managers of Elkhart county are about to purchase 160 acres of land in Middlebury township, for the purpose of planting 40 families of North Carolina negroes, to be used in the next election to send John H. Baker back to congress.

* * *

The Cincinnati committee, appointed to secure the democratic national convention for Cincinnati, will visit Washington in a body to intercede with the national committee which meets the 22d inst. We hope the democrats of Cincinnati will succeed in their undertaking.

* * *

Through the connivance of Don Cameron, the leading republican counties of Pennsylvania are instructing their delegates to the state convention to use their influence in favor of a Grant delegation to the Chicago convention. Grant's followers intend to dictate who shall be the nominee, and his name may possibly be Conkling.

* * *

Indiana will have a representative on the next democratic national ticket. If Hendricks is not chosen for the first place, the second place will be given to William H. English or Joseph E. McDonald Mr. Hendricks has said that he would not accept a nomination for the vice-presidency. By accepting that position he would lose the confidence of his ardent admirers. He is too great a statesman to be thrown to the dogs.

* * *

The first step of the democracy of DeKalb county for the campaign of 1880 has been taken, as will be seen by the call for a meeting of the county central committee, which appears in this paper. We hope to see every member of the committee on hand ready for action at an early hour. Matters of importance to the democracy will come up for discussion, and a representative from each township should be present to express his views. There must be no lagging in the next campaign, every man who undertakes to discharge certain duties during the campaign must commence his work with a will and a determination to succeed. Business will commence two weeks from to-morrow.

The Terre Haute Express, edited by Exodus Windom, says that the "fugitive" negroes arriving in Indiana from North Carolina, are "all well clad, better, in fact, than the average laborer in this section, and have no indication whatever of being paupers." What! Is it possible that the stereotyped shotgun and bull-dozing stories circulated by the northern republicans during the last fifteen years are all lies? Are the cries of cruelty to negroes, and the oft repeated yarns about negroes having to remain in the woods and live on berries and roots and go half naked, all false? If they are coming to Indiana well clad and without the appearance of being paupers, the republicans must be guilty of doing some very tall lying.

The Campaign in DeKalb.

The doors are open and the performance will commence on the 20th inst. That is, the head of the democratic party of DeKalb county, will, at the time named, lay the foundation for a thorough organization for the campaign of 1880. While an organization is being perfected, and after the time and manner of nominating candidates for county offices have been determined upon, it is natural to suppose that every township will come forward with an Isaac to be sacrificed for the good (or to the detriment) of his party. In view of the frequent complications arising from an over supply of candidates, we desire to urge upon each and every aspirant the necessity of allowing the party to make its selections without regard to the political wellfare of any particular person. It is sufficient to announce that you are a candidate; if you are considered the most available person to place before the people for their suffrages you will receive the nomination; if you are not so considered you ought neither to ask nor receive the nomination. No man should press his own claims nor those of a friend to such an extent as to injure the success of the party, especially in a county so equally divided politically as is DeKalb. All that is necessary for the success of the democratic party in this county is harmony, and there appears to be a determination on the part of all to keep down all prejudices and bad feeling within the ranks.

From Butler to Detroit.

The extension of the Eel River branch of the Wabash railway from Butler to Detroit, is again being agitated by the latter city. The following from the Post and Tribune of last Monday will no doubt interest our readers in DeKalb county:

"At the open session of the board of trade on Saturday noon there was the usual full attendance of members. The board was called to order by Vice President Rasler. The secretary then read the resolution adopted by the board of directors on the previous day appropriating $10,000 from the treasury of the board to aid in the construction of a railroad from Detroit to Butler, Ind.

Mr. R. W. Gillett said that in his opinion the opportunity had now come for Detroit to gain its long-desired southwestern connection, and to get it in just the shape it desired. He thought it the duty of every citizen who had the interest of Detroit at heart to do everything in his power to aid the enterprise, to the end that it might be accomplished at the earliest practicable moment. He believed that the board of trade and the merchants' and manufactures' exchange as representing the commercial and manufacturing interests of the city should take the initiative and show to the people of the city that they are earnest in their desire to accomplish this object. He did not know of any better use to which the treasures of the board and its revenues for the year to come could be devoted than to contribute it in aid of the enterprise,

Mr. Alex Lewis said that although the board of directors had full legal authority to do what they had done in the adoption of this resolution without the sanction of the board of trade, he desired an expression of the entire membership upon it. He moved therefore that this board affirm the action of the board of directors. His motion prevailed unanimously.

The matter of raising subcription may therefore now be considered to be fairly under way. It is in the hands of a joint committee of five members each, representing the board of trade and the merchants' and manufacturers' exchange. These gentlemen are really representative citizens and enjoy to the fullest extent the confidence of the community in their energy, prudence and sagacity. They have perfected a plan of operations which they propose quietly and effectively to carry out. It is not necessary to make any great amount of noise about this business, or to indulge in any public demonstration, so that the people along the line who are interested, though they do not witness the uproar that was made over "Wabash" last summer, may still rest assured that the work is being done.

Those who have the matter in charge express entire confidence in the ultimate success of their labors. They have canvassed this subject already quite extensively among capitalists and have met with a cordial reception everywhere. Nobody shows any inclination to hang back, in fact it is expected that three-fifths of the desired sum will be got in $5,000 subcriptions. There are good assurances to that effect. The solicitation will be pushed vigorously and without delay.

By way of explanation, it may be said that the road is completed, controlled and operated by the Wabash company from Logansport to Butler, 93 miles. It is proposed to build from Detroit to Butler, 112 miles. The surveys, plans and estimates are all completed. A company has been organized under the law of the state, composed entirely of well-known Detroit capitalists. They have the financial ability to build the road with all possible speed, and they pledge themselves to do so provided the citizens of Detroit raise a bonus of $200,000. We think it may now be taken for granted that the money will be raised and that the work of construction will very soon be commenced. In running this line the surveyor had instruction to make it as direct as possible, with a view to its being a part of a great thorough route. He has made it absolutely an air line from a point where it leaves the existing railway lines near Woodmere to Butler. The only deflection is to touch Adrian, and this does not exceed half a mile. The country is a dead level, the only grades being near the Ohio state line, and these are only 37 feet to the mile. Over this road a locomotive can easily haul a train of 40 loaded cars. The advantage of absence of curves and grades are well understood by railroad men, and it is known that such a road can successfully compete with a road which lacks those advantages.

It is evident that this road makes Detroit a treminus of the Wabash system and gives us a direct connection which is practically an air line to St. Louis, Kansas City and the far west. Over such a strait and level road the business of that region will naturally seek Detroit for an eastern outlet.

There are several reasons why this is so. Detroit is unsurpassed in respect to its harbor. All the vessels touch her. All the lines of boats between upper and lower lake ports stop at Detroit, and hence our water transportation facilities are not equaled by any portion of the chain of lakes. One ton or 100 tons of freight desired to be shipped can be forwarded promptly and at the minimum cost. This fact is of great importance to a railroad desiring to take advantages of water rates for any portion of its freight.

It is therefore evident that with this line completed, not only would the eastern bound business from points west of Logansport come this way on account of saving of distance, but for the additional reason that the Wabash company would get a haul of 205 miles to Detroit, as against 166 miles to Toledo. These facts are conclusive as regards the important part which this line would play as a link in the great through route from St. Louis, Kansas City and the grain fields of Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas to the seaboard.

To be made an important point on such a line Detroit could well afford to subscribe $500,000, if it were necessary, and she would realize a handsome return on such an investment in a twelve month. But she is not asked for half that sum. Surely her moneyed men will not hesitate a moment to suberibe the paltry sum that is asked.

The "exodus" niggers coming to Indiana are all coming from republican districts in North Carolina. They are going into democratic districts in Indiana. Even a nigger chooses to select his company, in which respect he is superior to a great many republicans.

DR. D. HULBURT.

CANCERS.

No diseases have so thoroughly baffled the skill of the medical profession as cancerous affections, and as they have always been considered incurable, it has been thought disreputable to adopt their treatment as a specialty, and hence physicians in general have neglected their proper study, but of late years new and important discoveries have brought forth a course of treatment that now proves successful in any or all of its forms with certainty, without the use of the barbarous knife or caustic plasters that sometimes make the patient frantic with pain while undergoing the burning or eating process. We have a treatment that is mild, giving no pain whatever, gradually destroying the cancerous growth and never destroying the healthy flesh. It is not poisonous, consequently can be applied to any part of the body. All cases of this we will remove (unless too far progressed), and guarantee a complete recovery.

APPOINTMENT.—Dr. Hulburt can be consulted at his room in the Swineford house, Auburn, Indiana, Wednesday, February 18, 1880. The doctor will visit patients at their residences if desired.

Notice to Ditchers.

Notice is hereby given, that the board of commissioners of DeKalb county, Indiana, will let to the lowest and best responsible bidder, the construction of the county allotments on the following ditches, at the times and places named below; At the county allotment on the Goodwin ditch, in Union township, at 10 o'clock a. m., February 16

Auburn Courier.

Meeks' Muss.

It will be remembered by the readers of the COURIER that William Meeks, living at Newville, last summer imagined some disagreeable things concerning his domestic affairs and used considerable violence towards his wife and three children, after which—August 25—he was adjudged insane and taken to the asylum. He remained there, it seems, only about two weeks, when he either escaped or was discharged from the institution. However this may be, he has been at home since that time and has given no evidence of his previous malady until last Sunday night, when, at about 12 o'clock, Mrs. Meeks rushed into a neighbor's house screaming "murder," stating that her husband had nearly choked her to death and had threatened to kill the entire family and burn the house. At about 5 o'clock Monday morning the house was discovered to be on fire, and the flames were not subdued until one end of the main building had succumbed; the children, however, with their mother, had sought refuge at the house of Mrs. Blair, who is Mrs. Meeks' sister. Sheriff Leas visited the place last Monday for the purpose of securing Meeks, but was unable to find him or any traces of him, as he had skipped for parts unknown.

"Over The Road."

The trial of Alexander McDonald, the accomplice of George Stover in the Spencerville rumpus, full particulars of which have already been placed before our readers, terminated last Thursday evening and resulted in Aleck's receiving an invitation to go "over the road" for twelve long years, during which time the state will furnish him an abundance of physical exercise. The case attracted fully as much attention as that of Stover, and the jury was out about the same length of time. The attorneys' arguments on both sides were good, Judge Best, Geo. B. Adams and D. D. Moody ably conducting the prosecution, while L. J. Blair of Waterloo made strong appeals in defense of the prisoners in both cases.

Stover and McDonald were taken in charge by Sheriff Leas Friday evening, who landed them safely in the Michigan City penitentiary at about noon Saturday, where we understand they will learn the art of manufacturing boots and shoes.

And now, since these two unfortunates have settled down to business, we rise to remark, Where in the deuce is Garfield?

In Double Harness.

It was surmised only a short time ago, or about the time Johnnie Schaab took unto himself a better half, that the firm of Schaab, Beugnot & Co. was doing an immense business; and now, since the events of last Tuesday morning, that belief has been fully substantiated. On the morning referred to, at half past nine o'clock, in the presence of an assembly of relatives and friends, Geo. V. Schaab was joined in marriage to Miss Eliza Murphy of this place. The ceremony took place at the Catholic church, Rev. A. Young officiating, and in the afternoon of the same day the happy couple departed for several places in Ohio, where they are now sojourning and will spend a portion of the honeymoon, returning to their home in Auburn some time next week.

The COURIER hopes their honeymoon, unlike the majority of them, may last through life, and at the same time returns its double-twisted compliments for an armful of delicious wedding cake.

Mesmerism.

At Ensley hall Tuesday evening, Prof. Lewis delighted a medium-sized audience with his mesmeric performance; the experiments were extremely amusing, the spectators being kept in a continual roar of laughter from beginning to end. Last evening, owing to an unfortunate scarcity of susceptible subjects among the older class, the performance was a little tedious; all the youngsters, however, who had been under control the evening previous, were easily influenced by Prof. Lewis last night, as he drew them out of the audience. He purposes making a tour around town to-day, when he will select suitable subjects of advanced years, and there will be fun at Ensley's hall to-night. The admission will be but 10 and 15 cents for this evening (Thursday), and as the experiments will be both amusing and instructive, we hope to see the house crowded.

The Theatre.

The entertainment given in this place by the Butler "Bonanza Troupe," last Friday evening, drew a large and satisfactory audience, and was as good an amateur performance as has been seen here in many months. Miss Parker, who took a leading character in the play—"The Drunkard's Warning"—sustained her role remarkably well. Mr. O'Neil's singing, one of the chief features of the evening, was well appreciated and elicited a hearty encore from the audience. Financially the thing was a success, and we hope they will be as well received wherever they may go.

—Call at W. H. Kiblinger's and see the Iron Mountain cook stove, the best in the market. 1-tf.

—The party who borrowed a valise of Tom Mays is respectfully requested to return the same.

—"John Brown's body lies a mouldering in the grave." He died at Wabash about two weeks ago.

—The boys will put "Humpty Dumpty" on in good style. A full outfit of costumes has been secured.

—Miss Nellie Potter recently spent a week visiting friends at New Era, returning home last Monday.

—The Steuben Republican authoritatively declares that "Angola must have better railroad connections."

—Miss Jennie Fisher, of Waterloo, was in town a short time last week, visiting the family of Treasurer Gonser.

—Will. Forshey, of Auburn Junction, spent Sunday last in this city. Will. has a good posish.—Kendallville Standard.

—George Grund has quit smoking; so has Mount Vesuvius, and the former, like the latter, is liable to break out at any moment.

—"Don't you forget it." "Sellers' Liver Pills" were the first pills so called in the United States, and never fail to do their work.

—John Winger, from Chambersburg, Pa., is practicing telegraphy with Frank Copper, in the office of the Ft. Wayne & Jackson road.

—The Central house, of which Uncle Tom Gross is proprietor, is like a street-car in one respect;—there's always room for one more.

—Nothing makes a man, woman or child feel meaner than a tickling sensation in the throat. Take "Dr. Sellers' Cough Syrup." Price 25 cents.

—Adam Hartle, whose death occurred a few days ago, was an old settler of this county, and was much respected and esteemed by all who knew him.

—Miss Blanche Steifel, of Angola, was married at that place yesterday, Mr. Louis Wolf, the Fort Wayne dry-goods merchant, being the groom.

—Warsaw is "all tore up" over the finding of a still-born baby in a vault at that place, and now they are trying to find the block the chip came from.

—Miss Mary Pitcher was threatened last Friday with some sort of fever, but by careful nursing it was averted; she is still somewhat indisposed, however.

—Charlie Scott, of Columbia City, was in town a short time last Friday, trying to buy some middlings; but he says our millers were "too fly" for him.

—Since the conclusion of the Stover and McDonald trials, the excitement has suddenly subsided and the great public mind is ready for a fresh stirring up.

—Mr. Knight, the great Shakespearian reader and historical costume impersonator, is announced for this place Feb. 17, as will be seen in another column.

—The Fort Wayne Daily News speaks of a lady who is "down with acute articular rheumatism." It may be that "articular rheumatism" is really "cute;" but experience teaches that there's nothing funny about the ordinary kind.

—Mrs. W. H. Cummings, of this city, is to be married to-day to Mr. M. L. Duck, of Auburn, DeKalb county.—Kendallville Standard, Jan. 29.

They are now here, and have settled down to business in good shape.

—The stave-factory of C. Beugnot & Co. shut down last Monday afternoon, the cause of the temporary suspension being a lack of material to work on. It will doubtless be booming again in a few days.

—The Churubusco Herald's Mrs. Grundy says: "The editor of the Lime City News is both a tease and a nuisance." The said editor certainly knows that this is not "chromo" time. He ought to leave the old woman alone.

—That charming suburb of Chicago, called for convenience Valparaiso, is now putting on city airs with gas, and everybody in the town is "gassing" about it; but as it only costs $10 per thousand cubic feet, we should think they would. Wonder why each consumer doesn't buy a small gas factory of his own.

—Young Ray—everybody knows him—now does the fancy work at Pommert's barber-shop; he polishes up the boys' understanding and removes the real estate from their costumes.

—MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Keyser township, by Rev. W. L. Meese, Sunday, February 1, 1880, Mr. Edward Kelham, Jr., and Miss Viola Whetsel.

—The following heralders called at the COURIER sanctum last Saturday: Sheffer, of the Angola Herald; Powell, of the Garrett Herald, and Eveland, of the Churubusco Herald.

—The M. E. society will meet at the lecture-room Wednesday afternoon and evening next; refreshments served at the usual hour. All are cordially invited. MRS. J. ANDERSON, Secretary.

—Miss Alice Beugnot left yesterday morning, accompanied by her father, for the Academy of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart, six miles this side of Ft. Wayne, where she will attend school this term.

—Old Mrs. Cain died last Saturday in this city, but we have no particulars in regard to her age or disease.—Kendallville Standard, Jan. 29.

We, also, are ignorant as to the nature of her disease, but feel confident that she must have been the oldest woman living.

—W. J. Eckels, of Fort Wayne, secretary of the Peters Box and Lumber Company, was in this place a few hours Monday, on business in the interests of his company. Will. is an enterprising young man who has, by industry and integrity, attained the well-merited position he now holds.

—Every one who attended the social of the Young Ladies' Christian Temperance Society, entertained by Miss Sadie Hollister Saturday evening, speaks of it as one of the pleasantest gatherings they have attended in Auburn for some time past.

—If all the subscribers of the COURIER took as deep an interest in its progress and welfare as does "Alpha," our correspondent at Newville, we should feel that we were not laboring in vain; besides, he is a good staunch democrat, and his assurances of loyalty to the cause are gratifying, to say the least.

—Frank Copper says that some fellow was "laying for him" Monday night at the Jackson depot, with a view to securing some spending money. The situation wasn't very pleasant, either, as Frank's pop-gun was at home; he is now prepared for them, and the fellow who tackles him will be elegantly entertained for a few moments.

—It is probable that Dr. Curran, of Auburn, will occupy the office of Dr. Younge, after he leaves for a larger city, which will be about April 1.—Fort Wayne News.

With a slight change in the name, the News is correct. It is Dr. Cowan, of this place, who contemplates moving to Fort Wayne, and, while we dislike to lose him as a citizen, we trust he may find the change profitable.

—Willis & Co. have moved their large stock of books, stationery, news, notions, etc., into the room in the McIntyre block, formerly occupied by H. H. Stanets, where they will be pleased to see all their old patrons and as many new ones as may wish anything in their line. Come one and all, and we will make it to your interest to call again. 3-4t.

—In its record of police court proceedings last week, the Wabash Courier speaks of one fellow as "Alfred Metcalf, another guzzler of local fame." We never heard it called by that name before; and we think a man must be past redemption when he is compelled to get drunk and disorderly on "local fame."

—After the conviction of Stover, Mr. Blair, who was defending, insisted upon McDonald pleading guilty, but the latter refused, saying that he would rather go to the penitentiary for forty years. If he had taken the advice of his counsel his sentence by the court would not have exceeded eight years, and the county would have been several hundred dollars ahead.

—The sudden death of Mrs. Buss, the estimable wife of Abraham Buss, of Fairfield township, which occurred last week, caused universal gloom among her many friends. Mr. B. was at the time prostrated with sickness so as to be unable to attend the funeral, and great sympathy is felt for the bereaved family.

—A boy at Pleasant Lake, whose name we have not heard, had his leg badly crushed last Friday while endeavoring to jump on a freight-train. But we have no idea that this item will have any effect upon the average small boy, as he will continue to board running trains as long as trains continue to run.

—Our sprightly exchange, the Wabash Courier, gets an item slightly befuddled in its column of "Pencil Flashes," last week. It says:

"On Friday of last week George Hazzard, an Allen county farmer, was fatally injured by falling against a pitchfork, one of the tines entering his side."

That wasn't the man's name; and as for George Hazzard, he is where no pitchfork can reach him—stripping tobacco up in Michigan City, at the request of the state of Indiana.

—Buy the Excelsior axe. It is fully warranted and for sale only by W. H. Kiblinger. 1-tf.

—It is reported that Garfield, who was implicated in the Spencerville robbery and is said to have been the leader in the scheme, walked through the streets of Bryan, a few days since, with his face blacked and a nigger wench on each side. Pretty cheeky proceeding, considering that a reward of $100 is offered for his apprehension.

—Yesterday morning Frank Albright, a young man about 21 years of age, was brought in town by Sheriff Leas and confined in the jail, having manifested unmistakable signs of insanity. He has lived for about one year past with George Papple, two miles north of town, and has recently become possessed with the hallucination that everybody wants to kill him. No definite cause is assigned, and he will doubtless soon be taken to the asylum.

—Rev. DeWitt Talmage, said to be the greatest living pulpit orator, will lecture at Fort Wayne next Thursday evening, Feb. 12, the subject of his discourse being "Big Blunders." Fare over the Jackson road will be at reduced rates. Tickets for the lecture, 50 cents; reserved seats, 75 cents, which latter can be procured by addressing Geo. S. Fowler, Court street, Ft. Wayne, next Wednesday and Thursday. This is a rare opportunity for Auburn people to hear a lecture that will well repay them, and we hope to see a large delegation board the 3 o'clock train next Thursday afternoon.

—After the conviction of Stover and McDonald, both acknowledged their guilt and gave what they claimed to be the facts concerning the shooting. They claim that neither Stover nor McDonald fired a shot; that the shooting was done by Garfield, except one shot fired by Austin; that Stover was outside of the house guarding against the approach of persons from the outside. McDonald admits that Mrs. Barney shot him in the arm, and says he could easily have killed her, either before or after she shot, and probably would have done so had she been a man. All four of the desperadoes were masked with handkerchiefs, if Stover and McDonald tell the truth.

—Miss Kate Woodhull, daughter of Judge Woodhull, of Angola, and a graduate of the Fort Wayne conservatory of music, was in town Tuesday, canvassing for a class in piano and organ instruction and voice culture. It is her purpose to be here Tuesday and Friday of each week to give lessons, should she succeed in obtaining a sufficient number of pupils to justify her. Minor particulars, however, will be furnished on application either to her or Miss Frank Stahl, of this place. We take pleasure in personally recommending Miss Woodhull as a young lady thoroughly versed in the art of music and fully competent to give profitable instruction in its various branches; and we trust she may receive the patronage, in this place, of which she is worthy.

—"The Bissell Improved Carpet-Sweeper," manufactured at Grand Rapids, Michigan, is a perfect machine, and is a great saving to carpets. Brooms tear the nap and wear out carpets. The Bissell Carpet-Sweeper, having the soft, bristle brushes, will not wear the carpet, but will gather all the sand, dirt, dust, lint, bits of paper or cloth, and everything, and put it into the pan inside the sweeper; in this way preventing the dust from raising and settling on the furniture. This sweeper, the brush being adjustable, will sweep clean where others fail; the brush being self-adjusting, will last for many years; will sweep cleaner than can be done with a broom all kinds of rag, ingrain and Brussels carpets, also any kind of matting. A lady or child can sweep carpets with ease. See and try them, and you will realize that you cannot afford to do without the use of one of them. T. V. Sebring, general agent, Lagrange, Indiana.

Card of Thanks.

The subscribers desire through the COURIER to thank their many friends in district No. 11, who so bountifully provided for their comfort and happiness last Saturday, upon which occasion a table was spread in the schoolhouse, surrounded by friends good and true, as the sequel will show. After the excellent dinner was disposed of, a donation of wheat, flour, corn, oats, meat, fruit, and many other substantials, was made, for which we are grateful. We shall ever remember the unselfish donors, and pray that the God whom we worship may be their God, and that peace and plenty may ever be theirs to enjoy.

"Humpty Dumpty."

"Humpty Dumpty" will be presented to our citizens by an amateur troupe, under the direction of Mr. John Kooder, at Ensley's hall, Friday and Saturday evenings, February 13 and 14. The entertainment will conclude with a laughable after-piece each evening. Admission 25 cents. No charge for children under ten years of age, when accompanied by their parents.

—Some of our correspondence this week, although now in type, must necessarily be held over until next week, owing to an excess of other matter that cannot be deferred.

—MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Kendallville, Thursday, the 29th ult., Mr. M. L. Duck, of Auburn, and Mrs. W. H. Cummings.

Alfred J. Knight.

The popular elocutionist and fine delineator of humorous, pathetic and Shakespearian character, will appear at Ensley's hall in Auburn, Thursday evening, February 17, 1880. Mr. Knight has appeared in all the large cities, giving the finest entertainments in this line to be seen in the country. The Chicago Tribune in speaking of the entertainment, says:

"A large and appreciative audience assembled at the Academy of Music to hear the talented impersonator, Mr. Alfred J. Knight. His changes are quick and apt, from the sublime to the ridiculous, and he has the faculty of carrying the audience with him. His delineation of the negro and the Dutchman were very powerful, and excited considerable mirth in the audience. 'The Death of Samson' showed the power of passion and depth of his voice, but the master power of passion was shown in his delineation of the different characters in Shakespeare. His costumes were truly magnificent, and worth the price of admission to see."

A Wonderful Record.

Myriads of so-called "specifics" and "cures" rheumatism have already been brought before the public, and many of them have even been endorsed by the certificates of respectable and prominent citizens, who have derived benefit from such preperations. There is no doubt that a great many of these "Liniments," "Oils" etc, so widely advertised and freely recomended for rheumatism and painful complaints of a similar nature, have genuine merit and will relieve certain types of the complaints named; but when rheumatism, neuralgia, and kindred diseases have become chronic and threaten serious results, you may rest assured that they will help you but very little. Although not recomended as "infallible," the peculiar qualities of ST. JACOBS OIL especially adapt it to those cases which may be termed "chronic," and which have previously withstood all known "specifics," as well as the prescriptions of the best physicians.

We would mention as an example, the case of Mr. A. Heilman, editor of the Pittsburgh Republican, who suffered with rheumatism for two years. After vainly using all the best recommended remedies and exhausting the skill of the most experienced physicians without even temporary relief, it required only two bottles of ST. JACOBS OIL to effect a permenent cure. Mr. C. Hanol, a well-known citizen of Youngstown, Ohio, secured for his wife, who for twelve years had been a constant sufferer from neuralgia in the head, the services of the ablest physicians of the land, but they were unable to do anything for her; half a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL cured her. Mr. Wm. Reinhardt, Elmore W's., reports the case of a neighbor who for twenty-four years had suffered so terribly with rheumatism that, at times, he could hardly move around; a few bottles of ST. JACOBS OIL cured him. "To cap the climax," however, Mr. A. Neiger, Taylorville, Pa. writes that his mother, who had been a continual sufferer with rheumatism for the past thirty years, used one bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL and was immediately relieved of all pain. These are results which truly deserve to be brought to public notice; but they are not exceptions, as will be seen by the numerous other certificates from all parts of the United States. It should be the duty of every one to call the attention of his suffering friends and neighbors to this wonderfully efficacious preparation, especially as the low price of 50 cents a bottle places it within the reach of all persons, rich and poor.

Special Notice.

If you are in want of a good carriage or buggy, don't fail to call at the Eckhart Carriage Works, where you can find a full and complete stock of the various styles. As iron is now over 100 per cent. higher than last year, and most all other materials from which carriages are manufactured are advancing, it will pay to purchase early in the season, as there is no question but that buggies will be from 15 to 30 per cent. higher next summer.

BIRTHDAY OF ROBERT BURNS.

JAN. 25, 1880.

(To the Scotch population of the world these lines are respectfully inscribed.)

Again our hearts' quick pulses beat
And warm with tender power,
While all our finer fancies blend,
Congenial to the hour;
Old feuds are laid aside to-day—
We meet as brother men—
For songs of love, from Scotland's braes,
Now rate the air again.

Just six-score years ago and one
Creation's womb was torn,
When God a genius gave the world,
The earth a man to mourn
Whose lyre has filled our hearts with joy,
Whose manhood made him ours;
Song's tender vein his faults blot out—
Mere nettles, braes and flowers.

Again we hear, or seem to hear,
"Oh dear, departed shade,"
"To you I sing in Scottish lays,"
"Adown the hawthorn glade;"
"Oh Thou! who in the heavens dost dwell;"
"Pale orbs that silent shine;"
"Is there for honest poverty?"
"Sin' days o' auld lang syne."

The measures and the words come back
With ten-fold power to-day;
Suggestive of a similar lot
Seems every hallowed lay.
Oh! faithful to his mem'ry still
Our willing hearts doth prove,
And souls unborn, years hence to be,
Burns' name shall learn to love.

His was the true poetic gift
From Muse's sweetest lyre;
His gurgling streams and warbling birds
Our spirits never tire.
Love's tender, golden charm he wove
In every homely line,
And draped the common things of life
In raiment bright and fine.

Who brand a man because of faults,
And will not own his worth,
Have ice-bound hearts and narrow minds
Abnormal from their birth.
For greater bard than I hath sung,
In realms I ne'er have trod,
That he who sings the love of man
Hath sung the love of God.

UNCLE LUKE.

JUDGE AND EXECUTIONER.

About the beginning of November in the year 18—, in the middle of the day, a sledge drawn by a horse dashed through a small village in Russia, and stopped in the courtyard of one of the largest houses. The horse had evidently run away, and the sole occupant of the sledge was clearly unable to guide it in the least.

In less than a minute a great many of the villagers, who had been attracted by the clattering of the inhabitants of the house, roused by the appearance of the sledge in the courtyard, surrounded the young woman. It was evident she was powerless to distinguish any one around her. There was just a faint sign of life, and that was all; but to the majority of the bystanders she looked far more dead than alive.

She was carried into the house and restoratives were administered. She had hardly recovered her consciousness when questions of every sort and kind were put to her from all sides. She was asked who she was, where she came from, where she was going to, who was pursuing her, and how the horse had run away. The room in which she was placed was full of villagers, who had come in to satisfy their very natural curiosity.

Among the most excited of the questioners was a young serf about 20 years old, who held in his hands the hatchet with which he had been felling wood when the sledge dashed through the quiet village. The beauty and painful grief of the woman seemed to have made rather an effect upon this young serf. He was certainly more anxious than the rest to hear her story, and was very prominent in his attentions, and put himself forward in endeavoring to offer her consolation.

At last the object of all this excitement had so far recovered as to be enabled to yield to the entreaties of those who surrounded her, and, in a broken voice and amid very general silence, she spoke as follows:

"I had heard that an old relation of mine, who lives in a neighboring village, was dangerously ill, and I determined to set out and see if I could be of any assistance. Early this morning I harnessed our horse to the little sledge and set out."

"Alone?" asked the young serf pointedly, still swinging the hatchet in his hand.

The bystanders well understood the meaning of the question, and the same word seemed involuntarily to escape their lips.

"Alone?"

It may be as well here to give a short explanation, which will account in some way for the exclamation.

When the Russian troops which had conquered Finland under the command of Gen. Buxoyden were returning home again, they were followed by countless troops of bears and wolves, who raged and quarreled over the bodies of those who, from time to time, died of cold or fatigue, and howled for the scraps of food left behind by the conquering army. The province which the army passed through was infested by these fierce animals long after its departure, and they soon became the terror of the humble peasantry who lived in that district. They were not content with devouring the various domestic dogs and cats that came in their way, but fiercely attacked any human creature that crossed their path. It became impossible to travel in safety at any hour of the day upon even a frequented road without a very strong escort. Any one who neglected these necessary precautions paid the penalty of his carelessness by a hideous death. In the course of the preceding winter forty human beings in this particular district had fallen a prey either to wolves or bears.

"Alone!" answered the young woman in a strange, unnatural voice, half choked with sobs; "unhappily for me, I was not alone! Why, in Heaven's name, did I risk such a journey? Don't compel me, I beg of you, to relate the horrors I have gone through and all the miseries of that awful morning."

"What has happened to you? Who went with you?" still asked many of those who surrounded the woman, and whose attention and curiosity were now thoroughly roused.

"Miserable woman that I am," answered she, "I took with me my three little children, the eldest of whom was about 5 years old, the youngest a little darling only 6 months and still at the breast."

An exclamation of horror ran through the circle of bystanders, and each one at last seemed to guess the hideous truth. And then, amid a more awful silence than before, the young woman went on with her story.

"It was a lovely morning, the road in tolerably good order, and the old horse trotted merrily along. My two little boys played at my feet, and the little one slept in my bosom. I was in high spirits, and happy at the thought that I was able to get away, and so, perhaps, be of service to my poor old relative. My happiness, however, was not of very long duration. About an hour after our departure from the village, the thought struck me how daring and venturesome it was to travel alone with my little ones through a vast desert of snow, cut off from aid and far away from any human habitation. Then, for the first time, I began to remember all the dreadful accidents that had befallen lonely travelers in our neighborhood, and almost made up my mind to turn back again. This fear grew upon me, and it increased more than ever when I perceived that the track in the snow had become so narrow that all chance of turning back in safety was cut off. On I was obliged to go, whether I would or not. My terror still kept increasing; but I dared not let the children know that I apprehended any danger. I listened anxiously, and magnified the slightest sound I heard. The track got narrower and narrower, and, at last, as we were passing a little bunch of fir trees, I heard distinctly behind me an awful sound. I knew well what it was. In an instant I turned around and saw that we were being pursued by a pack of hungry wolves. Now that the danger was so imminent my courage seemed to grow stronger. I madly lashed the horse, and he set off at wild, excited gallop. It was too late. Two of the largest wolves, with red, glaring eyes and hideous, open jaws, were already at the horse's flanks, and raced with him along the snow-covered tract. On the horse's life depended my life and that of my children. If he died we were all lost. Cost what it might, the horse's life might be saved, I thought. A horrible thought flashed across me, and, instead of repelling it, I accepted it as an inspiration from heaven. In cold blood I made up my mind, and in cold blood I calculated the awful consequences of my plan. At this very instant, my second boy, a child about 3 years old, clung to me and cried piteously. The boy's sobs seemed to excite the demoniac animals more than ever, and they gained on the galloping horse. Without knowing what I was doing, and with almost an involuntary movement, I seized the shrieking child by the hair, and dropped him behind the sledge. I saw him sink into the soft snow; there was one wild cry, and then the wolves stopped short where the boy had fallen. All this passed in less than an instant. For a minute I thought we were saved; but it was not so. The little one's cries had hardly died away in the distance when two more wolves appeared at the side of the sledge. The awful sacrifice I had made had been useless, and we were in as much danger as ever. The same fiendish thought took possession of me, and again my mind was made up. I looked first to the little darling nestling closely to my breast, and then I turned to my eldest boy, who was pale with fear and clutched nervously to the folds of my dress.

"'Oh, mother,' he whispered, 'I will be good! I won't cry; really I won't cry! Oh, mother, don't throw me into the snow!' There was a heavy mist before my eyes, and I hardly recollect what I did. Will God have mercy on me? If you could only know what I suffered then! My little daughter nestled closer than ever to my breast. She must be saved, I thought. Must I say what happened? You can guess. My eldest boy died as his brother had died before him.

"Must you hear the rest? I was almost mad now; the howling of the wolves, the horse, the last cries of my children, the awful thought of seeing my baby torn from my arms, the dread of death—all mingled into a terrible nightmare. I could not move hand or foot; my eyes were fixed, and still I clasped my babe to my bosom. I dared not look behind me; but at last I heard a terrible howl in my ear, and for a second I felt something on my shoulder. Why did I not faint? Mechanically I turned my head. I saw a wolf with open jaws clinging by his claws to the back of the sledge. He made a half spring at me, missed his hold, and fell back into the snow. Three times he made a fresh spring, and three times he missed his hold. The fourth time he got his claws on the sledge again, and there for a few seconds he hung. There was only one chance, to dash him back before he could get firm hold. His claws stuck deep into my fingers, and by main force I tried to wrench them from the sledge. It was a desperate struggle, and I had almost succeeded, when my baby fell from my arms. From that moment to the time when I first heard the sound of human voices I can remember nothing. The reins had long fallen from my hands; I knew the horse was galloping on, but I can recollect no more. I have no conception where we have been or how I got here."

The young woman again covered her face with her hands and burst into a passionate flood of tears. There was an awful silence in the room, broken every now and then by the hysterical sobs of many of the women and girls who stood round. The men trembled, too, and looked steadily on the ground, but did not speak a word. At last a white-haired woman began to speak some words of consolation in a low, trembling voice. Immediately the young serf, who had his hatchet still in his hands, strode toward the miserable woman. He was deadly pale and trembled in every limb; the expression in his face had changed suddenly. He glared fiercely at the young woman and at the old peasant, who was still trying to console her.

"Be still, mother!" he thundered out; "the wretched woman deserves none of your pity."

And then he turned to her.

"Unhappy and most miserable woman; is it possible that you have done all that you have related? You are a mother, you tell us, and yet you have killed your children one by one. Not one would you spare, not even the boy who prayed to you on his knees, or the baby child who smiled upon your breast. To save your own life you have sacrificed theirs, for you had not the courage to die with them. Woman! you do not deserve the name. You are unworthy to live. Prepare——"

There was a wild shriek in the room, and the woman fell at his feet. In an instant the peasants guessed the mad purpose of the young serf. Two of the strongest rushed forward to stop his hand. They were too late. A wild, awful light glittered in the young man's eyes; with almost supernatural strength he dashed the peasants back. The hatchet whistled through the air, and in an instant the unhappy woman was dead at his feet.

* * * * *

Three months after the terrible scene related above the young serf was brought up before the highest criminal court and charged with willful murder.

There was no need to prolong the trial. The young serf was found guilty of murder and condemned to die.

But eventually, by the direct command of the Emperor, the sentence of the court was reversed, and the young serf was committed to ten years' servitude in Siberia.

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

WHIST and poker-players would do well to avoid packs of green cards. A young Glasgow physician has recently discovered the presence of both arsenic and Schweinfurt green in the coloring of "greenback" cards. Moist hands, dealing such packs for several hours at a time, can easily cause toxical accidents.

THE Bank of England has no end of valuables committed to its keeping. The vaults of its establishment hold moldering chests, deposited there for safety's sake, and apparently forgotten by their owners. In 1873 one fell to pieces from sheer rottenness, exposing to sight a quantity of massive plate and a bundle of yellow papers. The latter proved to be a collection of love letters of the period of the restoration, which the Directors were enabled to restore to the lineal descendant of the original owner.

HOW SPIDERS live under water is thus explained: The creature goes to the surface of the water and moves all its legs busily, just as if it were trying to crawl out of the water. Suddenly it gives a sharp jerk or kick, and dives beneath the surface. It then looks exactly as if it were surrounded by a case of polished silver, owing to a bubble of air which it has inclosed beneath its long hind legs. Besides this there are a number of smaller bubbles which cling to the other legs, and which can be added to the principal bubble when needed. This supply of air is sufficient to last the spider for a considerable time.

IT is a curious fact that three female sovereigns are ill at the same time—the Empress of Russia, the Queen of Italy and the Queen of Sweden. Some fatality has attached itself to the number three during 1879. Attempts have been made upon the lives of three of the crowned heads of Europe—the Emperors of Russia and Germany and the King of Italy. Three foreign potentates have been dispossessed—the Ameer of Cabul, the Khedive of Egypt and the King of Zululand. Three famous actors have died—Falconer, Buckstone and Mathews—and the fourth estate is not without its fatal adhesion to the unlucky numeral. Three editors, or proprietors, of foremost newspapers have bade "long farewell to all their greatness"—Lawson, Delane and Serjeant Cox.

IN the erection of the Pyramids of Egypt the immense stones used were obtained from the quarries in the Arabian hills, and were carried over the river by a bridge of boats. They were then brought by means of a causeway, which of itself it took ten years to construct, and which is said to have been a fine work, with its polished stones and figures of animals engraved on them. One hundred thousand men were employed at a time, and these were relieved by the same number at the end of three months. A long time was spent in leveling off the rocks on which the edifice stands, and twenty years for the edifice itself. The stones were raised, step by step, by means of a machine made of short pieces of wood, and, last of all, commencing from the top, the stones were cemented together by layers of cement not thicker than a strip of paper, the strength of which is improved by the age of these enormous materials.

EACH of our features is supposed to have a language—eyes, nose and mouth. But the language of hair has been formulated in the following manner: Straight, lank, stringy-looking hair indicates weakness and cowardice. Curly hair denotes quick temper. Frizzy hair, set on one's head as if each individual hair were ready to fight its neighbor, denotes coarseness. Black hair indicates persistent resolution in accomplishing an object, also a strong predisposition to avenge wrongs and insult—real or fancied. Brown hair denotes fondness for life, a friendly disposition, ambition, earnestness of purpose, capacity for business, reliability in friendship, in proportion as the hair is fine. Very fine hair indicates an even disposition, a readiness to forgive, with a desire to add to the happiness of others. Persons with fine light-brown or auburn hair, inclined to curl or friz, are quick-tempered, and are given to resentment and revenge. Light-brown hair, inclined to redness, with a freckled skin, is a certain indication of deceit, treachery and a disposition to do something mean by a friend who can no longer be used to advantage. We give the information as we find it, and it is about as true as such things generally are.

LAST DAYS OF THE WAR.

Grant, Lincoln and Stanton.

(From Young's "Around the World with Grant.")

A question was asked as to whether Lincoln's presence [in Virginia] was in connection with the army direction. "Not at all," said the General. "I merely told him what I had done, not what I meant to do. I was then making the movement by the left which ended in the surrender of Lee. When I returned to Washington, Lincoln said, 'General, I half suspected that movement of yours would end the business, and wanted to ask you, but did not like to.' Of course, I could not have told him, if he had asked me, because the one thing a General in command of an army does not know is what the result of a battle is until it is fought. I never would have risked my reputation with Mr. Lincoln by any such prophecies. As a matter of fact, however, my own mind was pretty clear as to what the effect of the movement would be. I was only waiting for Sheridan to finish his raid around Lee to make it. When Sheridan arrived from that raid, and came to my quarters, I asked him to take a walk. As we were walking, I took out his orders and gave them to him. They were orders to move on the left and attack Lee. If the movement succeeded, he was to advance. If it failed, he was to make his way into North Carolina and join Sherman. When Sheridan read this part, he was, as I saw, disappointed. His countenance fell. He had just made a long march, a severe march, and now the idea of another march into North Carolina would disconcert any commander—even Sheridan. He, however, said nothing. I said: 'Sheridan, although I have provided for your retreat into North Carolina in the event of failure, I have no idea that you will fail—no idea that you will go to Carolina. I mean to end the business right here.' Sheridan's eyes lit up, and he said, 'That's the talk. Let us end the business here.' But of course I had to think of the loyal North, and, if we failed in striking Lee, it would have satisfied the North for Sheridan to go to the Carolinas. The movement, however, succeeded, and my next news from Sheridan was the battle of Five Forks—one of the finest battles in the war.

"I am always grateful," said the General, "that Mr. Lincoln spent the last, or almost the last, days of his life with me. His coming was almost an accident. One of my people said one day, 'Why don't you ask the President to come down and visit you?' I answered that the President was in command of the army, and could come when he wished. It was then hinted that the reason he did not come was that there had been so much talk about his interference with Generals in the field that he felt delicate about appearing at headquarters. I at once telegraphed Mr. Lincoln that it would give me the greatest pleasure to see him, and to have him see the army. He came at once. He was really most anxious to see the army, and be with it in its final struggle. It was an immense relief to him to get away from Washington. He remained at my headquarters until Richmond was taken. He entered Richmond, and I went after Lee."

Another character about whom the General often spoke was Stanton, the Secretary of War under Lincoln. "Stanton's reputation," he said, on one occasion, "rests a good deal on his quarrel with President Johnson, and in this his character is treated unjustly. Stanton's relations with Johnson were the natural result of Johnson's desire to change the politics of the administration, and Stanton's belief that such a change would be disastrous to the Union. Of course a man of Stanton's temper, so believing, would be in a condition of passionate anger. He believed that Johnson was Jefferson Davis in another form, and he used his position in the Cabinet like a picket holding his position on the line; but if Johnson had desired to remove Stanton he would have done so. So far as the difference of opinion between the President and the Secretary of War is concerned, the responsibility is placed on the President. The constitution is such that Johnson was right and Stanton was wrong; and this clinging to office by Stanton has injured him in the eyes of the country. We were all under deep feeling at that time. It tried the patience of the most patient man to see all the results of the war deliberately laid at the feet of the South by the man we trusted. Stanton was not a patient man, but one whose temper had been tried by severe labor, and whose love for the Union was volcanic in its fierceness. If people would only remember the privation under which Stanton acted they would do him more justice. I confess, however, I should not have liked to have been in Johnson's place. Stanton required a man like Lincoln to manage him. I should not have liked to have had that responsibility. At the same time Stanton is one of the great men of the republic. He was as much a martyr to the Union as Sedgwick or McPherson. I held him in great personal esteem, and his character in high honor. We never became very intimate; but looking back on our intercourse I am gratified to think that every day that Stanton lived we grew better and better friends. After my election to the Presidency, one of Stanton's friends came to see me, and said the Secretary was in bad health, his fortune was limited, and he thought the Republican party of the country owed him a debt of gratitude. I asked him what he thought would be gratifying to Stanton. I was told a small mission to Italy, Belgium or somewhere where the climate would be agreeable, would be grateful to his friends. I said I thought I could do for him much more than that, and that I had already resolved to make him Justice of the Supreme Court. A few days later the appointment was made. It was a great surprise to Stanton. His letter to me acknowledging it was beautiful and affectionate. He died within a few days of his appointment. I have always thought that the country could not do too much for Stanton and his family; and after the father's death I did all I could for the son. I made him my personal attorney. The promising young man died, to my great regret, not long since. If I were asked to name the greatest men of the republic, I certainly should include Stanton among them."

Phillips and Ingersoll.

Rep.—Now, then, what have you to say about Phillips as an orator? How does he compare with Ingersoll?

J. R.—They don't compare, they contrast. When I was in Boston last year with Col. Ingersoll we took a walk in the Common. A young lawyer, a friend of mine, came up, and I introduced him to the Colonel. He was quite enthusiastic over Ingersoll's lecture, delivered the night before, and he said:

"Col. Ingersoll, I must say I never heard an orator equal to you, except Wendell Phillips."

That was considered, of course, the very highest eulogy that a Boston man could make on an orator.

"Well," said Ingersoll, taking the cigar out of his mouth, "I don't consider that any compliment at all. Wendell Phillips is no more an orator than a mathematician is a poet."

That young man was like the rich man in the parable in one respect—he went away sorrowing. I would not mention this incident, but it was too good to keep, and it spread over Boston, although it never got into the papers; for afterward, when Ingersoll, in Boston, ridiculed the belief that Milton and Dante were poets, nothing seemed to the "literary fellows" too absurd for him to say. Ingersoll, as I understand him, regards all true oratory and true poetry as an exalted expression of the passions and emotions of human nature; outside of that range you may have able arguers, or able narrators in speech, or able historians, and able painters in verse, but because they are outside of that sacred circle they are not orators or poets in any true sense of the word. He spoke contemptuously of Milton as a word carpenter. After all, you see, Ingersoll's apparent absurdity is simply a question of definition. Now, Mr. Phillips never appeals to the emotions. To him the public in a democracy is the supreme court of opinion, and he addresses its intellect only. He is never moved, and he never moves, but he is convinced and he converts. He talks as quietly on the platform as if he were speaking in a parlor. He rarely moves more than a foot from the spot where he first stood, and his gestures are as quiet as his elocution. He never raises his voice loudly, although it is easily heard in the largest hall.—Interview with James Redpath.

Neglect of the Eye.

Whatever an ounce of prevention may be to other members of the body, it certainly is worth many pounds of cure to the eye. Like a chronometer watch, this delicate organ will stand any amount of use, not to say abuse, but when once thrown off its balance it very rarely can be brought back to its original perfection of action, or, if it is, it becomes ever after liable to a return of disability of function, or the seat of actual disease. One would have supposed from this fact, and from the fact that modern civilization has imposed upon the eye an ever-increasing amount of strain, both as to the actual amount of work done, and the constantly increasing brilliancy and duration of the illumination under which it is performed, that the greatest pains would have been exercised in maintaining the organ in a condition of health, and the greatest care and solicitude used in its treatment when diseased. And yet it is safe to say there is no organ in the body the welfare of which is so persistently neglected as the eye.

I have known fond and doting mothers take their children of 4 and 5 years of age to have their first teeth filled, instead of having them extracted, so that the jaw might not suffer in its due development, and become in later years contracted, while the eye, the most intellectual, the most apprehensive, and the most discriminating of all our organs, receives not even a passing thought, much less an examination. It never seems to occur to the parents that the principal agent in a child's education is the eye; that through it it gains not only its sense of the methods and ways of existence of others, but even the means for the maintenance of its own; nor does it occur to the parents for an instant that many of the mental as well as bodily attributes of a growing child are fashioned, even if they are not created, by the condition of the eye alone.

A child is put to school without the slightest inquiry on the part of the parent, and much less on the part of the teacher, whether it has the normal amount of sight; whether it sees objects sharply and well defined, or indistinctly and distorted; whether it be near-sighted or far-sighted; whether it sees with one or two eyes; or finally, if it does see clearly and distinctly, whether it is not using a quantity of nervous force sufficient after a time not only to exhaust the energy of the visual organ, but the nervous system at large.

Ambition on a Downward Grade.

I met a man to-day who is a type of the persevering office-seeker. To my knowledge he has been looking for "something" from the "party" ever since 1872. "What are you after now?" I asked. "Well," said he, "two years ago I tried to get nominated for the Assembly, but I failed. Last year I went for an Aldermanic nomination in New York, but I missed it. In [illegible] I came mighty near going to Congress, but didn't get the nomination after all, and now I'm waiting to take anything. What do you think they'd pay a boss carpenter on the Capitol?"—Albany letter to Syracuse Courier.

The Oneida Community.

Since the clergymen's agitation against the "mixed-marriage" system of the Oneida community twenty weddings have taken place there. These, with the twenty-five couples who had become members after wedlock, made forty-five married couples. The population of the community is 299, 57 of whom are children under 10, and 26 young people under 20. One member is over 90 years of age; 5 over 80; 26 over 70; 57 over 60; 97 over 50; 143 over 40; 191 over 30, and 210 over 20.

GLADNESS.

BY ALMO.

The world is full of gladness
To those who own its power
It sparkles in the sunlight
And blossoms in the flower;
It glances with the streamlet,
Adown the verdant hill,
And warbles with the wild bird,
Amid the forest still.

It twinkles in the dew-drop
Within the flower's bell;
It breathes in gentle murmurs
Where the pure waters swell;
It dances in the tree-tops,
The clinging buds above,
And whispers in the zephyr
Like the soft breath of love.

Then why forever sorrow,
Though cares and griefs are ours,
When every blissful morrow
Wakes fairer, brighter flowers?
While sweet and bounteous nature
Is redolent with joy
We all may live in gladness,
Though grief and good alloy.

HOW IS it, in fashionable weddings, that we always have a catalogue of the bride's wearing apparel, while we never hear of the groom having so much as a new pair of socks.

A PROPER conclusion for the marriage ceremony in many of our fashionable "society" weddings would be, "what commercial interests have joined together let not ill-temper put asunder?"

A MEMBER of a debating club down in the country was soaring in the flights of spread-eagle eloquence. He flew his kite over republics and their institutions, and then began to mention Dukes, Emperors, Kings and Queens. As he came down to Queens some unregenerate heathen parenthetically adding, "And ten-spots," broke the orator all to pieces, paralyzed the society, and the ayes had it on a resolution to adjourn.—Des Moines Register.

"Oh, give me, Mary," said young Fred,
The while the maid was slyly laughing;
He said no more, so great his dread
Of the fair maiden's merry chaffing.
He stroked his infantile mustache,
While Mary tenderly was sighing;
Again he made the venture rash—
"Oh, dearest Mary, I am dying—"
"For what?" she asked, with assumed fear,
Her foolish heart now madly beating;
"Oh," stammered Fred, "I'm dying, dear,
To taste those peanuts you are eating."

Definition of Poetry.

Poetry is the product of earnest thought. Thought cherished in the mind becomes earnest; then expressed in words it becomes poetry. The feelings move inwardly, and are embodied in words. When words are insufficient for them, recourse is had to sighs and exclamations. When sighs and exclamations are insufficient for them, recourse is had to the prolonged utterance of song. When this, again, is insufficient, unconsciously the hands begin to move and the feet to dance. To set forth correctly the successes and failures (of Government) to affect heaven and earth, and to move spiritual beings, there is no readier instrument than poetry.—Sacred Books of China.

How He Was Discouraged.

"So you want to marry my daughter, do you?" said the father to 22 years of trembling manhood.

"How can you support her? What salary do you get."

"O, my salary's small, but I'd come and—and—live—with—you!"

"Come and live with me, eh?"

And something as hard as an Egyptian pyramid struck the young man amidships, and, gathering himself up, he concluded to board with his mother a few weeks longer.

SABBATH READING.

God is Watching Over All.

It is twilight, and the shadows
Are deepening everywhere,
And the snow-flakes softly falling
Among the trees so bare
Seem to whisper in our ears,
As from above they fall,
"Don't forget the loving Father
Who is watching over all."

Little orphans cold and hungry,
In the city's dreary street,
Begging for a crust of bread
Of every one they meet,
All are subjects of His care,
And while the snow flakes fall
From the great white throne above
God is watching over all.

And we, whose earthly lot is blessed
With life's most golden store,
Should give from out our plenty
To the hungry and the poor,
And by thus dispensing comforts
To the needy everywhere
We shall earn this golden blessing,
Our Father's watchful care.

And to Him whose tender kindness
Doth guard us day and night,
Who gently guides our weary feet
In sunny paths of light,
We should raise our grateful thanks
For His kindness to us here;
For He gently watches over all,
And none have need to fear.

The Scolding Minister.

The Christian at Work says that the scolding minister never gets on well with his people. He sickens and sours them at himself, and either sends them away altogether, or tempts them to remain as thorns in his side or as a smoke in his eyes. Faithfulness does not necessarily mean incessant fault-finding. He who is not meager in his commendation when commendation, is merited, will rarely have occasion to condemn, and when he condemns, his words will be without offense, and so be effective. So, again, a complaining people will never make the best of their pastor. If they want to improve him, let them "try him with a compliment." Instead of speaking at him when his discourses do no good, let them tell him when his words have been helpful to them, and very soon they will have more such sermons from his lips. It may be that his very tartness is itself the consequence of despondency, because he imagines that he is doing little good, and a cheering sentence from one whom he has benefited may be all that is needed to sweeten him. Encourage him, therefore. If the 7,000 secret worshipers of Baal had only made themselves known to Elijah, he might never have been tempted to run away from Jezebel and throw himself beneath the juniper tree, And who knows how many faithful, earnest pastors to-day are sorely cast down, because the fault-finders are always noisy, while those who have been benefited are silent? It will not hurt a good minister to be told that he has not labored in vain, but it may be to him a stimulus to even more earnest effort than he has yet put forth.

The Power of Song.

In one of the hospitals of Edinburgh lay a wounded Scottish soldier. The surgeons had done all they could for him. He had been told that he must die. He had a contempt for death, and prided himself on his fearlessness in facing it.

A rough and wicked life, with none but evil associates, had blunted his sensibilities and made profanity and scorn his second nature. To hear him speak one would have thought he had no piously-nurtured childhood to remember, and that he had never looked upon religion but to despise it. But it was not so.

A noble and gentle-hearted man came to see the dying soldier. He addressed him with kind inquiries, talked to him tenderly of the life beyond death, and offered spiritual counsel. But the sick man paid him no attention or respect. He bluntly told him that he didn't want any religious conversation.

"You will let me pray with you, will you not?" said the man at length.

"No; I know how to die without the help of religion." And he turned his face to the wall.

Further conversation could do no good, and the man did not attempt it. But he was not discouraged. After a moment's silence he began to sing the old hymn, so familiar and so dear to every congregation in Scotland:

> Oh, mother dear, Jerusalem,
> When shall I come to thee?

He had a pleasant voice, and the words and melody were sweet and touching as he sung them. Pretty soon the soldier turned his face again. But its hardened expression was all gone.

"Who taught you that?" he asked, when the hymn was done.

"My mother."

"So did mine. I learned it of her when I was a child, and I used to sing it with her." And there were tears in the man's eyes.

The ice was thawed away. It was easy to talk with him now. The words of Jesus entered in where the hymn had opened the door. Weeping, and with a hungry heart, he listened to the Christian's thoughts of death, and in his last moments turned to his mother's God and the sinner's Friend.—Religious Herald.

Voltaire's Remains.

When he died at Paris in May, 1778, the church there refused sepulture to its arch-enemy, and his body was interred in Champagne. During the revolution the National Assembly decreed that Voltaire's remains should be brought to Paris, and they were accordingly deposited in the Pantheon with great pomp, in 1791. Thither, too, presently came the body of Rousseau. One dark night in May, 1814, when the Bourbons were enjoying their own again, some of the faithful, indignant that the bones of such enemies to religion should rest in consecrated ground, threw them pell-mell into a sack, and carried them to a point in the suburbs near Bercy, where there was a large vacant lot belonging to the city. Here a hole had been already dug, and the contents of the sack were shaken into it and covered with quick lime. The hole was then filled in, and the conspirators trampled down the earth. Voltaire's heart had been saved by a friend, in whose family it remained until 1864. On its then being offered to the Government, Napoleon III. decided that it should be placed with the body. On consulting the Archbishop of Paris, that functionary suggested the expediency of verifying the actual presence of Voltaire's remains. An investigation followed, and the truth came out. The heart was then placed in the National Library, and a portion of the brain appropriated by the surgeon at the autopsy was publicly sold. Its present whereabouts is unknown.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

To Cure a Cough.—Roast a lemon very carefully, without burning it; when it is thoroughly hot, cut and squeeze into a cup upon three ounces of sugar, finely powdered. Take a spoonful whenever your cough troubles you. It is as good as it is agreeable to the taste.

A good cure for colds is to boil two ounces of flaxseed in one quart of water; strain, and add two ounces of rock candy, one-half pint of honey, juice of three lemons; mix, and let all boil well; let cool, and bottle. Dose, one cupful before bed, one-half cupful before meals. The hotter you drink it the better.

The Medicine of Sunshine.—The world wants more sunshine in its disposition, in its business, in its charities, in its theology. For 10,000 of the aches and pains, and irritations of men and women we recommend sunshine. It soothes better than morphine. It stimulates better than champagne. It is the best plaster for a wound. The good Samaritan poured out into the fallen traveler's gash more of this than of oil. Florence Nightingale used it on the Crimean battlefields. Take it into all the alleys, on board all the ships, by all the sick-beds. Not a vial full, not a cup full, but a soul full. It is good for spleen, for liver complaint, for neuralgia, for rheumatism, for falling fortunes, for melancholy.

How People Get Sick.—Eating too much and too fast; swallowing imperfectly-masticated food; using too much fluid at meals; drinking poisonous whisky and other intoxicating drinks; repeatedly using poison as medicine; keeping late hours at night and sleeping late in the morning; wearing clothing too tight; wearing thin shoes; neglecting to wash the body sufficiently to keep the pores open; exchanging the warm clothing worn in a warm room during the day for costumes and exposure incident to evening parties; compressing the stomach to gratify a vain and foolish passion for dress; keeping up constant excitement; fretting the mind with borrowed troubles; swallowing quack nostrums for every imaginary ill; taking meals at irregular intervals, etc.

Health Hints.—In cold weather many people suffer severely from taking sudden colds. Everybody has found that they can face a wind with comparative safety; but if the wind come on the back a cold is the sudden consequence. We advise people who are a part of the time in the house and a part of the time exposed to the cold, to have thick woolen cloth, six or eight inches in width, sewed to the lining of the vest so as to cover the spine. Generally, the undershirt is double in front, then the linen bosom is three double; the vest padded and made three or four thicknesses; the coat, with its lapels and buckram, is heavy, and the overcoat is padded and buttoned across the chest again—while the back is not one-fourth part as warmly clad; the shirt-back is thin; the back of the vest thin muslin and but one thickness; the coat and the overcoat are much thinner behind than before.

The Art of Praising Wine.

The art of drinking wine at dinner is said to be unknown save in Bordeaux, France. "The butler," writes a foreign correspondent, "with a serious air, announces, on pouring it, 'Chateau Giscourt,' 'Lascombe,' or Margaux of 1849. The guest silently takes the glass between his thumb and forefinger, raises it to a level with his eye, and, with a slight movement of the elbow, gives the liquid a rotary movement. This sets free the aroma. He sniffs the perfume circulating on the edge of the glass, then drinks it off deliberately in small installments. Silence follows; the guests look at each other; the host has an anxious air awaiting the verdict. Then opinions are given in turn in a serious tone, and the wealth of adjectives at the command of a Bordelais is revealed. If the judgment is unfavorable the wine is declared 'rebellious,' 'hard,' 'soulless,' 'disagreeable,' 'hateful,' 'contrary,' 'imperious;' and I heard my neighbor, a man of weight and wit, describe the wine we were drinking as 'dumb.' If, on the contrary, the judgment is favorable, eyes sparkle and the wine is styled 'amiable,' 'gracious,' 'seductive,' 'passionate,' 'elegant,' 'rich,' 'proud,' 'grand,' 'beautiful,' 'sweet,' 'perfumed,' 'insinuating,' 'coquettish,' 'ravishing,' 'incomparable,' 'full of love.' 'But, madam,' said I to the lady next me, 'since your husband gives such adjectives to wine, what does he use to you to express his affection?' 'Well,' she replied, 'he calls me Lafitte, 1848.'"—New York World.

Gave Him His Answer.

It was a sad thing for Lettie Davis when she put out her washing on the clothes-line of her South Fifth avenue abode Peterson Knapp was there on the watch, and it is alleged carried off the raiment, part and parcel. At all events, a policeman arrested him for the offense, and he went to the Police Court prepared to maintain his innocence by counsel. Lettie was there, too, and, in spite of numerous trying interruptions from the counsel, she got down to the point in her narrative where she discovered Peterson, longingly eying the clothes as she hung them out.

"Dat brack niggah," she said, ungently apostrophizing the prisoner; "he stood dah wif an ole clay pipe shoved whar it 'ud do the moss good, and he puffin' as if he'd like to split. But de way he looked at dem clothes was quite 'nuff to show enny reason'ble oomans dat dey wasn't safe."

"Come, witness," quoth counsel, sarcastically, "tell us just what kind of a look that is."

"Oh, you get out," was the snappish rejoinder.

"I insist on that question; how did the prisoner look to convey the impression the clothes were in danger?"

Witness was ready with another tart reply, but his Honor said:

"Come, you must answer; how did he look?"

The witness seemed puzzled.

"Did he look," asked his Honor, glancing around for a smile, "did he look like—like counsel, for instance?"

"Oh, 'deed, no, sah," replied the witness. "If he looked de least bit like dat gemman dere wouldn't been no robbery at all."

"Ah," said the flattered counselor, "how's that?"

"I'd made udder arrangements."

"Indeed," he continued, smiling, "what might they have been?"

"Why, if he looked at all like you does, I wouldn't have dar'd to hang dem clothes out at all."

There were no interruptions from that time on.—New York Herald.

The Interior of Australia.

The western half of Australia has been traveled in three parallel lines about 300 miles apart, while various shorter explorations have made known large portions of the intermediate country. The southern and northern coasts are also fairly known, and we are forced to conclude that nearly half of the entire continent of Australia is uninhabitable by Europeans. Nowhere else, perhaps, on the globe do we meet with this strange phenomenon of a dense vegetation combined with an aridity equal to that of the Sahara. For the traveler the country is worse even than the Sahara. For hundreds of miles at a stretch the sandy undulations are covered with the dreaded spinifex, or porcupine grass, which renders it impossible to walk without painful precaution. Again, for hundreds of miles is found the dense scrub of dwarf eucalyptus, covering the ground like the rods of an osier bed, ten or twelve feet high, hindering all view of the country, and rendering it necessary literally to bore one's way, like a mole, underground. Then come acacia scrubs, which add the annoyance of sharp prickles to those of the other kinds. Mr. Giles tells us that horses dread the trioda or spinifex, like a pestilence. The constant pricking of this grass causes raw and bleeding swelling round their feet; and to escape from it they will prefer to force their way through the densest scrubs, where the ground is soft and the spinifex does not grow. Here they rush along, tearing the coverings off their loads, and frequently forcing sticks between their backs and their saddles; then comes a frantic crushing through the scrub; loads are forced off, and horses are lost sight of, and it may take hours or days to recover them. Nor do the travelers escape, for their clothes got torn and ripped to pieces, and their bodies scratched and often seriously wounded. Sometimes stinging ants abound to such an extent that the wearied explorer can get no rest. However hot and tired he may be, he does not lie down in the shade, but must remain exposed to the sun, or lie on the heated soil in order to escape this torment. In other parts the whole country is a mass of angular stones, over which the traveler has to pass for days together, without finding a spot of easier ground; while in some districts loose sand is heaped up in ridges like the long swell of the ocean, and appearing almost as interminable. Often, after passing days without water, when at length it is discovered it turns out to be undrinkable brine, or it exists in such small quantity as to be insufficient to supply the wants of both men and horses for a single day. Again, the extreme uncertainty of the rainfall renders it impossible to depend upon the accounts of previous explorers in the same district.

How Nutmegs Grow.

Nutmegs grow on little trees which look like small pear trees, and are generally over twenty feet high. The flowers are very much like the lily of the valley. They are pale and very fragrant. The nutmeg is the seed of the fruit, and mace is the thin covering over this seed. The fruit is about as large as a peach. When ripe it breaks open and shows the little nut inside. The trees grow on the islands of Asia and in tropical America. They bear fruit for seventy or eighty years, having ripe fruit upon them at all seasons. A fine tree in Jamaica has over 4,000 nutmegs on it yearly. The Dutch used to have all this nutmeg trade, as they owned the Banda islands, and conquered all the other traders and destroyed the trees. To keep the price up they once burned three piles of nutmegs, each of which was as large as a church. Nature did not sympathize with their meanness. The nutmeg pigeon, found in all the Indian islands, did for the world what the Dutch determined should not be done—carried the nuts, which are their food, into all the surrounding countries, and trees grew up again, and the world had the benefit.

The Healthiest City in the United States.

In the annual tables of vital statistics, published by the Health Department of New York city, among the exhibits is the comparative death rate of various cities, American and foreign. The exhibit gives the population and death rate of over 350 cities in different parts of the world, of which sixty are American and the remainder foreign.

It appears from these tables that the city of Burlington, Iowa, with a population in 1875 of about 20,000, enjoys the pre-eminence for health, its annual death rate being only 4.84 deaths per 1,000 souls. Stockton, Cal., stands next, 7.47; but this is 62 per cent. more unhealthy than Burlington. There are probably a few, but only a few, more favored places than the latter in all the world. The death rate for New York city is 23.93 per 1,000; New Orleans, 50.71; London, 23.40; Paris, 24.71.

Old age and gray hairs creep along together, and the widower with snow-white beard immediately reduces it to dark brown, by means of dye. This looks beautiful, after three weeks' growth leaves a rim of white next his face.

THE NEW SCHEME TO ELECT GEN. GRANT.

Changing the Mode of Appointing Electors in New York.

[Washington Cor. New York Sun.]

The movement in the New York Legislature to change the established practice of choosing electors for President by general ticket has produced a profound impression in political circles here at the capital. To suppose that so grave a proposition could be ventured without having been well considered and matured by the Republican leaders, or that it is merely tentative, with a view of testing public opinion on a hazardous political expedient, would be absurd.

That bill was introduced without any previous announcement, and was a surprise to both parties not in the secrets of the managers. This fact is of itself significant as to the design of the scheme. Only the faithful few who run the machine and who dictate the party policy, with their staff in the Legislature, were permitted to know when and by whose hand the trap was to be sprung into which the unwary and the feebly protesting moderates will ultimately fall.

The inspiration of this trick, to take away from the body of the people of New York their accustomed privilege of voting squarely for a full ticket of electors, which is the nearest approach to voting directly for the President of their choice, is easily traced. Mr. Conkling last fall, and on previous occasions, assumed the Democratic theory of the Presidential campaign to rest on the following basis: Given 138 votes from the solid South, add Indiana, 15, and New York, 35, and the Democratic candidate would be elected by 3 majority. Therefore, said he, New York is the necessary factor to make this calculation a success. Hence the importance of breaking the column, by hook or by crook, in order to elect a Republican. To that object, above and beyond all others, Mr. Conkling's efforts, ability and boldness have been directed. The last three test elections have demonstrated that the Republican party, under his management, is in a minority on the popular vote. The figures are worthy of notice. Here they are:

1876.

PRESIDENT.

Tilden.	Hayes.	Cooper.
521,949	489,207	1,987

Tilden's majority over both.........30,755

1878.

JUDGE OF COURT OF APPEALS.

Bradley (D.)	Danforth (R.)	Tucker (G.)	Van Cott (Pro.)
356,451	391,112	75,133	4,234

Republican majority over Democrat.........34,661
Republican minority on total vote.........40,473

1879.

GOVERNOR.

Robinson (D.)	375,790	Kelly (I. D.)	77,566
Cornell (R.)	418,567	Lewis (G.)	20,286
Mears (Pro.)	4,437

Cornell's majority over Robinson.........42,777
Cornell's minority against Robinson and Kelley.........34,789
Cornell's minority on total vote.........59,512

These consecutive expressions at the ballot-box have informed Mr. Conkling that his machine electors for President cannot be chosen this year, if a proper candidate be nominated by the Opposition.

Mr. Conkling proposes by a revolutionary trick to overthrow the consecrated usage in New York, and to strike down the popular mode of appointing electors, now accepted all over the Union. Or, in other words, he intends to repeal the present law of a general ticket, and to substitute for it an election by Congressional districts under the existing apportionment. By this he would expect to carry nineteen or twenty of the thirty-three, even if the two electors-at-large were carried by the Opposition.

If this programme should succeed, the Democratic calculation, as stated by Mr. Conkling, of the solid South, backed by Indiana and New York, would be upset, and the Republican chance to elect a candidate would be largely increased. It may be asked, Will Mr. Conkling dare to drive this measure through, and thus to defy public opinion? Certainly he will do it, because it is the only mode by which his aim can be compassed, if at all. With a revolt against him by the young scratchers and anti-third-termers inevitable, and defeat staring him in the face before the people, he is forced to this resort of circumventing a free and full vote.

Of course the Republican Legislature, with a majority of two-thirds in the Senate and more than three-fifths in the House, will do whatever the leaders may order. Discipline and dictation have made them obedient instruments of arrogant authority. A few may at first be inclined to resist, but their scruples will yield to the expectation of reward or to menaces of proscription. Your cowardly politician dreads most of all things to be caught in a minority of bolters and malcontents, which would throw him out of the regular line.

Behind this movement the figure of the Strong Man for a third term looms up at full length. He cannot carry New York if the people are allowed to vote their true sentiments, and therefore it is proposed to jockey them out of nearly two-thirds of the electors of the State by transferring the choice to gerrymandered districts. It is essentially a Grant scheme. This is one of the results of the great fraud by which the Presidency was stolen, and the consummation of which Mr. Conkling was morally pledged to prevent when he fled to Baltimore the day that the electoral vote of Louisiana, with false and forged certificates, was counted.

LETTER FROM TILDEN.

To the Essex County (N. J.) Democratic Club.

Gentlemen: I regret that I shall not be able to attend your dinner on Jan. 8, in commemoration of the services of Andrew Jackson, not so much in the great victory by which he rescued the southwestern part of our country from the foreign invader as in the example of an administration of the Government on its true principles. While he maintained the integrity of the country against the public enemy, and suppressed nullification and secession at home, he was opposed to usurpation of powers by the Federal Government in derogation of the rights of individuals or localities, and in violation of the constitution. On one memorable occasion he said: "It is to be regretted that the rich and powerful too often bend the acts of government to their selfish purposes. Distinction in society will always exist under every just Government. Equality of talents, these natural and just advantages artificial distinctions, to grant titles, gratuities and exclusive privileges—to make the rich richer and the potent more powerful—the humble members of society, the farmers, mechanics and laborers, who have neither the time nor the means of securing like favors to themselves, have a right to complain of the injustice of their Government. There are no necessary evils in government. Its evils exist only in its abuses. If it would confine itself to equal protection, and, as heaven does its rains, shower its favors alike on the high and the low, the rich and the poor, it would be an unqualified of education, or of wealth cannot be produced by human institutions. In the full enjoyment of the gifts of heaven and the fruits of superior industry, economy and virtue, every man is equally entitled to protection by law. But when the laws undertake to add to blessing." "Nor is our Government to be maintained or our Union preserved by invasion of the rights and powers of the several States. In thus attempting to make our General Government strong we make it weak. Its true strength consists in leaving individuals and States as much as possible to themselves; in making itself felt, not in its power, but in its beneficence; not in its control, but in its protection; not in binding the States more closely to its center, but leaving each to move unobstructed in its proper orbit."

Tendering you the assurances of my esteem, I am very truly yours,

S. J. Tilden.

INDIANA NEWS.

The roads are in a terrible condition in various parts of the State from the recent heavy rains.

There are three headless roosters exhibiting at different places in Indiana, and Mr. Bergh's agent should look to the matter.

The State Statistical Bureau has now received some 2,000 reports, and they will be compiled for publication as speedily as possible.

Mrs. Fruits, of Alamo, died last week, aged 100 years. Her husband, George Fruits, died four years ago, at the advanced age of 113.

A little child of Mr. Fuqua, of Terre Haute, was burned in a most horrible manner by venturing too near an open fire. Death relieved her sufferings next day.

There have been so many suicides among patients in the Insane Asylum that the Coroner has felt moved to censure the opportunities furnished for suicide.

For some time petty thieving has prevailed at Lexington, and a vigilance committee has notified all hard characters to leave or have their necks stretched.

A German-speaking lodge of Odd Fellows, at Vincennes, has thrown up its charter because of opposition to the order from the several German churches in that town.

The worthy professors at Asbury University, Greencastle, were much shocked, and their modesty irretrievably ruined by the full-dress costuming of Mrs. Scott-Siddons.

A couple of octogenarians applied to the Hendricks County Court for divorce. The Judge dismissed them with the remark that it was a guardian not a divorce they needed.

Benjamin Oliver, at one time the most prominent stock-dealer in Eastern Indiana, and well known among that fraternity throughout the country, died at Rushville a few days since.

John Mosier, a mute living near Morgantown, went out hunting, and, later, was found dead in a field a short distance from his home. The Coroner came to the conclusion that it was suicide.

Some Brookville boys, who had been taking lessons of a horse-tamer, attempted to train a fine horse. The result was the horse was thrown backward with such force as to cause instant death.

The Vincennes Draw-Bridge Company has just declared its first dividend of 4 per cent. The company has been in existence twelve years, and has a capital stock of $80,000, of which the city owns nearly half.

Hon. John G. Crain died, a few days ago, at Terre Haute, of a paralytic stroke. He was formerly Judge of the Criminal Court, was Collector under Lincoln's administration, and a prominent citizen of the county.

Under a recent decision of the Indiana Supreme Court, widows are no longer allowed an exemption of $500 when they are assessed less than $1,000, and they will save trouble and cost by paying their taxes while yet current.

A young couple went into Columbus to be married, and, on retiring, blew out the gas. Later in the night the door was burst open and the unconscious bride and groom were carried into the fresh air, which soon revived them. It was a lucky escape.

The students at St. Meinrad Catholic College, in Spencer county, were firing a salute in honor of the return from Europe of a favorite professor, and by a premature discharge of the small cannon, two students each lost the right eye, while another had his hand shattered.

The third wife of James C. Martin, a prominent farmer of Union county, has obtained a divorce on account of incompatibility. The parties themselves, it seems, could have lived together agreeably enough, but they each had children by former marriages, and these quarreled, and this soon involved the old folks in difficulty.

The Directors and Superintendent of the Indiana Deaf and Dumb Asylum have submitted their thirty-sixth annual report to the Governor, showing 384 pupils received, and forty-seven discharged. Receipts from all sources, $60,649.08; disbursements, $55,826.36; extraordinary expenses, specific appropriation, $12,000; expended for improvements, $5,420.67.

Prevention of the Cattle Disease.

All our cattle-raisers and cattle-dealers are deeply concerned with the cattle plague, and are naturally very anxious to prevent a disease which has caused them so great losses. The exact nature of the disorder, the means of communication and best method of treatment are not yet understood, and many contradictory opinions are held on these points. The best authorities describe it as a contagious, eruptive fever, affecting the bovine species, but which sheep, goats, deer and cognate animals may catch. The plague is indigenous to the plains of Western Russia, whence it has, at different times, extended over most parts of the Eastern hemisphere. The actual virus from infected cattle is believed to be the sole source of the disease, as no amount of filth, overcrowding or poor food has, so far as known, ever produced it. An incubative stage, varying from two to twenty days, intervenes between the introduction of the virus, either by inoculation or contagion, into the system, and the manifestation of the customary symptoms. The distemper runs a definite course, which cannot be materially altered by any remedies yet discovered. It is not at all modern, as many suppose. It has been known more than 1,200 years, having destroyed, it is thought, the herds of the fierce tribes that overran the Roman empire during the fourth and fifth centuries. About 810 it marched with the armies of Charlemagne into France, and also broke out in Britain. It has spread several times each century since from the Russian steppes over Western Europe. In 1744 it destroyed in Holland 200,000 cattle; later, in Denmark, some 300,000, and in Piedmont alone, during one year, more than 400,000 head. It has extended to Egypt, China, Japan, and other lands of the far East, has everywhere proved a dreadful scourge and has always been traced to Russia, the home of the infection, where the dreadful virus would seem to be spontaneously generated. This abounds in the blood of every stricken beast, in the discharge from the mouth, eyes, nostrils, bowels, and probably even in the breath. A little blood or mucous discharge, from an infected animal, put under the skin of a healthy beast, will develop the plague in a few days. The poison may be carried to a considerable distance in the air, for the particles, though very minute, have potent vitality. There is reason to believe that it may get into the blood by the air passages, by absorption through the mucous surfaces, or even through the skin. The only effective way to deal with infected animals is to kill them. The plague is always imported into this country, and there is great danger, unless we guard successfully against it, that it may become chronic here.

A pile of straw was left under a third-story window of the Louisville House of Refuge, and seven young girls escaped by jumping down to it.

"Nuffin 'Tall to Do."

UNCLE NED'S DISCOURSE

Now I states de preperzition, and I think 'tis very true,
Dat a man is in a dange'ous fix wid nuffin' 'tall to do.
You nebber ketch ole Satan loafin' 'roun' de cotton row,
An' he habn't got no likin' for de handle ob de hoe;
But he fasteus to de feller dat parrades aroun' de town
A-sutkin' on de ole segars he picks up off de groun',
An' struttin' 'long de pabement, wid a high falutin' smile,
An' tryin' to make a libbin' on his figgers an' his style.
Well, de debbul comes er-cross him, with his easy sort o'way,
An' he keeps him doin' nuffin' froo de pretty summer day;
Den he fools him wid his schemey tricks dat hardly ebber fail,
An' he 'lectioneers wid him till he lan's him in de jail.
Now, de thing dat boddered mudder Ebe an' fadder Adam too,
Was habin' heap too suf' a time, wid nuffin' 'tall to do;
For Adam might a-growed to be a mighty sulid man
Ef dey only had a showed him how to cultivate de lan';
An' den, instid o' bein' sich a good-fer nuffin' chap,
You'd a seed him any summer day a wadin' out de crap,
Or grubbin' in de new groun' wid de pick-ax an' de hoe,
An' pullin' up de mornin-glories 'round' de tater-row;
Den, he'd a kep' his sitivation in de garden at de leas';
An' maybe he'd a ris' to be de jestis of de peace.
Now, study 'bout de awful luck dat came to [illegible]
ordered her to [illegible]
She wasn't fit for workin' cause dey nebber l'arnt her how,
An' she couldn't make a wescut, an' she culdn't milk a cow;
But it r'a'ly was a pitty how she passed her time away.
In huntin' after chinky-pens an' slidin' on de hay;
An' dey mighty of'en stumbled on her paddlin' in de lake,
Or climmin' up de 'simmin-tree an' chattin' wid de snake.
But ef she had a-started in de safes' way to go,
An' studied up de knowledge dat a 'oman ought to know,
She'd a-growed up wid de habits ob a handy sort o' wife,
An' den she might a counted on a mighty happy life.
Den when Adam came to supper at a closin' ob de day,
He'd a-foun' her in de kitchen wid de uben an' de tray,
Jes' a-slingin' 'roun' de skillet-tops an' makin' up de bread,
Wid her fingers full o' flour an' a towel on her head.
An' den you might a-seed her little later in de night
Jes' as libe'y as a yeller-jacket fixing for a fight,
An' hangin' 'round her husban' jis' as happy as de May,
An' talkin' 'bout de matters dat had happened froo de day;
Or mixin' up de physic for his headache or his korf.
An' sewin, on his gallus-buttons when dey busted orf.
But dey neber could be satisfied with so much holiday,
Alde' dey had a easy time an eb'rything was gay;
Den dey started out a tryin' how much mischief dey could make,
Till dey tumbled to de racket ob de little garter snake.
So I 'vise you to be keerful, as you journey 'long de way,
When you stumble on a passenger wid too much holiday.

COLLECTING A BOARD BILL.

[Philadelphia News.]

James White, a colored gentleman of the old school, appeared in the Central this morning in the character of a prisoner. He said he lived at No. 915 "Frish's court," and was "an individual ob de no-humbug ordah." Daniel Potton, another gentleman of high flavor, was the prosecutor.

"Where do you live?" ask the magistrate. The witness scratched his head for some time, as though in deep thought, and then replied, "numbah 900 an' de same place whare he live." [Laughter.]

"What's your complaint?"

"Well, boss, de question am dis wise: I goes ter bed de udder ebenin' an' hangs my clothes on de wall. De nex' mo'nin' I wakes up an' de clothes was gone. 'Guess dere's been buglers here,' ses I ter myself, an' I reshes ober ter de winder fur de pupiss ob hollerin' police, when I sees dat nigger man White a-standing down on de pabement ob de cawt wif all my good clothes on his back. 'What you doin' down dere, you black nigger' I hollers. 'G'way, chile,' he ses, 'an' go ter bed. Young fellers like you ain't got no business wearin' clothes nohow.' Well, sah, dat ole nigger he keeps me in dat room fo' free days, 'cause I hadn't nuffin else to' ter put on' and I jes' laid back an' cussed an' swoah till I ketch a camp in my froat."

"What have you to say to this?" asked the magistrate, addressing the prisoner.

"You' see," replied that gentleman, "dat nigger what's been swahin' agin me is my nephew. I'se reabed him since he was a chile, an' he aint' nebber paid me no bowd money. I tole him betwix six and seben weeks ago ef he didn't come down wit de sugah I'd take his garments, suah, an' I done it fo' to keep from tellin' a lie."

He was discharged.

Terrible vengeance of a husband whose wife has gone off with a handsomer man: "Dear sir," he writes, "please send the inclosed set of false teeth to my late wife, and ask her to be so good as to return my father's, which in the hurry of the moment she took by mistake.

PARSON SAM.

A Poetical Sermon by the Colored Divine.

[Little Rock Gazette.]

Every Saturday there comes to the city from a down the river plantation, an old negro preacher, who no sooner stops at the corner of Main and Fourth streets, than a crowd of colored people gather around him. He is known as "Parson Sam," and it seems that his main object in coming to town is to give advise to the "darkies" immediately after they have sold their cotton. His last visit was politically characterized. Seating himself on a bale of cotton he waited until the crowd had gathered, when he began:

"Gen'l'men an' fellow-followers ob de Savior, I'se waited unpatiently fur sum time. I ain't much ob a political talker, fur I'se followed de Lord much closer dan I has Cap'n Grant; but now, temporarily layin' aside de religous cloak, an' putten, on de guberment garmint, I proposes to gin yer an insight into de thing what yer hain't premiously been awar. De 'publican party ob dis worl' has had a moughty fine c'reer, an' I'll jes show yer why. Long time 'go, in de town ob Jerusalem, de republicans an' de democats was buckin' agin each uder; de democrats carried ebery ward ob de town, an, de republicans was mighty cast down. One day—an' de Bible sustains me in de statement—a democrat and a republican went into de caucus room ob de temple to pray. De democrat [illegible] powerful [illegible] whip out de republicans an' dat we got plenty ob money for the naikst campaign. An' by de way, Lord, I'se much obleeged dat I ain't so honery-lookin' as dat republican standin' over dar.' Den de republican raised up his voice, an' slappin, his old shirt, an' said: 'Oh God, forgive all our sins.' An,' fellow citizens, what effect did it hab? De republicans contested de 'lection, flung out all de six ward tickets, turned out de democrats an' tuk session of de city guberment. An' now see de effect of hit ter-day in de state ob Arkansas. We'se got cullud people in de legitlation an' a nigger in de city council. An' now, gen'lemen take my 'vice. Dont bore de Lord wid a long prar. When yer talk to de Creator ob dis worl,' talk mule sense an' ter de pint.'

Incident in "God's Country."

[New York Sun.]

A woman at Nyack N. Y. subdued an adopted girl by whipping her wit thorns and then bathing her back with vinegar and salt; leaving her all night on her feet tied to a bedpost; rubbing red pepper in her mouth, and various other tortures. One day she told the child to go up stairs and undress, preparatory to being whipped until the blood ran down her legs. There was no reason to doubt the promise, and the girl, therefore, jumped out of the second story, fled naked to the woods, and froze nearly to death before she was discovered.

Special Announcement.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishishers of the STATE SENTINEL which enable us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the COURIER and WEEKLY SENTINEL one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "THE LAW OF THE FARM," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.

2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.

3rd What the deed of a farm includes.

4th The farmer's rights in the road.

5th As to farm fences.

6th As to estray and trespassing animals.

7th The farmer's liabilities for his animals.

8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.

9th Of water rights and drainage.

10th Of trespassing on the farm.

11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The INDIANA WEEKLY STATE SENTINEL is an eight-page paper, (the same as the COURIER) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the COURIER subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

George Washington's Declination.

[Springfield Republican.]

Everybody is familiar with the fact that Washington declined a re-election toward the close of his second administration, and the passages of his famous farewell address which bears upon this point have been widely quoted the last few weeks. But no one seems to have recalled a not less interesting fact, which still further emphasizes the contrast between Washington and Grant in their treatment of this issue. John Adams had not long been in the presidency before the federalist party, which had elected him, became greatly disorganized, and a strong element were outspoken against his having a second term. In this condition of affairs not a few federalist insisted that Washington must accept another election to the presidency. Governor Jonathan Trumbull, of Connecticut, was one of the most urgent in advising this policy. In [illegible] 1799, Trumbull [illegible] which he presented the considerations in favor of this scheme.

Washington's reply was one of the last communications on political subjects which he ever wrote. Oddly enough, it does not appear in Sparks' elaborate biography. The letter is dated at Mount Vernon, July 21, 1799, and, after some introductory remarks, proceeds as follows:

"It would be a matter of sore regret to me if I could believe that a serious thought was turned toward me as his (Mr. Adams') successor, not only as it respects my ardent wishes to pass through the vale of life in retirement, undisturbed in the remnant of the days I have to sojourn here, unless called upon to defend my country (which every citizen is bound to do), but on public ground also; for, although I have abundant cause to be thankful for the good health with which I am blessed, yet I am not insensible to my declination in other respects. It would be criminal, therefore, in me, although it should be the wish of my countrymen, and I could be elected, to accept an office under this conviction, which another would discharge with more ability; and this, too, at a time when I am thoroughly convinced I should not draw a single vote from the anti-federal side, and, of course, should stand upon no other ground than any other federal character well supported; and when I should become a mark for the shafts of envenomed malice and the basest calumny to fire at when I should be charged, not only with irresolution, but with concealed ambition, which awaits only an occasion to blaze out—and, in short, with dotage and imbecility. All this, I grant, ought to be like dust in the balance when put in competition with a great public good, when the accomplishment of it is apparent. But, as no problem is better defined in my mind than that principle, not men, is now and will be the object of contention, and that I could not obtain a solitary vote from that party; that any other respectable federal character would receive the same suffrages that I should; that at my time of life (verging toward three score and ten) I should expose myself, without rendering any essential service to my country, or answering the end contemplated; prudence on my part must arrest any attempt of the well-meant, but mistaken, views of my friends to introduce me again into the chair of government."

Washington's death a few months later put an end to all talk of a third term, but the tone of this letter leaves no room to doubt that he would in any event have resisted all attempts to make him again a candidate. The father of his country did not consider it above his dignity to frankly answer the letters of the people who addressed him upon this subject, nor was he disposed to wait and see whether he might be elected before declaring himself. A greater contrast could hardly be imagined than that between Washington's attitude on the third-term question a year before the election of 1800 and that of Grant on the same issue 80 years later.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and pleasant cure for Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Ashma, and all Throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. "SUNSET" COX'S SUNSET.

A Literary Curiosity—How Hon. S. S. Cox Came by the Name of "Sunset."

The following which appeared in the Ohio Statesman, May 10, 1853, is the brilliant piece of descriptive writing which won for Mr. Cox the immortal name of "Sunset:

A GREAT OLD SUNSET.

What a stormful sunset was that of last night. How glorious the storm, and how splendid the setting of the sun. We do not remember ever to have seen the like on our round globe. The scene opened in the west, with a whole horizon full of a golden interpenetrating luster which covered the foliage and brightened every object in its own rich dyes. The colors grew deeper and richer until the golden luster was transfused into a storm cloud, full of finest lightning, which [illegible] the wind arose with fury, the slender shrubs and giant trees made obeisance to its majesty. Some even snapped before its force. The strawberry beds and grass plots "turned up their whites" to see Zephyrus march by. As the rain came, and the pools formed, and the gutters hurried away, thunder roared grandly, and the fire-bells caught the excitement and rung with hearty chorus. The south and east received the copious showers, and the west all at once brightened up in a long polished belt of azure, worthy of a Sicilian sky.

Presently a cloud appeared in the azure belt, in the form of a castellated city. It became more vivid, revealing strange forms of peerless fanes and alabaster temples, and glories rare and grand in this mundane sphere. It reminds us of Wordsworth's splendid verse in his Excursion:

> "The appearance instantaneously disclosed,
> Was of a mighty city, boldly say
> A wilderness of buildings, sinking far
> And self withdrawn into a wondrous depth,
> Far sinking into splendor without end."

But the city vanished only to give place to another isle, where the most beautiful forms of foliage appeared, imaging a paradise in the distant and purified air. The sun wearied with the elemental commotion, sank behind the green plains of the west. The "great eye in heaven," however, went not down without a dark brow hanging over its departing light. The rich flush of the unearthly light had passed, and the rains had ceased, when the solemn church bells pealed; the laughter of children, out and joyous after the storm, is heard with the carol of birds, while the forked and purple weapon of the skies still darted illumination around the startling cottage, trying to rival its angels and leap into its dark windows.

Candles are lighted; the piano strikes up; we feel it is good to have a home; good to be on the earth when such revelations of beauty and power may be made, and as we cannot refrain from reminding our readers of everything wonderful in our city, we have begun and ending our feeble etching of a sunset which comes so rarely that its glory should be committed to immortal type.

A Parrot in a Car.

[Poughkeepsie Eagle.]

The passengers in one of the drawing-room cars on the train leaving New York at 10:30 A. M. were greatly amused Saturday by the performance of a parrot. A family from the country entered the car at the Grand Central depot with a large brilliantly-colored parrot in a cage. The cage was hung up in the car, and the bird silently watched the entering passengers and preserved a calm dignity until the train started on its northward journey. The rattling motion soon stirred Poll's tongue into life, however, and the crowing of a rooster, the cackling of a hen and the mewing of a cat enlivened the trip for some distance. A [illegible] girl thinking the bird too noisy, finally put a paper over the cage, and the darkened parrot preserved an ominous silence which was suddenly broken by the exclamation, in almost human tones: "Whoa, hoa, d—n you, whoa hoa!" The car-load of passangers were convulsed with laughter and the girl overcome with confusion.

* * *

A locomotive on the Pennsylvania railroad made the fastest run on record a few evenings ago. It was ordered from the round-house to the scene of an accident, and ran sixty miles in forty-five minutes and eight seconds. The engineer speaking of the run to a division superintendent, said, "I was a little skeered once, when I thought I see a freight comin' down agin me; but it was only a skeer. I tell you it was a mighty purty run, but sometimes her wheels didn't tech the rails for a whole minute."—[Chicago Times.

A Joking Judge.

The name of General Slack, who is occupying the bench as circuit judge, is mentioned in connection with a nomination for congress. He will receive the unanimous support of one class of attorneys, for it is a peculiarity of his idea of the judiciary, to disallow all "monkeying around" or "polly-foxing" on the part of members of the bar. A Peru attorney recently twisted his articulation into that species of dissonance which is often palmed off on juries by lawyers for Latin.

"Please step this way a moment," was Judge Slack's request, interrupting the speaker.

The lawyer bent toward the court, and the court leaned toward the lawyer, saying, with mock firmness, but in an undertone: "That language must not be repeated here."

"What language? That was Latin" [illegible]

"What do you take me for?" demanded the judge. "I have lived too long upon the Wabash not to know Miami, and Injin shall not be practiced in this court."

Though an eloquent speaker, a ready debater and profound lawyer, it is one of his eccentricities to ridicule anything like a parade of learning, and sit down on fraud in any guise. During the war he was always where the fight was thickest, and his jokes were as potent to put new life in wearied men as a band of music. The party may be congratulated upon the fact that the campaign is to be enlivened by his presence. He carries to the work ability, unimpeachable worth and talent, as have long rendered him one of the most popular men in the country.

Prison Reform Association.

One of the most important committees appointed by our last national W. C. T. U. in Indianapolis, was the committee to perfect plans of the union for more systematic prison work. Our Indiana committee, all of whom have been prison workers for many years, have felt that the most efficient work that could possibly be accomplished would be the establishment of an ex-convicts' industrial home, similar to that of Michael Dunn's in New York City, which has proven the open door to an honest life for more than 300 men since January 1, 1879. Many men come from the prison with a sincere desire to lead a better life, but find their good resolutions chilled by the suspicion and coldness which meets them at the very prison doors as they emerge. Many gravitate directly back to the prisons because they find themselves unable to obtain honest employment. They are not by any means the worst class of criminals, but by proper care and protection might be made useful to society. The real object of the law in imprisoning criminals is to reform them. It is more profitable to the state to accomplish this result than to sustain such a vast machinery to arrest, convict and confine them. Fully impressed with the necessity of a movement in this direction, it has been decided to call a convention of all interested in this work, which will immediately follow our grand council, which meets on the 11th inst., in Indianapolis. We hope to have good representations from our state W. C. T. U., as we wish not only to form along with our union's a branch prison association, but we desire to consult our active workers on other matters vital to the interests of our state union. The convention will assemble in the Y. M. C. A. rooms, in the city of Indianapolis, February, 12, at 10 o'clock a. m., and will be presided over by Hon. Charles Coffin, of Richmond, Indiana, whose varied experience in prison reform in this country and in Europe, has pre-eminently fitted him to advise intelligently upon this matter. Rev. B. W. Chidlaw, of Ohio, also will be present, and address the convention. Hon. Schuyler Colfax, Hon. Conrad Baker, Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, and his Excellency Gov. Williams, have also been invited to speak on the subject. Let every W. C. T. U. worker who can, be present at both these conventions on the 11th and 12th. Efforts will be made to secure reduced fare on the railroads and it is hoped we may meet our best workers in the state to perfect our plans for soon opening such a home.

"Annetta" wants to know if there is a "healing bare, a tender balm for a love-stricken heart?" Get sea sick, Annetta; go to sea for a week, and if the blue Atlantic serves you like it served us you will spread it on record that it is just a little the balm balmedist balm you ever plastered on your love-stricken heart since you were old enough to write poetry.—[Ex.

"To Thine Own Self be True."

[Burlington Hawkeye.]

Just be honest with yourself, and then you will be honest with the world. And when you get to be honest with yourself, my son, you will be surprised to find what a good fellow you are. You will like yourself. You will want to shake hands with yourself and pat yourself on the back, and call yourself "old boy", and be on familiar friendly "Tom and Bill" terms with yourself. But so long as you are not fair and candid and honest with yourself, so long as you make yourself a promise on the 1st of January, and break it on the 2d, you will hate yourself, you will be ashamed of yourself, you will seek any society to avoid the rebuke of your own presence. So, be good to yourself, my boy. Be honest with yourself, and if you made any promises on the 1st of January, [illegible] if you [illegible] 100 times a day. Be honest with yourself, and by the middle of June you and your conscience will be so satisfied with each other that you will want to run yourself for president.

How Much to Eat.

An American soldier has daily given him 22 ounces of bread, 12 ounces of pork or bacon or 20 ounces of fresh or salt beef, 16 ounces of potatoes three times a week, 16 ounces of rice with 16 ounces of coffee, 2.01 ounces of sugar, .64 of a gill of beans, .32 of a gill of vinegar and 9.16 of a gill of salt. As to the quantity of this food, it is larger and more abundant than would seem at sight to be necessary, but the liberality in food has this great advantage, that, in time of hard work, the fatigue of the individual is diminished and the power of recuperation sensibly increased. The total quantity, then, provided for a soldier of the United States army, is larger than is consumed by the general workingman. Of course, various conditions of life, climate and locality have to do with the quantity of food. Thus an idle person can get along well enough with 2½ ounces of nitrogenous food and 20 ounces of carbonaceous food (flesh and cereal or vegetable food), when, if the same individual were walking, or in active, outdoor life, double this quantity might be used. Perhaps the Esquimaux represent the heaviest feeders in the world, for Parry tells of a young native who devoured in twenty-four hours. 9¼ pounds of sea horse, half raw, half cooked; 1½ pounds of bread; 1½ pints of good strong soup; 1½ pounds of ship bread and 9 pints of water, not counting grogs and spirits.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

AGENTS WANTED

THE NEW STYLE

$25 FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.

THE USUAL $65 MACHINE REDUCED TO 25.

$150 per Week Made Easy.

Horse and Wagon Free to Ag

[illegible] Long in Use to Boast its Superior MERITS

No Money to Pay until Machine is Delivered to you and Examined.

It makes the shuttle, double-thread, lock stitch, (the same on both sides of the work), which received the highest reward at the Centennial exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., 1876. And is complete with a larger assortment of attachments for fine work than any other machine, and reduced to only $25.

It is an easy and pleasant machine to operate, requires the least care, produces every variety of work, and will last until the next century begins. Strong, simple, rapid and efficient.

Use it once and you will use no other. The money cheerfully refunded if it will not outwork and outlast any machine at double the price.

Agents sell them faster than any other in consequence of their being the "best at the lowest price."

Each machine throughly warranted with written guarantee for five years. Kept in order free of charge; money refunded at once if not satisfactory.

It is the most solid, reliable, and satisfactory machine ever invented for all kinds of family work. It is an acknowleged unequivocal mechanical success, thoroughly tested and used in thousands of homes. An efficient, silent, rapid, reliable and ever-ready helper to the weary wife or seamstress, it will do the work of a family for a lifetime, or it will earn from $4 to $5 per day for any one who wishes to sew for a living. This machine costs less than half the price of any new machine of like quality. Has extra long, large-sized shuttle, easily removed. Extra large sized bobbins, holding 100 yards of thread, doing away with the frequent rewinding of bobbins. It is built for strength and constant hard work. Interchangeable working parts, manufactured of fine polished steel. Will run for years without repairs; is simple to learn, easy to manage, understood perfectly in an hour, and always ready in a moment to do every description of heavy or fine work, at less cost or trouble than any other machine at any price ever did or can do. It will sew anything a needle can pierce, from lace or cambric to heavy cloth or harness, with any kind of thread, and will run off twenty yards per minute; it uses strong, straight needles, and never breaks them. It cannot miss or drop a stitch, ravel or break the thread. If you have any other machine, buy this and have a better one. The ease and rapidity of its motion and quality of its work, are its best recommendations. It will hem, fell, tuck, braid, cord, bind, gather, quilt, ruffle, pleat, fold, scallop, shirr, roll, baste, embroider, run up braids, etc., with elegance, ease and quickness, unsurpassed by any machine ever invented.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

The prices for our new machines are less than those asked by dealers in second-hand, rebuilt and refinished machines, or those selling out old stock to close up business, many such inferior and old style machines being offered as new at reduced prices; beware of imposition and only buy new machines. There are no new first-class machines offered as low as the "FAMILY," by many dollars.

Machines Sent for Examination Before Payment of Bill.

Extraordinary inducements offered to clergymen, teachers, storekeepers, etc., to act as agents. Horse and wagon furnished free. For testimonials see descriptive books, mailed free with samples of work, liberal terms, circulars, etc. Address

FAMILY SEWING MACHINE CO.
755 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Pause, Ponder and Pruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others. The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches [illegible] gulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infinitesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent anywhere to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company, Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 755 Broadway, New York, New York. 43-1y.

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

FIFTY THOUSAND shares of Central Pacific railroad stock were sold at auction on the New York Stock Exchange, one day last week. There was a tremendous scramble among buyers to secure shares, and they went off like hot cakes at prices ranging from 81¼ to 85.

THREE precocious boys, aged respectively 13, 12 and 7 years, started West from Worcester, Mass., for the avowed purpose of fighting Indians. They were overtaken and arrested in New York. They were armed with revolvers, knives, a Pat Rooney songster, and some very much worn story papers by way of bait.

GOV. LONG, of Massachusetts, has ordered Freeman, the Pocasset fanatic, to the lunatic asylum....The second trial of Mrs. Smith and Cove Bennett, for the murder of the husband of Mrs. Smith, policeman of Jersey City, resulted in a verdict of not guilty. The first trial resulted in their conviction and sentence to death....Three men in Philadelphia have been sentenced to fine and imprisonment for making false election returns.

A PRIVATE stock exchange for the exclusive use of ladies has been opened in New York.

UNITED STATES 4-per-cent. bonds were quoted at 1.05¾ in New York, last week, the highest price ever reached by them....Gen. John Brisbin, ex-member of Congress, from Pennsylvania, is dead....Destructive storms are reported along the East Atlantic coast, several vessels were wrecked, and some lives lost.... Suicides: Charles Decker, a prominent citizen of Newark, N. J., blew his head off with a cannon loaded to the muzzle with powder and slugs.—Israel Boothby, a bank cashier at Augusta, Me., committed suicide by blowing his brains out with a pistol.—The Captain of the brig Augustine, which went ashore at Atlanticville, N. J., shot himself when he saw the vessel must be wrecked.

A BILL has been introduced in the New York Legislature making it a misdemeanor for any female to engage publicly in any pedestrian match, and for any manager or lessee of any building or grounds who allows the exhibition to take place....The New York Herald has given $100,000 to the Irish relief fund. This munificent gift is regarded as an effort to counteract the disastrous results which have followed the paper's policy of opposing the purposes of Messrs. Parnell and Dillon.

THE large chair factory of Smith & Crane, New York city, has been burned. Loss, $100,000....Mr. Kenneth Albro, a wealthy cattle raiser from Texas, went to New York on a business trip requiring the use of a large amount of ready money. He went into Wall street about 10 o'clock in the morning, carrying with him a small sachel containing $125,000 in registered bonds. As he reached the sub-treasury steps he noticed a man coming down directly in front of him. At the same instant a man stopped alongside Mr. Albro and, seizing his hand, shook it heartily, saying: "How are you? How do you do, Mr. Thompson?" The man in front of him pointed to a pocket-book lying at Mr. Albro's feet, and said: "See there, sir, you've dropped something." He stooped to pick it up, when the man who had just saluted him put his hand on the back of the old gentleman's neck and pitched him forward on the steps, at the same time twisting the sachel from his hand and walking quickly away. As the bonds are registered, Mr. Albro will not lose his money, though he will probably engage a guard the next time he walks the streets of New York with $125,000 on his person....Hon. A. B. Borie, who was Secretary of War for a time under President Grant, and who accompanied the latter on his tour around the world, died in Philadelphia last week, at the age of 71 years.

THE WEST.

COL. NELSON TRUSLER, United States District Attorney for the District of Indiana, died very suddenly of apoplexy at Indianapolis last week. He had just taken a seat in the Grand Opera House at the side of his wife, and was in the act of reaching for a programme, when his head suddenly dropped upon his shoulders, and he fell over dead. Deceased was a native of Indiana, and was 57 years old....The 143d anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine was celebrated in Chicago by a big audience in the Central Music Hall, Col. R. G. Ingersoll being the speaker of the occasion.

SITTING BULL and his followers are hungry and cold, and they are coming several thousand strong to United States territory prepared to fight, if necessary, for victuals and balmy breezes. Iron Pipe, chief of the Gros Ventres, who, with twelve lodges of Nez Perces and Sioux, has arrived in Montana, evidently on a marauding expedition, reports that the Teton chief, with 600 lodges, is now on Milk river, moving south. The savages are said to have suffered dreadfully during the winter from the severe weather and the scarcity of food....Samuel S. Hayes, for many years a leading citizen of Chicago, prominently connected with the public affairs of the city, died a few days ago. He was a native of Nashville, Tenn., and 60 years old.

IT is stated that David Dows & Co., of New York, have forty-three agents buying corn in Iowa, and that they have now over 3,000,000 bushels in crib....The St. Louis and San Francisco and the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad Companies have signed an agreement jointly to build a line from Albuquerque, on the Rio Grande, to San Francisco. The road will cost $25,000,000.

A FIGHT occurred recently, near Fort Buford, between fifty lodges of Sioux from Spotted Tail and Pine Ridge Agencies and a party of Gros Ventres. The latter were victorious, putting their enemies to rout and capturing all of their ponies.

THE County Hospital near Milwaukee, Wis., was destroyed by fire last week. Two inmates—one an old woman of 90, and the other an insane man—were burned to death.

A DENVER dispatch says great excitement prevails over a new discovery of gold twenty miles west of that city. A vein of mineral was struck in the Dolly Varden mine at the depth of twenty feet, and a specimen taken to Denver and an assay obtained, the assay giving the value of the ore at $21,160 per ton, $20,177 of it being gold.

PATRICK DUNN died in Chicago, a few days ago, of hydrophobia. The case will attract attention among medical men by reason of the remarkably short time intervening between the first premonition of the disease and the death of the victim. The bite occurred about six months ago, and no suspicion of inoculation had been entertained. The person bitten was a young man of robust health and good habits, and, in twenty hours from the time the first feeling of uneasiness manifested itself, he was a corpse.

A SAN FRANCISCO dispatch reports that "a fire occurred in a Chinese wash-house on Pine street. It is not known how many occupants there were, but ten bodies of Chinamen have been recovered from the ruins."

THE SOUTH.

HAYWOOD and Wright Rainer, brothers, of Goldsboro, N. C., quarreled about a horse and buggy which they owned in partnership, and Haywood brained his brother with a bar of iron. The murderer fled.

BY the purchase of the lines of road running from Selma, Ala., to Pensacola, the great Louisville and Nashville railway combination has secured an extension to the Gulf of Mexico, completing an unbroken line from Chicago to the deep water of Pensacola bay.

JOHN QUADE, an illicit distiller of Rutherford county, Tenn., was sitting by a still-house when a stranger came up and borrowed his knife. The man at once opened it and sprang upon Quade, and, getting him upon the ground, cut his throat, after which he threw the knife to the ground and escaped.... A shocking calamity occurred near Columbia, S. C., a few nights ago. A cabin in which nine negroes—two men, a woman and six children—were sleeping, was burned, and the entire family perished in the flames.

GENERAL.

PROF. JAMES DE MILLE, author of the "Dodge Club" and other well-known works, and one of the most popular writers of the day, died recently at his home in Halifax, N. S....War has been declared between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the Union Pacific railroad.

ADVICES from Alaska report that a bloody war is raging between the native Indian tribes of that far-off land....A Panama dispatch says that De Lesseps has eight working parties—over 130 men—surveying the isthmus for the interoceanic canal.

A BAND of regulators murdered an entire family named Donnelly, consisting of five persons, at Lucan, Ont., a few nights ago. The neighborhood had suffered severely from thieves and incendiaries, and, as the Donnellys were supposed to be the guilty parties, the wrath of the mob fell on them. Their bodies were frightfully mutilated, and afterwards partially consumed in their dwelling, to which the lynchers set fire on completing their bloody work.

BEFORE the committee of the Board of Indian Commissioners investigating the charges against Mr. Hayt, at New York city, a son of the ex-Commissioner appeared as a witness. His testimony was of the most damaging character, confirming the reports relative to the San Carlos silver mine, heretofore published, in every particular.

WASHINGTON.

THE bill to organize a Territorial form of government for the Indian Territory will fail, the majority of the sub-committee having it under consideration being opposed to it....In conversation, most of the Democratic Congressmen express themselves unreservedly as in favor of an early adjournment. ....The Secretary of the Interior has notified Indian Commissioner Hayt that his services in that capacity were no longer required. This arbitrary removal is placed upon the ground of "the good of the service," the developments in the recent investigation of charges against Mr. Hayt having been such as to convince Secretary Schurz that the affairs of the Indian Bureau can be placed in better hands.

GEN. H. V. BOYNTON, author of the criticism upon "Sherman's Memoirs," which so exasperated the General of the Army a few years ago, has addressed a letter to the Hon. Alexander H. Ramsey, Secretary of War, containing charges and specifications against Gen. W. T. Sherman, for "conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman," in violating the criminal laws of the District of Columbia, which define and punish the crime of slander.... Among the patents issued last week was one to Edison for his recent electric lamp, described as a combination of a carbon receiver made of glass, and conductors passing through the glass, and from which receiver the air is exhausted for the purpose of giving light by incandescence.

NEW HAMPSHIRE, Vermont and Massachusetts, having raised $40,000 for a monument in commemoration of John Stark's victory at Bennington, Vt., over the British under Gen. Baum, on the 16th of August, 1777, petition Congress for national recognition, and an appropriation of $20,000....Gen. Spinner, ex-United States Treasurer, has written a letter in opposition to the proposed effort to refund the debt at less than 4 per cent.

THE Warner bill for the free and unlimited coinage of silver dollars has been killed in the Senate Finance Committee, by a vote of 5 against 2.

SECRETARY SHERMAN issued a circular on the 3d inst., inviting proposals for the sale to the Government of 5 and 6-per-cent. bonds to the amount of $11,000,000.

THE State Department is said to have received information that the statistics used by the British Government to sustain the Canadian claim before the Halifax Commission were fraudulent; that the attention of the British Government has been called to these fraudulent falsifications, and the items of change indicated; but the British Government has declined to take any notice of this information. Delfosse, formerly Belgian Minister at Washington, who was President of the Halifax Commission, has been informed of this fraudulent charge in the case, which was the basis of the award in which he acted as arbiter..... Mr. Parnell, Mr. Dillon, Mr. Murdock and several Irish-American citizens of Washington, called on the President the other day. They were cordially received, and had a short and pleasant talk with the President. Mr. Parnell spoke of Ireland's distress, and gave a concise statement of its causes and of his object in visiting the United States. The President said that he sympathized with the Irish people, and hoped that speedy means would be found for their relief.

FROM the report submitted to Congress by the Secretary of War, it appears that the organized strength of the militia force of the different States consists of 145 general officers, 1,605 regimental, field and staff officers, 6,198 company officers, and 117,027 non-commissioned officers, musicians and privates. The unorganized force or number of men available for military duty is put down at 6,516,758....The action of Secretary Schurz in removing Mr. Hayt from the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs has been approved by the Board of Indian Commissioners.

POLITICAL.

SEVEN Fusion Senators and twenty-two members of the House presented themselves at the Maine State House, on the 29th inst., and were given seats in the Legislature organized by the Republicans. Their reception was very cordial....Word comes from North Carolina, South Carolina and Florida to the effect that the delegations to the Chicago Convention from those States will be "pledged to Sherman."

THE belief gains ground in New York that Tilden has resolved not to be a candidate before the Democratic National Convention. The assertion is made by a newspaper correspondent at Albany that corroborative evidence to this effect has been obtained within the last few days, and that, while a delegation friendly to him will undoubtedly be chosen, Tilden will thereupon make known publicly his withdrawal from the contest.

A DISPATCH from Augusta, Me., says that P. A. Sawyer, Fusionist Secretary of State, has yielded, and, under protest, given up all the State property in his possession, including the State seal, Council records, election returns, etc.

THE New York Republican State Convention, to choose delegates to the National Convention, will meet at Utica, Feb. 25....The National Democratic Committee has been called to meet at Washington, Feb. 23.

THE Madison (Wis.) Democrat publishes the first and second choice for President of the State officers and clerks, and members of the Senate and Assembly. The whole number of persons interviewed was 133. The first choice was Blaine, 42; Grant, 29; Seymour, 19; John Sherman, 10; E. B. Washburne, [illegible]; Garfield, 5; Tilden, 4; Bayard, 3; Hancock, 1; Edmunds, 1; Hayes, 1; Gen. Sherman, 1; refused to express an opinion, 9; for nominee of the Republican Convention, 2.

THE Judiciary Committee of the lower house of the Maine Legislature has been instructed to inquire into the advisability of so amending the constitution of the State as to limit the right of suffrage to those who are able to read and write the English language.

FOREIGN.

THE lakes of Switzerland are frozen over for the fourth time within a century.... Two Americans have been arrested at Naples on a charge of swindling a Russian out of 85,000 francs....The marriage of the Crown Prince of Austria and Mary, the niece of the King of Saxony, will shortly be solemnized.... It is rumored at Odessa that a Russian transport vessel, having on board 2,000 troops, recently embarked at Astrakhan, and bound for Schahkisler, a port on the eastern side of the Caspian sea, has been caught in a heavy gale and completely wrecked....The French Chamber of Deputies has passed the Government bill providing for the suppression of political clubs and for the prohibition of meetings where disturbances are apprehended.... One of the famous architects of the world, Edward Middleton Barry, who designed the British House of Parliament and many other important buildings, has just died in London at the age of 50....The people of Ballyharris, Ireland, which was the scene of the recent anti-rent demonstrations, assembled in force and set to work to rebuild a hut from which a tenant had been evicted, and, despite the efforts of the constabulary who tried to prevent them, succeeded in reinstating its former occupant....A cable dispatch chronicles the arrival at Havre of a single South American steamer with 10,000 mutton carcasses, preserved in refrigerators.

INFECTIOUS diseases are spreading to an alarming extent in St. Petersburg, the deaths resulting therefrom being 19 per cent. of the entire mortality....The Pope has sent 10,000 francs to Ireland for the relief of the destitute. Three deaths have occurred from starvation in County Louth, Ireland....A Rome dispatch says the Pope's health is causing anxiety. He suffers from fits of shivering and great prostration, but persists in his usual occupations.

YELLOW FEVER has appeared in several places in Brazil, and fears are entertained that it will spread to Rio Janeiro....The steamer Bergore, coal-laden, from Penarth for Gibraltar, foundered when two miles from port. Thirteen of her crew were drowned.... The Irish Relief Committee in New York is daily in receipt of information from Ireland of dreadful suffering there....Russia has decided to increase the number of her peace and war forces, the latter by 150,000 men....A rich land-owner, his wife, three daughters, son and two women servants were recently found murdered in their beds, near Barcelona, Spain. The horrible butchery was committed by robbers....The Empress of Austria is fox-hunting in Ireland. ....The Moors at Fez, Morocco, have attacked the Jews, wounding several. They covered an old man, over 70 years of age, with petroleum and burned him alive amidst shouts of joy.....A sensational report comes from Berlin, to the effect that the proposed increase of the German army is only the initial move in a deep-laid plot against France; that the object of filling the army to a war standard is to give France notice that the Socialists, Nihilists, and other orders whose members are opposed to existing governments have reached such a strength in point of numbers that combined action on the part of European nations is necessary. Should France refuse to co-operate with Germany and Russia, war is to be declared against her by the last-named power.

A DISPATCH from Candahar, in Afghanistan, to the London Times, says: "Terrible accounts reach here from without the British lines. It is reported that nearly 2,000 families have been exterminated by Ghilzais, and that seven of the villages of the latter were afterward captured by Hazaras and every soul in them slain."

THE programme of the Executive Committee of the Nihilists has been discovered at St. Petersburg. It states that the only way to obtain the reforms they seek is to overthrow the Government by forcible revolution or conspiracy. The Socialists would then transfer the Government to an Assembly elected by all the Russians, irrespective of class.

AT Woolwich, the other day, the mate to the gun which exploded on the British ironclad Thunderer was blown to atoms with a double load, consisting of 190 pounds of powder, one 600-pound shell, and one 700-pound projectile.

A RAILWAY collision in the suburbs of Paris killed nine passengers and wounded many more.

THE English Parliament convened on the 5th inst. The Queen's speech, which was quite brief, was read by the Lord High Chancellor. South Africa, Afghanistan, and Ireland formed the chief topics. Referring to the distress in the Green Isle, the Queen says: "The serious deficiency in the usual crops in some parts of Ireland has rendered necessary special precautions on the part of my Government to guard against the calamities with which those districts were threatened. With this view they have called upon the authorities charged with the duty of administering relief to make ample preparations for the distribution of food and fuel, should such a step become necessary."

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

A number of petitions upon various subjects were presented to the Senate, on the morning of Jan. 29, and a communication was received from the Secretary of War recommending that $1,600,000 be appropriated in annual installments for the improvement of Harlem river, New York. Bills were introduced: By Mr. Kernan, for an exposition in New York in 1883; by Mr. Johnston, a resolution asking in regard to Venezuela claims, which was adopted; by Mr. Vance, for the restoration of the Executive letter-books of the State of North Carolina; by Mr. Cameron (Wis.), for the relief of the Stockbridge and other Indians in Wisconsin; by Mr. Ingalls, to graduate the price and disposal of the residue of the Cherokee strip lands of Kansas; by Mr. Voorhees, granting railroads the right of way through the public lands of the United States. Mr. Gordon submitted a resolution that a committee of nine Senators be appointed to take into consideration the subject of the construction of a canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, which was adopted. The President nominated Joseph A. Connelly to be United States District Attorney for the Southern District of Illinois. Adjourned to Monday....In the House, consideration was resumed of the bill declaring all public roads and highways post routes. The previous question was seconded, and the bill passed—yeas, 134; nays, 97. The bill in regard to courts was passed, so as to provide that when a State contains more than one district or division every suit not of local nature in the Circuit or District Courts thereof against a single defendant must be brought in the division where he resides, but if there are two or more defendants residing in different districts, it may be brought in either division, and a duplicate writ may be issued against defendants directed to the Marshals of both divisions. In all cases of removal of suits from State to United States courts such removal shall be to United States courts held in the division in which said State courts are held. The House then went into committee of the whole upon the revision of the rules, and consumed the day in discussion.

Following the usual indolent habits of the Senate, that body was not in session on Friday, Jan. 30....In the House, a resolution was introduced by Mr. Orth to ascertain the practicability of constructing a ship canal from Toledo, Ohio, to the navigable waters of the Wabash river at or near Lafayette, Ind. Mr. Shallenberger introduced a bill directing the Commissioner of Agriculture to attend the International Sheep and Wool Show to be held in Philadelphia in September next. Mr. Aiken made a personal explanation. Mr. Harris, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill providing a permanent construction fund for the navy. Mr. Buckner introduced a bill reducing the expenditures of the Government in lighting public buildings. The House then resumed consideration of the conference report on the bill providing for Circuit and District Courts at Columbus, Ohio, and, after a short discussion, the report was agreed to. The disabilities of William B. Taliaferro, of Virginia, were removed. On motion of Mr. Hunton, the Senate amendments to the House bill making appropriations for filling up and draining the grounds south of the Capitol grounds were concurred in. The House then went into committee of the whole on the private calendar.

A warm discussion occurred in the House, on the 31st ult., upon the printing of a petition of Mr. Haralson, a colored man, who contested a seat in the House from Alabama. Haralson sets forth that after the election he endeavored to obtain depositions, but the Mayor of Selma and other persons authorized to take depositions refused to perform their duty. He also alleges that his competitor procured indictments against all witnesses summoned in behalf of the petitioner, and kept them in jail until the time within which the evidence had to be taken expired. Haralson appeals to Congress to investigate the case. The petition was ordered printed. A resolution was adopted calling on the Secretary of War for information as to the names and lineal rank of the officers not on duty with their regiments and corps. Mr. Neal introduced bills requiring the Washington Gas Company to fix the price of gas; prohibiting the publication of lottery schemes in the District of Columbia. The House at 1 o'clock discontinued public business, when eulogistic addresses were made in memory of Rush Clark, of Iowa. After speeches by Messrs. Price, Sapp, Thomson, Carpenter, Coffroth, Manning, Neal, Bennett and Henderson, the House, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, adjourned.

In the Senate, Feb. 2, Francis B. Griffith was nominated for Supervisor of the Census of the Sixth district of Indiana, vice William P. Seymour, whose nomination was withdrawn. Mr. Thurman, from the Committee on Judiciary, reported a bill for reviving and continuing the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated money of the Geneva award....In the House, among the bills introduced and referred were the following: by Mr. Phelps, appropriating $100,000 for the relief of sufferers in Ireland; by Mr. King, for the appointment of a commission of engineers to examine routes of interoceanic communication; requesting the President to tender to Peru, Bolivia and Chili the good offices of this Government for the restoration of peace; by Mr. Bland, for the free coinage of the silver dollar; by Mr. Blackburn, providing for the registry or enrollment of any vessel built in foreign countries; by Mr. Coffroth, granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the late war who were disabled while in the military service; increasing the pensions for the loss of leg or arm; by Mr. Shelley, for the delivery of letters having insufficient postage; providing for the election of a Congressional Printer; by Mr. Young, to increase the efficiency of the National Board of Health; by Messrs. Cowgill and Colerick, bills to facilitate transportation between Lake Erie and the navigable waters of the Wabash; by Mr. Brown, proposing a constitutional amendment providing that the House of Representatives shall be composed of 300 members, to be apportioned among the several States as provided in section 2 of article 14 of the amendments to the constitution; by Mr. Bland, for the free coinage of the standard silver dollar; by Mr. Thompson, providing that no claim of a citizen of a State which did not go into rebellion shall be disallowed on account of disloyalty unless it be proven; by Mr. Newberry, amending the Patent laws; giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction of Indian depredations; by Mr. Fort, to put certain articles imported and used in the manufacture of paper, glass and woolen fabrics on the free list, and to reduce the duty on printing paper used for books, pamphlets, magazines and newspapers. The bill making appropriations for the improvement of the Susquehanna, Ohio and Tennessee rivers was passed, as was also the bill authorizing the Secretaries of the Interior and War to employ additional clerks for the remainder of the fiscal year, to expedite the settlement of the pension applications. The Speaker announced the appointment of Messrs. Felton, Phillips and McKinley as visitors to West Point; also the appointment of Mr. Phillips as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor and of Expenditures in the Department of Justice. The House then went into committee of the whole upon revision of the rules, to defeat a vote upon Mr. Weaver's greenback resolutions. On rising, a recess was taken till evening for the purpose of listening to Mr. Parnell.

Mr. Bayard, from the Senate Finance Committee, reported the Warner Silver bill adversely, on the opening of the session of Feb. 3. Mr. Beck stated that the report was not unanimous, and the minority hoped to be heard in regard to the bill at some future time. The bill was placed on the calendar. A resolution offered by Mr. Teller was adopted, asking information in regard to the location and lands of the Northern Pacific railroad. Memorials for a reduction in the duty on steel rails were presented by Mr. Kirkwood. A resolution from the Military Committee to inquire into the expediency of retiring non-commissioned officers on pay after thirty years' service was adopted. Resolutions of respect to the memory of the late Congressman Rush Clark, of Iowa, were passed, Messrs. Allison, Hereford and Kirkwood delivering eulogies. Presidential nominations: James Q. Howard, to be Appraiser of the Port of New York; George Walker, of New York, to be Consul General at Paris; Wilber A. Goodspeed, of Ohio, to be United States Marshal for the Northern District of Ohio; Robert M. Wallace, of South Carolina, United States Marshal for the District of South Carolina....In the House, on motion of Mr. Frost, the privileges of the floor were granted to Parnell and Dillon, the Irish agitators. Mr. Davis offered a resolution, which was adopted directing the Committee on Agriculture to inquire into the most feasible method of extending the benefits of the Agricultural Bureau over that portion of the United States west of the 100th meridian. A resolution was adopted calling upon the Treasury Department for information in regard to new public buildings. The bill providing that no person shall serve as a petit juror in any United States court more than three weeks during any one year was passed. After the conclusion of the morning hour the House went into committee of the whole upon the revision of the rules, and a political debate ensued upon the rule defining the duties of the Appropriations Committee. The vote upon rejecting the amendment of Mr. Brown, Republican, upon which the debate occurred stood 107 to 93.

A resolution, offered by Mr. Kernan, was adopted in the Senate on the 4th inst., asking the reason of the suppression of statistics of imports by Collectors of Customs. Mr. Kirkwood introduced a bill to provide for the payment of additional bounty to the soldiers of the army of the United States during the war of the Rebellion. Twelve thousand copies of the eulogies to the late Senator Chandler were ordered printed. A bill introduced by Mr. Hereford confers jurisdiction in war supply-claim cases upon United States District Courts, which shall certify their judgment to Congress, and Congress may appropriate the money to pay such judgments, if favorable. The bill authorizing the conversion of national gold banks into national banks was passed. The President nominated Charles L. Holstein, of Indiana, to be United States Attorney for the District of Indiana; Alex. C. Wells, Surveyor of Customs District of Louisiana; Edgar W. Mann, Register of the Land Office of Cheyenne, Wy. T.; James L. Haworth, of Kansas, Indian Inspector....In the House, consideration was resumed of the bill determining the jurisdiction of United States Circuit Courts, and regulating the removal of causes from State to Federal courts. The House then passed the joint resolution appropriating $20,000 to enable the Fish Commissioner to represent the United States at the Exhibition in Berlin in April. The remainder of the day was passed in committee of the whole upon the revision of the rules.

Mr. Anthony's resolution was adopted in the Senate on the 5th, that the Senate shall each day proceed to the consideration of general orders, debate to be limited to five minutes on an objection to carry any bill over. The first bill on the calendar was the bill to prohibit military interference at elections. Mr. Allison—"I object to that." Mr. Blaine—"Why object to that?" Mr. Cockrill—"There can be no objection to that." The bill was laid aside. A number of other bills were objected to or referred to committees. The bill to amend the Census act was passed. It requires the enumeration in cities having over 10,000 inhabitants to be made in two weeks from June 1, 1880, instead of four weeks, as provided by the original act. Mr. Allison introduced a bill for the relief of certain employes on work for the improvement of the Des Moines rapids. Mr. McDonald introduced a bill to establish a port of delivery at Indianapolis. After an executive session, in which the nomination of John M. Morton to be Collector at San Francisco was rejected by 10 to 32, the Senate adjourned till Monday....In the House, the Senate bill for the conversion of national gold banks was passed. The following bills were introduced: By Mr. O'Connor, making silver certificates receivable at the United States treasury in the redemption of circulating notes of the issue of national banks; requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to pay current interest on all registered United States bonds without respect to date of assignment or transfer. Mr. Wood presented a resolution, which was adopted, asking the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to taxes assessed and collected in each State. The morning hour having expired, the House went into committee on the revision of the rules.

AN effort is being made at Washington for the relief of Mr. Sutter, the discoverer of gold in California. Mr. Sutter is far advanced in years, being now 78, and resides with his wife and two daughters at Lititz, Pa.

SENATE EXODUS INVESTIGATION.

Synopsis of the Testimony Elicited by the Voorhees Committee.

Charles H. Otey was cross-examined by the Republican members of the committee, and acknowledged that Mendenhall was the only Republican in Washington who advised colonizing Indiana with negroes from the South; said that Perry Williams and Evans were the only colored men he knew to be engaged in inducing colored men to leave North Carolina. Otey also stated his belief that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company were furnishing money to pay the traveling expenses of these men. He believed the intelligent people of North Carolina, black and white, Democrats and Republicans, were opposed to this exodus. F. A. Bobitt, of Goldsboro, N. C., said it was difficult to assign a reason for the exodus of the colored people from North Carolina. It certainly was not on account of oppression. M. T. Lewman, Sheriff of Putnam county, Ind., and a resident of Greencastle, Ind., was sworn, and produced a printed circular which he obtained from one of the North Carolina emigrants after he had arrived at Greencastle. This circular, which had been circulated quite extensively among the colored people of North Carolina, urged them to come to Indiana, setting forth the attractions of that State.

Sheriff Lewman, of Greencastle, Ind., in his cross-examination, stated that he met and had an interview with a colored man named Heath, who came on a mail-car from Washington to Greencastle. He had letters to Judge Martindale and Col. Holloway, prominent Indiana Republicans. One reason for the colored people leaving North Carolina was to better their condition, and another reason was that their friends in Washington desired as many of them as possible to get out of North Carolina and into Indiana before the census was taken, about May 1, so as to decrease the representation of North Carolina and increase that of Indiana. Ten thousand intended to come. Heath supposed when he was making these statements he (Lewman) was a Republican. He said the Republicans had proposed to pay half the expenses of the trip. The Sheriff stated that the negroes overstocked the labor market of Greencastle, and, therefore, created ill-feeling. One man had his barn burned for hiring some of these immigrants. He thought no objection would be made to immigrants who could support themselves.

B. K. Morris, a real-estate agent of Indianapolis, testified that, to his belief, there is abundant room and ample opportunity for industrial employment in that State for a large number of colored immigrants, and that he had no knowledge of the present immigration being a political movement. Thomas Mills (Republican), of Indianapolis, testified that he remarked to "the boys," when the North Carolina colored people first began to arrive at Indianapolis: "We want 20,000 bucks, and not women and children." Mr. Voorhees—You wanted them to vote? Witness—Yes, we wanted them to vote. Mr. Voorhees—Well, that's a square answer. You thought if you had them you could "politically" slay us? Witness—Yes, we thought if we had them we could get away with you everlastingly. Mr. Voorhees—But they brought a good many women and children with them? Witness—Yes, they overdone the thing on women and children; but we thought it would be a good thing to scatter them around on cheap lands. Mr. Voorhees—In close counties? Witness—Well, yes; in close counties. Mr. Voorhees—State whether these views, which you have given so frankly, are shared by your party in Indiana. Witness replied that he thought they were, to a great extent, concurred in by individual members of the party, but he did not know of any party organization or party effort to draw negroes to Indiana. He believed the colored people had not a fair chance to vote, or at least were likely to be "counted out" in North Carolina, and it was only right to give them a chance in Indiana.

E. D. Borden, Goldsboro, N. C., testified that, while the people of the State of North Carolina do not feel alarmed about the exodus, the wave of the movement, such as it was, is already subsiding, and that the great mass of the colored people in North Carolina were as well contented as they are in any other section of the country. T. C. Groomes, a lawyer, of Greencastle, Ind., was placed on the witness stand, and, at the request of Senator Voorhees, produced and read extracts from editorials published in the Greencastle Banner in November and December, 1878, in which it was stated that the colored men of the South are practically disfranchised while they live in that section; urging it as the duty of the colored men South to come North of the Ohio river, and help make a solid North, and arguing that if they remain in the South to be enumerated in 1880 they would increase the numbers of their enemies there, but if they came North they would increase the numbers of their friends in the North.

Trousers First Worn in England.

It is generally known to us middle-aged men, by "tradition," that breeches began to give place to trousers during the first decade of the present century, but it is generally known that trousers were actually worn by London exquisites in the latter years of the last century. "It will be observed," says a writer in "Arliss' Pocket Magazine of Classic and Polite Literature," new series, volume 3, 1825, "from the following description of a dandy published in 1791, that trousers were then in fashion, and were considered as a ridiculous article of dress: 'Advertisement Extraordinary!—Lost, last Saturday night, supposed in the lobby of the new theater, an overgrown baby, who arrived but two days ago in town, from the country. He had on a light-colored coat, with cape hanging carelessly over his shoulders; a pair of his father's breeches, which reached down to his ankles; and an old pair of his grandmamma's spectacles, which he converted into an opera-glass. He had on his sister's high-crowned hat, and his hair cut so short that you might observe his bare poll. Laughs a great deal; can swear a few fashionable oaths, but does not know how to write his name. Answers to the name of Master Jackey. As he had only sixpence a week pocket-money, it is feared he is detained in some cake-shop for his reckoning; if so, all demands shall be carefully paid if he is restored to his disconsolate parents.'" Burlesque advertisements, such as the foregoing, were not common in old magazines.

Pennsylvania Republican Convention.

The Pennsylvania Republican State Convention met at Harrisburg on Wednesday, Feb. 4. Russell Errett, a pronounced Grant man, was elected temporary Chairman over George V. Lawrence, by a vote of 158 to 93.

John Cessna offered a resolution that a committee of nine be appointed to report, subject to the approval of the convention, a list of delegates, with their alternates, to the Chicago Convention, and a list of electors, after consulting with the delegations from the various districts.

Mr. Stewart, of Franklin, offered an amendment as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of one from each Congressional district be appointed, whose duty it will be to report to the convention the names of four delegates-at-large to the National Convention and two electors-at-large; that it will be the duty of the committee to report also a list of district delegates to the National Convention, who are to be chosen by the delegates from their respective districts, including in their report the names of those persons who have already been chosen as delegates from their respective districts by the action of the people thereof.

The amendment was lost—100 to 150—and then the resolution, as originally offered, was adopted.

The following was then introduced by Mr. Kerr:

Resolved, That the delegates elected to the Republican National Convention from this State are hereby instructed to support for the Presidential nomination Gen. U. S. Grant, and to vote as a unit on all questions that may come before the convention.

Mr. Stone, of Crawford, offered the following amendment:

Resolved, That while we pledge ourselves to support the Republican party, we see no good reason for abandoning the position taken by the party in our own and other States in 1876, of opposition to a third Presidential term, and we hereby indorse and reaffirm the resolution passed by our State Convention, held in this city in 1876, upon this question.

Senator Kerr argued in favor of his resolution, and traced the course of the Democratic party as it appeared to the Republicans. He thought Gen. Grant was the proper and only man who should get the nomination, and concluded his remarks with an appeal to all to support him.

Gen. Albright replied to Senator Kerr's remarks. He believed that Gen. Grant was sincere in his undertakings, had done great service, both civil and military, but he did not think he was the only man who could lead the Republican party to victory. He did not believe there was any danger to the country in a third term, but he believed that Washburne, Sherman or Blaine could carry the suffrages of the people. He did not believe in instructing delegates to Chicago for any man.

The resolution was further opposed by Gen. Koontz; Darlington, of Chester; Harvey, of Clinton; and Wolfe, of Union; while Messrs. Moreland, of Allegheny; and Bingham, of Philadelphia; favored it. The speeches of the anti-Grant people were all from the Blaine point of view, and no other names besides Grant and Blaine were mentioned at all, except in the remarks of Gen. Albright.

Mr. Stone, after arguing strongly in favor of his amendment to the resolution of instruction, finally withdrew it, and Mr. Strang, of Tioga, offered another one, to wit: to strike out the name of U. S. Grant and insert that of James G. Blaine.

On a vote by yeas and nays Strang's amendment was lost—95 to 154—several of the Blaine people voting against it on the ground that it was not proper to instruct the delegation for any one. The question then recurred on the original resolution, or rather that part of it which instructed the Chicago delegates to vote for Grant.

Again the yeas and nays were ordered, and showed a vote of 133 in favor of and 113 against that portion of the resolution.

The second portion of the resolution, instructing the delegation to vote as a unit, was then adopted by a viva-voce vote.

State officers were then nominated, a platform adopted, a State Committee appointed, and delegates-at-large to the Chicago Convention chosen.

John A. Lemon was nominated for State Auditor, and Henry Greene for Supreme Judge. The following are the delegates-at-large: Matthew S. Quay, James McManes, Linn Bartholomew, Christopher L. Magee; alternates, Gen. D. S. Elliott, J. Hay Brown, Henry Buck, Samuel M. Jackson.

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } Editors.

Mr. J. C. Flood has just bestowed a pleasant little amount of pin-money on his daughter, Miss Jennie Flood; he has registered $2,500,000 in United States bonds in her name. This gift provides for her an income of $100,000 a year.

When the Emperor of China goes to bed he is attended by eight servants who sit by his bedside, and sixteen who crawl underneath. These servants are not allowed to cough, sneeze, or even let their aching knee-joints crack, on penalty of instant execution.

The glass factories at Pittsburgh, Pa., which have been running at barely living rates for several years, now have all they can do to keep up with orders, and have raised prices 10 and 25 per cent. on window-glass and table-ware.

Mr. John Fortune, of Fond du Lac, Wis., recently became the father of twin girls. When he first looked upon the new-comers he smiled a sort of ghastly smile and remarked, "Well, I suppose it's all right, for it is said Miss Fortunes never come singly."

Andrew Breeding, a member of a Revenue Collector's posse, in Tennessee, should participate in the next go-as-you-please pedestrian match. While on a raid, recently, he was captured by a party of moonshiners, but, escaping soon after, he ran, pursued by the crooks, a distance of thirty-five miles in seven hours, and finally eluded them.

It is related of Gen. Grant that when a lad he was standing quietly in a group of boys one day, when a big boy threatened to whip another much smaller than himself. Grant said nothing until the aggressor proceeded to put his threats into execution; then he stepped forward, rolled up his sleeves, and observed that if there was any fighting to be done it could be done with him. "I'll take the licking," said Grant. And the big boy retreated.

Theodore Tilton was to lecture at Parsons, Kan., and the committee was at the station to receive him. They stepped up to the long-haired gentleman and welcomed him with much enthusiasm and ceremony. The long-haired gentleman appeared surprised and said: "I don't know what you mean by this, but I can remove any wart or bunion in thirty minutes, without pain, or forfeit my reputation." The committee had taken a "corn doctor" for T. T.

The faculty of Harvard College have greatly offended the lady students by prohibiting them from entering the class for the study of the Chinese language, which is now taught there. Why should they not be allowed to enter this class as well as any other is best known to the college authorities; but no explanation is given, and those most interested are exceedingly angry about it. There seems to be considerable "Sex in Education" in old Harvard yet.

Germany has a standing army of 410,000 men already, and now it is proposed to add to it 20,000 more. It is producing an uncomfortable feeling in Germany, whose people must supply all the soldiers and pay all the expenses, and it is looked upon with jealousy and distrust by the other European powers who think it portends mischief. It costs the empire about $90,000,000 annually to support the army on a peace footing, and the proposed increase will add $4,000,000 more, besides about $7,000,000 for outfit for the new soldiers. If Germany does this it will necessitate a similar increase of the armies of Russia, France and Austria, and the thoughts of the people will be turned to war, and war will be the outcome.

The Ohio Legislature is looking after the health of the people by passing stringent bills punishing tradesmen who adulterate food. One of the bills recently introduced provides that all artificial butter shall have an analysis of its ingredients stamped upon the package in which it is offered for sale. That would be pretty tough on a good deal of real butter in the market, and would drive some dealers out of the business. It would be a good and wholesome provision, however, to require every package of sugar, tea, ground coffee, spices, baking powder, etc., to be properly branded with the analysis of the ingredients, wholesome and poisonous, of which it is composed. The adulteration of food and drink is one of the crying hygienic evils of modern times.

A decision of interest and importance touching the liabilities of railroad companies for goods destroyed by fire fire while in transit was lately rendered by Judge McKennan in the United States Court at Pittsburgh. Suit was brought against the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to recover the value of goods destroyed in freight cars by the incendiary fires during the riots of July, 1877, in Pittsburgh, and the court held that the company was not shown to be guilty of any negligence such as to impair the clause in the bill of lading excepting liability of the company for freight lost by fire, and the ruling was, therefore, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. This was a test case, and will, in effect, put an end to many similar suits growing out of the same cause.

Edison's System of Electric Lighting.

Mr. Edison's idea in regard to the electric light was that, in all respects, it should take the place of gas. Following the analogy of water, the inventor conceived of a system which should resemble the Holly water works. As the water is pumped directly into pipes which convey it under pressure to the point where it is to be used, so the electricity is to be forced into the wires and delivered under pressure at its destination. In the case of water, after being used, it flows away by means of a sewer-pipe, and is lost. But it is easy to imagine that the water used in working machinery, for instance, instead of being lost, might be returned to the pumps and used over and over again. With such a system as this, we should have a perfect analogy to the Edison electric lighting. The electricity, after being distributed under pressure and used, is returned to the central station. As the light results from no consumption of a material, but is mere transmutation of the energy exerted in the pumping process, it is therefore seen that all which is essential to an electric-lighting system is the generator (or pump), the two lines of wire, one distributing the electricity, the other bringing it back, and a lamp which transmutes into light the energy carried by electricity when it passes from one wire to the other, and in which the energy of the pressure expresses itself as the light. In Edison's invention the amount of electricity delivered in the lamp is determined by the size and resistance in the carbon, just as in water the amount of flow is determined by the size of the openings. As a great many small jets of water can be supplied from one pipe, so a great many lamps or small escapes for electricity can be furnished from one wire.

As in the case of water, the amount of work done by electricity—either as illuminant or motor—is dependent quite as much upon the pressure from which it escapes as upon the quantity passing through the wires. We might have a system of lamps which would give a certain amount of light from large quantities of electricity escaping under low pressure, or another system which could give an equal amount of light from a small quantity of electricity escaping under high pressure. As in either case the amount of electricity, flowing through a wire is in proportion to the size of the wire, it will be readily seen that the application of pressure made by Mr. Edison obviates the main difficulty in the way of subdivision (i. e., in the way of domestic use of the electric light), namely, the enormous size and cost of conductors. The well-known principle of the effect of pressure upon the dynamic power of electricity had never been utilized because the proper lamp was still unknown. This lamp is Edison's main discovery. In order to utilize this, one of the plans devised by him was to make the flow of electricity intermittent. Enough was allowed to escape in a short time, say one-third, to keep the lamp all the time supplied. It, of course, would require a large wire to furnish the quantity of electricity needed, yet two-thirds of the time the wire would be inactive, during which period it could be used to supply two other lamps constructed on the same principle. According to the doctrine of probabilities, one-third of a large number of lamps would be in use all the time. Such being the case, the cost of a conductor would be divided among three lamps. The lamps were so constructed as to burn steadily all the while, although the electricity was passing through them only one-third of the time.

Besides the enormous practical value of the electric light, as domestic illuminant and motor, it furnishes a most striking and beautiful illustration of the convertibility of force. Mr. Edison's system of lighting gives a completed cycle of change. The sunlight poured upon the rank vegetation of the carboniferous forest, was gathered and stored up, and has been waiting through the ages to be converted again into light. The latent force accumulated during the primeval days, and garnered up in the coal-beds, is converted, after passing in the steam-engine through the phases of chemical, molecular and mechanical force, into electricity, which only waits the touch of the inventor's genius to flash out into a million domestic suns to illuminate a myriad homes.—Scribner's Monthly.

A Kiss.

After an enthusiastic lover spends two hours' hard labor over a letter to his girl, and then mars its beauty by spilling a drop of ink on it, he first swears in a scientific manner for a few minutes, and then draws a circle around the blot and tells her it is a kiss, and she, poor thing, believes it.

The practical joking too common in French institutions on the admission of a neophyte has led to a painful incident at Angers. A youth named Guypt, on entering the Ecole des Arts et Metiers, was so squeezed against a table, or between two tables, that he was taken home hopelessly ill, and died in four days.

The hoof of a trotting horse comes to the ground so nearly flat that no instrument exists fine enough to discover whether the fore or the hind part touches the turf first. It is believed that they strike at precisely the same moment.

FARM NOTES.

[From the American Agriculturist for February.]

Better Stock Must be Kept.—The right stock, too, must be kept in the right place. The choice and management of animals require an accurate knowledge which must come from outside of his own farm practice. A farmer cannot test these things for himself and run the risk of losses that would be ruinous to him. All this has been done and recorded in books and agricultural papers.

Young Chickens.—Early chickens, which can be reared easily if proper care is given, may be kept in a glass-covered coop protected at night by covering with straw. If severe cold is feared, heat a couple of bricks hot in the oven, wrap them in a piece of carpet, and put them in the coop. A large can or jug of hot water is also a very good warmer.

Vermin.—The poultry house, if closely examined, may be found to swarm with lice. A gray, mealy powder may be seen on the roosts, in crevices, and in the corners and joints of the building. Take a common squirt can filled with kerosene oil and inject the oil into every crevice in the house. Repeat this process if it is found necessary, and very soon the fowls will be free from these insect pests.

Keep the Good Calves.—As the cows come in the best of the heifers may be selected for raising. There can be no better way to improve the stock of cows than to use a good bull and keep the best calves, well feeding and caring for them until matured. After they become cows a selection can again be made for breeding, and only the best retained. In a few years the value of dairy cows may be doubled by this careful practice of selection.

Grass in the North is not made as available as it might. An opinion prevails that grass lands can not be kept in permanently good condition. Yet there are in many localities plots and tracts of grass that are very old and show no signs of failure. What has been done once in this way can be done again. A permanent pasture or meadow is invaluable. Why can not we try to make and keep them? This is a subject worthy the most careful study.

Geese and Ducks.—These are profitable birds in some cases, and may be kept where there is cheap grazing. Half a dozen geese will soon fill a good sized feather bed or a pair of pillows. The white ducks are perhaps equally useful in this way. Both of these will now begin to lay, but must be closely watched and kept up at nights, or they will drop their eggs abroad. The eggs should be gathered and kept in a cool but not cold place until they are wanted for setting.

Fowls will need the best food if eggs are desired. Wheat steeped in boiling water, and given hot, and hot baked potatoes crushed with a masher, are as good food as can be given; water slightly warmed, with a small quantity of sulphate of iron (copperas) in it, is useful. Allspice mixed with corn-meal mush is an excellent condiment, and by no means costly. Laudanum in ten-drop doses has been found a remedy for the cholera, or poultry intestinal fever, which has destroyed sy many flocks.

Values Are Increasing.—Every relic of the long-continued depression—the seven lean years—now happily gone by, is passing away. Prices are advancing, and every purchased thing costs considerably more than it did a year ago. The farmer who values his land and stock may justly put up the figures from 25 to 50 per cent. His income must be made to increase in proportion, and this must be done to a great extent by increasing in every possible way the productive value of his property.

Why Can Not We Grow Larger Crops.—There are localities where it may pay to grow small crops cheaply, where one may skin the land for a few years and leave it, just as in some places cattle are or have been killed for their hides and the carcasses left to decay. But every year these localities are growing more and more distant in the West, and in time land will be too valuable to be used in so wasteful a manner. In Central and Eastern localities the future prosperity of the farmers will depend upon the growth of larger crops by the expenditure of more labor on the land. To reach this end will be a work of time, but it will never be reached unless a beginning is made, and there was never a more propitious time to begin than now.

Grafting.—If old trees produce poor or even indifferent fruit, and they are still sound and vigorous, they may be made productive and valuable by grafting good sorts upon them. This work should be done just as the buds begin to swell. If the tree is a large one, only a portion of it should be grafted the first season, beginning with the central part of the head. Great care should be taken that the grafts are of an excellent variety. It is a common notion among those who do not think about the matter that the mere operation of grafting somehow benefits the tree. The grafted tree is in fact a new tree; all of the bearing parts of the old tree are cut away, and a new head is planted, so to speak, upon the old one. Hence the new top or head will be of the kind that is placed there, and unless good kinds are selected grafting will be useless. There are men who go about the country doing grafting. Some are very excellent and others are bunglers, but there is no need of employing any one. Any boy who can make a willow whistle can learn to graft, and every boy should be able to do it.

History Records No Greater Hero.

Last spring some quilts were missing from Gilmore's livery stable, and Jimmy Connelly, a little boy, whose father resides on California street, was accused of the theft. He was arrested, but stoutly declared his innocence. He acknowledged that he knew who took the quilts, though he did not take them. Nothing could induce him to name the culprits. His father, fearing that he was not innocent of the accusation, sent him to the Reform School at Plainville. He wrote to his father whenever he had an opportunity, reiterating his innocence and begging to be brought back home. The father, believing that he was doing what was best for the boy, let him remain. A few days ago the child was sent home a corpse, having died of homesickness. When he knew he was going to die he made a statement of what he knew about the theft, and again asserted his innocence. He hated to give the boys away, he said; they had been his friends, but he did not want to die with such a charge against him. He named the boys who had committed the theft, but affirmed that he was not with them.—Indianapolis Herald.

Strange Food.

Some score or so of contributors to a French sporting journal dined one day upon the ham and heart of a lion, killed by Constant Cheret, in Algeria. The flesh of the lion was found to be particularly firm and close-grained, like that of a horse, but although pronounced palatable, it only achieved what is termed a success d'estime, while the heart, skillfully prepared with truffles, was unanimously voted tough and indigestible. In fact, the French journalists were not much better pleased with their fare than was Bruce, the traveler, when the guest of the Arab tribe of Welled Sidi Boojanim, "the sons of the fathers of the flocks," bound by vow to eat lion's flesh once every day; for the traveler found male lion meat lean, tough, and musky in flavor, lioness meat a trifle fatter and more palatable, and whelp flesh the nastiest of the three.

Mindful that an unlooked-for pleasure is thrice welcome, Frank Buckland did not advise his guests on a certain occasion that they were about to enlarge their gastronomic experiences, but when the soup had been disposed of asked a famous gourmand sitting near him how he liked it. "Very well, indeed," was the answer. "Turtle, is it not? I only asked because I did not find any green fat." Buckland shook his head. "I fancied it had a somewhat musky taste—peculiar but not at all unpleasant," remarked his neighbor. "All alligators have," replied the host, "the cayman, especially—the fellow I dissected this morning, and which you have just been discussing." Half a dozen of the suddenly-enlightened diners suddenly started to their feet, two or three slunk from the room, and the rest of the meal was enjoyed by only a portion of the original company. "See what imagination is," said Buckland. "Had I told them it was turtle, or terrapin, or bird's-nest soup, or the gluten of a fish from the maw of a sea-bird, they would have pronounced it excellent, and their digestion would have been none the worse. I tell them that it is alligator soup, and their gorges rise at as good a dish as ever a man need have!" Forewarned, and, therefore, forearmed, were the gentlemen who lunched on the octopus at the Brighton aquarium, trying it in turn boiled, broiled, and cold. They found it excellent eating, resembling skate, but not so tender as might be. The verdict would probably have been still more favorable had the octopus been boiled first and then roasted, as is the way in Corsica, where the monster is esteemed a great delicacy. —Chambers' Journal.

The Breaking Strain of Republican Institutions.

The result in Maine, like the adjustment of the electoral dispute at Washington in 1877, is another practical proof that republican institutions are strong enough to bear the strain of a disputed succession. No worse strain can come on a Government and its ordinary administration. In a monarchy such a dispute must be settled by violence, real or threatened. In a great many republics it has had the same issue. In the last century half the States in the Union have had contests over the succession of the chief executive, and, with the exception of the Gulf States since the war, such contests have uniformly been settled without strife or bloodshed. The long canvass over Judge Morton's election in this State, the disputed election of Clinton when Jay waived his rights to a contest, the so-called "buck-shot war" in Pennsylvania, the sharp contest in Ohio in 1807, the long legal battle in Michigan in 1855, all these, like the dispute in Maine, passed without firing an angry shot. When the Dorr rebellion came to be carried up to the Federal Supreme Court, the one act of violence alleged was a "trespass," and the entire series of disputed successions in a century of republican government and a score of commonwealths have led to no worse violence than this tramp of squad of men across a man's orchard.

By a great many persons whose faith in the people is weak a peaceful ending was not expected in Maine There is a general impression among the doubters that a republican form of government, good enough when the piping times of peace call for nothing louder than a policeman's whistle, is not "strong" enough when trouble comes, and is altogether weaker then than Governments which make a parade of force. As a matter of fact and experience it is stronger. The power of the sovereign people diffused through a thousand peaceful agencies stands behind them all, ready to strike its inevitable blow if obstacles oppose the peaceful execution of the law.—Springfield Republican.

Lord Fairfax.

Thomas, Lord Fairfax, whose remains lie under a marble slab in the Episcopal Church, in Winchester, Va., said when he heard of Washington's triumph at Yorktown: "Take me to bed, Joe; it is time for Fairfax to die!" He had looked upon Washington as his protege, and, being himself a staunch royalist, it cut him to the core to see the young Virginian champion the colonist's rights. Two or three traditions of this eccentric nobleman are preserved at Millwood, Va. He was a "fine Oxford scholar, a member of Addison's Club, and the author of two or three numbers of the Spectator." According to tradition, he left England disappointed in an affair of the heart and buried his sorrows in the furthest part of his "ancestral woods." Near the present village of White Post, near Millwood, and which derived its appellation from a large white post that was planted here by him as a guide to his dwelling, he built "Greenway Court," and there spent the last thirty years of his life, dying in the year of 1782, shortly after the surrender of Yorktown. Millwood is an interesting place. It was so named from the two large stone mills which Gen. Dan Morgan made his Hessian prisoners build there. The mills are still standing and grind 30,000 bushels of grain a year. Henry Harrison, President Harrison's private secretary, lives near there, as does Col. Richard Henry Lee. The latter is a grandson of Richard Henry Lee, the first signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a first cousin of Gen. Robert E. Lee. He is a lawyer of considerable repute.

"Proposing" in Texas.

They manage these things differently in Texas. This is how a fond couple come to an understanding, according to one who pretends to know. He sits on one side of the room in a big white rocking chair; she on the other side, in a little white oak rocking chair. A long-eared deer hound is by his side, a basket of sewing by hers. Both the young people rock incessantly. He sighs heavily and looks out of the west window at a myrtle tree; she sighs lightly and gazes out of the east window at the turnip patch. At last he remarks:

"This is mighty good weather for cotton picking."

"'Tis that," the lady responds, "if we only had any to pick."

The rocking continues.

"What's your dog's name?" asks she.

"Coony!" Another sigh-broken stillness.

"What's he good for?"

"What's he good for?" says he abstractedly.

"Your dog, Coony."

"For ketching 'possums."

Silence for half an hour.

"He looks like a deer hound."

"Who?"

"Coony."

"He is, but he's sort o' bellowsed, an' gettin' old an' slow, an' he ain't no' count on a cold trail."

In the quiet ten minutes that ensues she takes two stitches in her quilt, a gorgeous affair made after the pattern called "Rose of Sharon."

"Your ma raising many chickens?"

"Forty-odd."

Then more rocking, and somehow the big rocking chair and the little rocking chair are jammed side by side, and rocking is impossible.

"Makin' quilts?" he observes.

"Yes," she replies, brightening up, for she is great on quilts. "I've just finished a gorgeous 'Eagle of Brazil,' a 'Setting Sun,' and a 'Nation's Pride.' Have you ever saw the 'Yellow Rose of the Prairie?'"

"No."

More silence. Then he says:

"Do you love cabbage?"

"I do that."

Presently his hand is accidentally placed on hers, of which she does not seem to be at all aware. Then he suddenly says:

"I'se a great mind to bite you."

"What have you a great mind to bite me for?"

"Kase you won't have me."

"Kase you ain't axed me."

"Well' now, I ax you."

"Then now I has you."

Coony dreams he hears a sound of kissing, and next day the young man goes after a marriage license.—Chambers' Journal.

A College Wag.

In a certain college, under Presbyterian auspices, not a hundred miles from New York, it is a rule that the students shall attend church at least once each Sunday, either in the college chapel or some other church in town which they shall designate, and for non-attendance satisfactory reasons must be given. Of course, on Monday mornings, when these reasons are called for, much ingenuity and some fun are brought out. In one of these interviews, Prof. L—— asked a student, "Mr. C——, where did you attend church yesterday?"

Mr. C—— replied, "The First Church, sir."

The professor, looking a little surprised, said, "Are you not aware, Mr. C——, that there was no service at the First Church yesterday?"

This was a poser, but was coolly met by, "I mean, professor, the first church I came to."

A general laugh followed, and somehow the young gentleman got rescued. Harper's Magazine.

A Good Letter.

The best of all letters is that which conveys the most information in the fewest possible words. A lack of spontaneity destroys the charm of a letter. Ladies have two favorite epistolary manias in their ordinary correspondence, namely, writing across lines and indulging in postscripts, to say nothing of their almost universal practice of underlining words—this is a confession of weakness. Among celebrated letters is a brief one which occurs to us, while we write, from the pen of the Italian poet, Politian, to a friend: "I had a great grief, and I have a great joy—because you were sick, and because you have recovered." How brief and how significant! This letter stands as a model to all letter-writers.

Everything we meet with here below is more or less infectious. If we live habitually among good and pleasant people, we inevitably will imbibe something of their disposition, says J. A. St John.

A little girl shut up as a punishment for some fault in her father's barn at Baud (Morbihan) in France, was killed by a wolf, which by climbing a rubbish heap was able to enter by the roof. The family had been at work in the fields at some distance, and on the father opening the door to release the child the wolf sprung out and made off, leaving on the floor the half-devoured remains of its victim.

The capital employed in British railroads is a little less than $3,500,000,000. It is administered by 224 distinct companies, some of which pay no dividend, while others are hopelessly insolvent. As a rule, the smaller the company the less profitable the undertaking.

After the ceremony had been performed at a Fall River wedding, a former husband of the bride presented himself. He had been away four years, and she had supposed herself a widow. He offered to leave her to the new husband if she would give him her child, and she closed the bargain on that basis.

Growing Old.

Yes, we are all growing old, though unconsciously, and the current of life flows on as smoothly as ever; indeed, the fuller the current, the more noiseless the flow. And months and years are, after all, so very much alike that they pass without special observation, and we begin to get old before we think of it. And when we sit down to a simple sum in arithmetic—the subtraction of the year of our birth from the current year—we are astonished at the answer, and are so doubtful of its correctness that we go over it a second time, but always with the same result. Children grow up around us, but we get used to that, and seldom stop to compute their ages and realize the swift flight of the years. In fact, our children never get old to us. The wife who has stood lovingly and faithfully at our side so long never changes, and is always the fair young bride of the old and happy days. And so with husband—to the wife. Though his hair might have grown gray in some way which we do not understand, and his firm step may seem a little less elastic or firm than it was, the husband does not seem to have changed much, after all He is to us the same strong, manly one whom we loved so much, and to whom we confided so much just a little while ago. To be sure, the few friends of our youth that remain are all gray-headed, but we do not think much of that, for we all seem to be using the same fashionable hair-dye. There is nothing in that to attract special attention. Some one—he may have been a philosopher—has said that if we doubt whether we are really growing old we should look in the face of a friend whom we have not seen for twenty years. The preacher tried that a few days ago. He did more; he looked in the face of a friend whom he had not seen for nearly forty years. What his thought of him was he does not know. They were both too polite to express their thoughts. He knows that he kept wondering, and wonders yet, what had happened to his friend that he should look so very old.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 12, 1880

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

The members of the democratic county central committee of DeKalb county, Indiana, are requested to meet at Auburn,

Friday, February 20th, 1880,

at 10 o'clock a. m., for the transaction of important business. A number of new propositions will be submitted for the consideration of the committee and it is important that every township be represented.

The following named persons constitute the committee:

J. Quince,	Butler township.
J. J. Walter,	Jackson "
S. S. Shutt,	Concord "
G. H. Munn,	Newville "
Joseph Wilson,	Stafford "
Wm. H. Madden,	Wilmington "
D. D. Moody,	Auburn precinct.
D. Y. Husselman,	Waterloo "
B. D. Thomas,	Keyser township.
C. B. Kagey,	Richland "
Sol Reinoehl,	Fairfield "
B. C. Waterman,	Smithfield "
Joseph Sewell,	Franklin "
B. F. Cornelius,	Troy "

W. L. BLAIR, Chairman.

Will the friends of the lamented Morton take kindly to the rejection of his son, John P. Morton, by the republicans of the senate, as [illegible] of the port of San Francisco? Senator Voorhees of this state did all he could for the confirmation of the young man whose father was his (Voorhees') bitter political enemy. Morton, while living, made a great mistake in not providing for the future welfare of his children and his children's children, as Grant has done. Morton rewarded his friends; Grant provided fat offices for his relatives and bribe-givers, while Hayes gives place and power to thieves, scalawags and vagabonds.

The name of Hon. J. B. Stoll, of the Ligonier Banner, is frequently mentioned by some of our over-zealous democratic cotemporaries for various positions on the next democratic state ticket, as we believe, without the advice or consent of Mr. Stoll. We might with propriety suggest that the ill-advised mention of prominent men as being candidates for a score or more offices preceding each campaign, is neither desirable by the parties named nor good policy on the part of their friends.

Hayes has paid another installment of his indebtedness to the thieves who stole the electoral vote of Louisiana and gave him the presidency. He has nominated A. C. Wells, a son of J. Madison Wells of returning-board fame, to succeed his father as surveyor of the port of New Orleans, a very profitable and honorable position. It is evident that old man Wells has Hayes in his power, and that the latter did not dare to refuse the demand of the former for the place.

Some time ago it was stated that Grant would not accept a nomination unless tendered by acclamation, but since the Pennsylvania convention has instructed for him, his friends conclude that, "should the republican national convention nominate him in the same manner as any other candidate would be nominated, he would deem it his duty to his country and party to accept."

A country boy coming to school in the city for the first time, was asked by the teacher where South America was situated. He scratched his head and said: "Down in father's 'tato field." The teacher thereupon corrected him by telling where it was. He looked up with a broad grin and exclaimed: "What yer asked me for if yer knew yerself?"

One of the ablest and best of the men who have sustained and adhered to Mr. Tilden, said in a private letter to the Albany Evening Times a few days since: "I have become satisfied that Gov. Tilden is and will be physically incapacitated to be a candidate for the presidency at the coming election. You might as well talk of running Silas Wright as Gov. Tilden."

The first issue of Brother Eveland's new paper, the Hicksville Republican, was received last week. We wish the new venture all the financial prosperity imaginable. Politically we are not so favorably inclined.

Hendricks 28, Tilden 2, Bayard 1, Seymour 1, Blaine 16, Sherman 7 and Grant 8, is the result of further investigation as to preferences of Auburn politicians.

Remember the meeting of the democratic county central committee. Every township committeeman is expected to be present.

Ex-secretary of the navy, Adolph E. Borie, died on the 5th inst., at the advanced age of 71 years.

The republicans of DeKalb county will meet in mass convention next Saturday.

Don Cameron's republican state convention in Pennsylvania gave Grant a boost by instructing the state delegation to vote as a unit for the man on horseback. The vote stood 133 for Grant, against a Blaine following of 113. A resolution against a third term was introduced but could not be carried, and was withdrawn. The platform adopted ignores Hayes, and instead of giving Sherman credit for executing the financial policy of the party, gives the credit entirely to the party. The plan seems to be to have the republican state conventions of New York and Illinois follow the example of Pennsylvania, and by the time the national convention meets in Chicago enough scattering votes will be concentrated to nominate Grant. It is evident that Grant cannot be nominated by acclamation, for Blaine will keep up a fight until the last, and will receive the influence that Sherman has bought and paid for in patronage, whenever the latter can see no hope for his own nomination. If Grant refuses to accept a nomination except by acclamation, as he has intimated, then his friends may center on Conkling, otherwise Blaine will gain the day and the campaign will be a hot one. Any democratic statesman can beat Grant without much of an effort.

Did the Auburn COURIER editor ever think that the Tilden element of New York might "kick," also, if some suitable man to the Kelleyites were selected as the candidate of the democracy in 1880?—Kendallville News.

Yes, sir, that is just what we think; and for that very reason we think Tilden and Kelley should both be kicked out of New York politics. Both have a kicking record, that of Tilden dating as far back as 1848; more recently when elected governor of New York he kicked all the life out of the democratic party of that state to gratify and give place to a lot of sore-head republicans with a view to increasing his personal popularity. [illegible] of an element led by Tilden in New York will do to bet on every time. If Tilden is fortunate enough to secure the nomination, and the democratic party is unfortunate enough to elect him, we shall expect to see a regular kicking-bee, when every anti-Tilden democrat will be kicked higher than Gilderoy's kite, and Tilden's pets from all parties will reap the reward of a democratic victory. Is our answer definite enough, Mr. News? If not, come again.

An advance of 60 per cent. in the price of white paper has caused many newspaper publishers to raise their subscription price in order to pay expenses. One of two things will be necessary if the advance in the price of paper is permanent, either the size of newspapers will have to be reduced or the subscription price increased. It is the intention of the publishers of the COURIER to continue the publication of a six-column quarto as they are now doing, but the subscription price may have to be raised. No promises will be made to extend beyond the first of April. Subscribers who desire to take advantage of the present very low subscription price, ($1.50 in advance), will have to do so very soon. We desire all to have timely warning, and to understand that by paying up the amount now due they can get the paper another year for $1.50 cash, if paid before April 1; if not paid before that time the price may be more.

People who subscribe for newspapers and allow themselves to become delinquent should take warning from a decision rendered a short time ago by a New Haven (Conn.) court. The Journal and Courier, of that city, sued William T. Howd for $13, due on papers sent him in the course of several years. The defendant set up the plea that he had ordered the paper discontinued several times. But the court ruled that under the laws of both the State and the United States the publishers could continue sending the paper until delinquencies for subscription were settled, and that the defendant was liable for all copies of the papers so sent. Judgment was rendered for the amount claimed with costs. While there is nothing particularly new in this decision—similar cases having been decided in the same way heretofore—we publish it that delinquent subscribers might be benefited by the warning it carries with it.—Wabash Courier.

"Why Did She Leave?"

We give it up. However, thinking that perchance some of our citizens can answer the conundrum, in view of the part which the name of our burg plays in the drama, we present the following, published in last week's Wabash Courier under the above unanswerable interrogatory:

"On Thursday night or Friday morning of last week the wife of John Lessick, a painter of this city, left her home, leaving no information as to her destination. Her husband, who was at Auburn, this state, on business, was informed by his brother, Mr. James Lessick, of the mysterious disappearance of Mrs. Lessick. Upon the receipt of the information John, thinking his wife might have gone to visit a married daughter residing in Goshen, immediately started from Auburn to that point. On his arrival at his daughter's home he received a letter from the truant spouse stating that she would spend Sunday at Salt Lake and requesting him to meet her there. Thither did John hie, only to find out that he had been enticed on a fruitless errand. On Wednesday it was discovered that the runaway had shipped off a considerable portion of the furniture, and this is taken as conclusive evidence that she had no intention of returning when she left. For years unpleasant rumors have been in circulation regarding Mrs. Lessick's character; that she was not in all respects just what a faithful wife would be. Of the truth or falsity of these rumors the Courier knows nothing, but her recent conduct gives color to their reliability. It is the opinion of Mr. Lessick that his wife has taken up her abode at Grand Rapids, Michigan, with Mrs. Hill, an unsavory character who left Wabash about a year ago. If the husband's theory is the correct one, Mrs. Lessick has associated herself with Mrs. Hill for no good purpose."

Obituary.

Died, January 27, 1880, at the residence of her husband in Fairfield township, Lucy, wife of Abraham Buss, in the 48th year of her age.

Mrs. Buss was the daughter of John and Nancy Woodbury, cousin to Mrs. William Roberts, of Wilmington township, and niece to the late Ephriam Woodbury, well known to the old inhabitants in and around Auburn. She was born at Castile, Wyoming county, New York, where she lived until her marriage, which occurred July 10, 1852. About twenty years ago she connected herself with the Lutheran church at Fairfield Center, continuing a zealous member until her death. While feeling a preference for the Presbyterian denomination, yet her very nature was so imbued with those great christian principles, that every field found a devoted laborer in the cause of the Great Master. She knew no creed nor classes, but labored with love and kindness, and was always successful in her undertakings. A little episode will illustrate her earnestness: After repeated efforts to maintain a Sunday-school at the Center, Mrs. Buss concluded to try one at her home, and her husband entering into the enterprise, through the great love he bore her, the barn floor was arranged and word sent out in the neighborhood for the children and parents to attend. Every Sabbath brought increased numbers, and when the time came to discontinue it on account of the weather, a more successful organization could not be found in the county. When spring returned the whole neighborhood solicited her to re-open her school, but her poor health would not permit it. Thus by the purity of her motives, her genuine christianity and the power [illegible] she embalmed herself in the hearts of all with whom she came in contact, and leaves not a single enemy to speak aught against her fair name.

Mrs. Buss was the mother of six children, one of whom died while an infant. Those remaining, Frank, aged 24, Lafayette, 22, Eva, 19, Celia, 17, and Oscar, 10, are kind, sober, affectionate and industrious children, evincing the care and training of a christian mother. She has passed beyond the shining river. Though sadness lingers in her wake, though loving hearts are sad and bereaved, there is left behind a bright remembrance of purity, devotion and loving kindness that shall bind her to kindred until all shall be joined anew in everlasting peace.

Death is the fading of a cloud,
The breaking of a chain;
The rending of a mortal shroud
We ne'er shall see again.

Death is the close of life's alarms,
The watch-light on the shore;
The clasping in immortal arms
Loved ones gone before.

Death is the gaining of a crown
Where saints and angels meet;
The laying of our burdens down
At the Deliverer's feet.

The latest case of absent mindedness comes from Tennessee. A young man of Memphis loves a girl who lives in the country, up the railroad. Wishing to see her he hired a horse and buggy and drove out to her house, hitching the horse at the door. After a while he came out, happy, serene, and delighted, walked down to the railway station, got a ticket and rode back to Memphis, leaving his horse hitched near the country gate. How he must love her!

St. Jacobs Oil cured a well-known auctioneer, and many other prominent citizens of Rheumatism. It is a reliable remedy.

—Garrett is afflicted with a gang of sacrilegious individuals who drop buttons and gun-wads into the Sunday-school contribution box; but that's all right, so long as they don't take out any change.

—Three rules which, if obeyed, will make you an example for others: Never betray a confidence; never laugh at the misfortunes of others, and never forget to renew your subscription when the time is up.

—Prospects for the extension of the Eel-River division of the Wabash railroad from Butler to Detroit are exceedingly good. When the line is completed it will be one of the most extensive freight lines in the west.

—George Hazzard, the much-written-about Auburn banker, is now safely housed in the northern penitentiary. He works at cigar-making, a more honest business, but not quite so lucrative, as that for which George was sent up for indulging in.—Wabash Courier.

—A man in Davenport's drug store yesterday asked if Lew. Garfield, the desperado who is now in the cooler for complicity in the Spencerville racket, is any relative of Senator Garfield. We think he is;—a step-stranger-in-law.

—To-day Coop. Ralston will be arrested for cruelty to animals. He spent two hours yesterday bombarding the bank of deposit, in the rear of the Courier office, mutilating the edifice and endangering the life of one of its occupants.

—Examine Goodman's dinner-pail, the only thing of the kind that is not injurious to health. It is convenient, durable and cheap. B. Goodman, patentee and sole manufacturer, Auburn Indiana. 7tf

—The Stamets hotel at the junction is ready for occupancy. We believe it is not rented yet.

Later.—Mr. H. H. Stamets is now moving into the hotel building, and will be ready to receive guests in a week or ten days.

—Frank Copper likes ham and eggs, occasionally, and his wife thinks she can fix 'em; so they have gone to housekeeping in good old style, having rented the cosy little house recently vacated by P. J. Lockwood, down near the Jackson depot.

—S. U. Lumbard, of the Lumbard House, Auburn, is in the city.—Ft. Wayne Sentinel, Tuesday. "Lumbard House, Auburn;" wonder where it is situated. "S. U. Lumbard," that must be Fort Wayne's Sid. Anyhow, it's too much mixed for us.

—A man named Oran Offutt, at Wabash, pelted Ephraim Pegg over the head with a pebble, not long since, from the effects of which the latter Pegged out, and the authorities are unable to find Offutt. He is probably, by by this time, Off-at California.

—Pete Eldridge is now a typo in the Hicksville Republican office, and its last week's issue—which was its first—contains this item:

"Our Pete has gone to Auburn to see his sick mother, who must be very feeble. We admire Pete's devotion."

—Though the leap-year ball was not a source of much profit to the ladies in point of finance, it was certainly the most enjoyable occasion of the season. The ladies deserve credit for the manner in which they entertained their guests.

—A butcher at Ft. Wayne, Meyers by name, wants $2,000 worth of libel out of the Daily News. Like all the rest of the sensitive creatures, he will surely get left.

—Providence permitting, day after to-morrow will be St. Valentine's day, as is evidenced by the handsome portraits and tender sentiments which adorn the numerous show-windows.

—Uncle John McClellan, who bosses the little store down on the corner, has a chronic case of nose-bleed; he also had some hard luck Tuesday evening, some miscreant having relieved him of about a half bushel of smoking-tobacco. No insurance.

—Mr. Max. Rosenthal, the popular wholesale cigar dealer, of Fort Wayne, was in this city Monday supplying his many customers with choice brands, of which he has several varieties. He left a box of his best on our table, for which we return thanks.

—"Hank" Long, foreman in the Kendallville Standard office and a brother to our Mike, has gone to the far west to recuperate. He will be absent about six weeks, we understand, during which time he hopes to "kill two stones with the one bird"—regain health and have some fun.

—White's Dramatic Company, comprising sixteen firstclass artists, in support of the renowned comedian, F. G. White, and the charming actress, Miss Fannie Mathias, will appear at Ensley's hall, Monday evening, Feb'y. 16. Reserved seats can be secured at Willis' book store. This popular company deserves a big house.

—A Minister relates his experience thus:

I take pleasure in adding to your many testimonials, that last Thursday (Thanksgiving Day), not being able to preach on account of Rheumatic pains in the shoulder, I bought a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, which, after using several times, relieved me wonderfully. Dr. B. Pick, Rochester, New York.

—Under the heading "The Old, Old Story," the Decatur Democrat of last week publishes an account of the seduction of a beautiful young girl near that place, the crime having been worked up and accomplished by two young devils of Decatur, whose names the Democrat withholds. Let everybody know their names, gentlemen, and then give it to them right and left.

—The following is a list of letters remaining uncalled for in the postoffice at Auburn, Ind., for the week ending February 7, 1880:

—The officials of the First National bank were considerably demoralized last Saturday, owing to some disarrangement of the bolt on the inside of the burglar vault of their mammoth safe. An expert, sent by the Hall Safe & Lock Co., succeeded in removing the obstruction during Sunday forenoon, when Walborn and McIntyre drew the first long breath in forty hours.

—Fred. Ashton, freight conductor on the B. & O. road, and Jay Eastman, of Garrett, were in town Tuesday, distributing invitations to a grand Washington's birthday ball, to be given at the B. & O. dining rooms, Monday evening Feb. 28. From particulars mentioned by the above-named gentlemen, we imagine that they intend to have a slashing good time.

—A snoozer from Butler, with a double charge of concentrated corn-juice in his system, took possession of the Wabash depot, Monday evening, just as Agent Johnson was locking up to go to supper. He exhibited a return ticket to Butler and claimed the right to occupy the premises until the midnight train departed; and Mr. Johnson, fearing that the fellow might make up a downy bed of ease on the track, as did Elmer Bradley, allowed him to sit there surrounded with darkness as long as he pleased.

—The entertainment given by Mr. Knight was grand. The hall was crowded and seats were at a premium. The selections from Shakespeare were rendered with an artistic taste, natural grace and ease of manner that betokened a thorough study and just appreciation of each character, and called forth the admiration and praise of our best critics. The various and gorgeous costumes, belts, girdles, cemeters, etc., worn, illustrative of those of "ye ancient times," was magnificence itself. He had scarcely retired to change before he returned clad in an entirely new raiment. It was one of the most enjoyable entertainments ever given in the city.—Cincinnati Commercial.

—Recollections, of days agone are brought to mind, as one by one our old time friends vanish behind the clouds of an unseen and uncertain future. The beauties of a heaven hoped for shine forth brightly in our imagination, when, from time to time the Father of all bids the spirit set on earth to rise in Paradise, where purity of character and noble traits on earth have earned a crown which only the pure are entitled to wear. Such were the thoughts suggested to the mind of the writer when he learned of the recent death of Mrs. John H. Kepner, an old time friend at Columbia City. Our sympathies go out for a devoted and sorrowing husband; innocent and confiding children; loving sisters and a kind, indulgent father; may the gloom of their sorrowing hearts be dispelled in the hope that she has only gone

"Out of the shadow of sadness,
Into the sunshine of gladness,
Into the light of the blest;
Out of a land very dreary,
Out of the world of the weary,
Into the rapture of rest."

Garfield Gobbled.

In the Courier of last week, we terminated an article relative to the Spencerville-Sol. Barney-burglary-business, with the query: "Where in the deuce is Garfield?" This week, owing to the efforts of Sheriff Leas and Deputy-Sheriff Somers, we are enabled to answer the question quite explicitly. One day last week the sheriff received some information which led him to believe that he had his man, and accordingly, in company with J. C. Somers, he took a bee line for Canada, where, at the town of Chatham, Kent county, Ontario, he found Lewis Garfield in jail, having been arrested there on a charge of murder which was committed some time since at Wapakoneta, Auglaize county, Ohio; and the chances are, had not Sheriff Leas put in his appearance, that Garfield would have been taken to Ohio and lynched, as the man who committed the aforesaid murder was unknown there and some parties who had evidently put up a job on Garfield were willing to swear that he was the man. However, Sheriff Leas had but little difficulty in convincing the authorities that they had caged the wrong bird for them but the right one for him; and as for the prisoner himself, he considered the sheriff's coming after him such a God-send that he consented to accompany him without any extradition papers or going through the process of obtaining a requisition. He said that his treatment there, during two days' confinement, was pretty rough; that he was fed on cold water gruel, etc.; therefore, of the two evils he chose the least and submissively surrendered. Once back into the United States, everything was smooth sailing, and the sheriff arrived here with his slippery prisoner at 11 o'clock Tuesday night. A Courier reporter visited Garfield yesterday, at the jail, from whom he elicited a portion of the facts related above. The prisoner seemed somewhat nervous and excited, though this is partly attributable to a slight fever with which he is suffering and for which he is now receiving medical assistance.

Thus ends another chapter in this interesting story, and for additional developments our readers must await the trial.

A Happy Gathering.

In the last issue of the Courier we inadvertently omitted to make mention, though then in possession of the particulars, of a pleasant family re-union which took place Tuesday morning of last week at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beard, about one mile northeast of town, in commemoration of the birthday of Mrs. Sophia Leas, that day being the eightieth anniversary. On that joyful occasion, which is fitfully celebrated by the family every year, this aged lady was surrounded by the following sons and daughters, sons-in-law and daughters-in-law; Mr. and Mrs. Frank Beard, John Leas and wife, of Waterloo, Samuel J. Miller and wife, of Angola, Jacob Leas and wife, of Steuben county, Philip Parnell and wife, of this county, Sheriff A. S. Leas and wife, of this place, and O. H. Leas and wife, of Angola. The only living members absent being Dr. E. R. Leas and Mrs. Addie E. Yeagy, the chief purpose of the gathering—to have a big dinner and good time—was accomplished, though the pleasure of the occasion would have been materially enhanced by the presence of the missing ones. As may be inferred, the dinner was a success and cheerfulness prevailed until the evening shadows began to fall, when the party dispersed to meet at Mrs. Parnell's, nothing transpiring to prevent, one year hence, Feb. 5, 1881.

Lively Racket.

"French Pete," in his usual and effective style, got overloaded with family disturbance, last Friday, and for a few moments made it quite interesting for the boys in the boot-and-shoe store of W. J. Austin & Co. At about three o'clock in the afternoon Pete entered the aforesaid establishment and immediately jumped up on the shirt-collar of Mr. Moses Brandon, who was sitting in the shop, and between whom and Pete some old grudge exists; but Mr. B. demurred to the little Frenchman's complaint and chucked him a double-back-action lick in the neck. Pete took his medicine like a little man and stretched his form out on the floor, after which Marshal Scott stepped into the arena and dropped the curtain on the first act. During the hottest of the battle, W. J. remembered that he had an engagement with a man around the corner, while Dave Hampton couldn't be seen for the dust he made trying to slide through a knot hole in a box of boots. The second and concluding act in the drama consisted of Pete's being incarcerated in the old jail, from which he liberated himself with an ax concealed in his vest pocket.

Auburn Historical Society.

This recently organized society is now flourishing and bids fair to become a successful, permanent association. There is certainly no reason why Auburn should not sustain it, and a little active work on the part of each member is bound to have the desired result. The next meeting will take place at Gordon's art gallery to-morrow (Friday) evening, at which time select readings will be given by Miss Brown, of the high school, Mrs. E. L. Casebeer and Mr. Louis Johnson. These will be entertaining, and a good time is in store for those who attend.

Dyer's Dose Definitely Dealt.

The final action of the court in the Dyer case, which attracted so much attention and called forth so much feeling at Albion, a few weeks since, took place yesterday. As has before been stated, a motion was made for a new trial when the verdict was rendered; but Judge Lowry, after hearing the arguments, overruled the motion. A motion was then interposed for the further postponement of judgment on the verdict for two weeks, which was overruled. A motion was then made in arrest of judgment; this, also, was overruled, and thirty days were given in which to file bill of exceptions. The defendant was sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the state prison at Michigan City for the full period of his natural life. Dyer, while judgment was being pronounced upon him, though not exhibiting any considerable emotion, was once affected to tears; and, since he has "sown in tears," he may "reap in joy," but the chances are against him.

Amusement.

Alfred J. Knight, whose impersonations of Shakespeare and of humorous characters have been pronounced the best in the land, wherever he has appeared, is engaged by the Odd Fellows for next Thursday evening at Ensley's hall. Admission 25 cents. Reserved seats 35 cents. Tickets for sale at Davenport's drug-store. Mr. Knight's costumes are the finest and most expensive worn by any impersonator in the country.

Not every one can identify himself as clearly as a Dutchman of whom we read recently. Having seen in the morning papers an account of an accident in which he had himself been killed, and after which he had been carried to the morgue, he had a long argument in his own mind and seems to have more than half convinced himself that something dreadful had happened in spite of his apparent health and good spirits. He hastened to the morgue and there, sure enough, was a dead body. Even then he was a little uncertain whether he or another man had been killed, and immediately began a close examination. The clothes of the dead man were very like his own, and so was the complexion and the general cast of countenance. The poor Dutchman was in perfect dispair, and began to feel that he had, after all, been really killed. At last he opened the eyes of the dead man and found them to be blue. With a great sigh of relief he said: "No dot can't be me; mine eyes is black, but, mein Gott, what a close schave I have had."—[Ex.]

Rev. Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio, has used the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, and endorses it highly. He writes about it as follows: —I am pleased to say that the use of St. Jacobs Oil has benefited me greatly, and I have no hesitation to recommend it to all as an excellent curative.

A QUESTION AND ITS ANSWER.

BY HALLIE C. T.

If "the sunset of life gives mystical lore,"
Tell, venerable father, ere thou leaveth earth's shore,
While thy mind is illumined (and freed from all care)
By light late given from the heavenly sphere,
Tell me, I pray, why earth is all change,
And nothing is permanent which e'er seemeth strange.

The mountain is grand and lifts high its head,
A volcano bursts, 'tis the lava's deep bed;
The ocean is mighty, but change is marked there
On its surf-beaten rocks and its beach hot and bare;
The rainbow is gorgeous—it stays not an hour—
And how transient the bloom of the loveliest flower!
The swallows and martins that build in the wall
Ere the winter is with us are flown one and all.

Is there no Utopia where mortals' fond dreams
Are realized ever and life's what it seems?
Where roses are brighter and sweeter each morn,
Whose bloom is perpetual, with never a thorn?
Where dear ones we love and clasp to our heart
From our fond keeping shall never depart?
Where affection is truly an amaranth flower,
Whose glow grows warmer and purer each hour?
Where friends are all true and never betray,
And discord comes not to darken our way?
Where mortals ne'er pay for that sad primal fall—
And is "the trail of the serpent over us all?"

In reply so promptly spoken,
As his eye now gave the token
That his soul
Must meet its goal,
That the hour supreme was near,
He tersely said, in tones of cheer:

"Daughter, why this change deplore
Death's the only, only door
Unto the land of bliss;
Death is natural as our birth,
Progressive as our life on earth;
Believeth thou this?

"Roses without a thorn,
Fadeless flowers, earthly born,
Are but dreams;
But where eternal summer lies,
Beyond the gates of paradise,
All is what it seems."

CLARENDON, Ark.

FIGHT WITH WOLVES.

One of the most muscular, powerful-limbed settlers on the old New York frontier, a century since, was Henreich Kaupman. His arms were like piston-rods, and he could drive his huge, mallet fist with such a tremendous momentum as to fell an ox as if stricken by a thunderbolt.

It is said that he was once caught by two iron-muscled Mohawks, each armed with knives, while Henreich had neither; yet at the first onset he fractured the skull of the foremost Indian, and bore the second one to the earth as if he was nothing but an infant. That Indian never resumed the perpendicular again.

All this is by way of introduction to an adventure that Kaupman once had with a pack of wolves, and which came fearfully nigh having a fatal result for him.

The winter of 17— was an unusually severe one throughout the Northern States, and many deaths from exposure and starvation occurred before the opening of spring. The wolves, bears and other wild animals became nearly famished from hunger, and, as a consequence, were unusually fierce and courageous. They came down from the mountains, and woe to the sheepfold that was left unprotected during the night. They were sure to be invaded by the starving animals, and not a sheep would live to tell the tale.

There were tracks around the barns, where the wolves had trotted all night in their search for some means of entrance; their howls could be heard through the still, cold hours, and more than one housewife had been chased to her very door for imprudently venturing out after nightfall.

Many of the settlers sat in the upper stories of their homes, and amused themselves by shooting the wolves, for whose scalps the Government had a standing bounty of several shillings.

Henreich Kaupman remained at home, only venturing forth to attend to his dumb animals and see that they were properly protected during the night. But after a while his stock of groceries became low, and finally gave out altogether. True, he and his family could live upon the poultry, sheep and animals they owned, but it was rather unpleasant to be without tea, coffee, sugar, salt and many other articles that were more necessities than they were luxuries.

By this time, too, the roads had been traversed so much that they were thoroughly broken, and Henreich concluded to harness up his mare to his sled and go to the village, about four miles distant, and procure the articles which he so much needed.

With a want of foresight which he could never explain, he started out upon his journey without any weapon, except a keen-edged hatchet, which was carried in case the sled should give out. In his house hung his trusty rifle, but neither he nor his wife seemed to imagine that there would be any call for it, and he drove cheerily away, bidding his wife a merry good-by as the mare went at a spanking gait down the road toward the village.

The latter place—which might more properly be termed a settlement—was reached in due time, the groceries all bought, and everything was in readiness to start homeward.

Henreich had been storm-bound so long in his house that he found the companionship of his friends at the village tavern extremely agreeable. There was so much to talk about, so much news to listen to, such a quantity of gossip regarding the affairs of the neighborhood, that the time slipped unconsciously by, until, when he arose to go, he found it was almost dark. Still he had no fears, as his wife would understand that he had remained at the village, and there was no necessity of his immediate return.

As he turned homeward and left the village behind him, and noticed that the dim light by which he was traveling belonged to the moon, it flashed upon him that perhaps he would encounter danger before reaching home, and he regretted for the twentieth time that he had left his rifle behind.

The road, deep between the drifts of snow, was of just sufficient width for the little mare and sled, and the spirited little animal went forward at a swift gait, while Henreich, somewhat stupefied and weary, was beguiled into drowsiness by the easy, gliding motion of the sled.

He was half asleep and half conscious when he became sensible of a rapid increase in the motion of the sled. He felt it jerk several times beneath him, and all at once a fiercer jerk than usual, accompanied by a neigh of terror, effectually aroused him, and he sat bolt upright and looked around. He looked in front; all wore its wonted appearance; a wild, straggling piece of wood standing two feet deep in snow; the narrow track twisting through it; the heavens, cold and clear, the earth white; but close behind the sled were three gaunt animals, cantering heavily, while a fourth was fast gaining behind.

The jaws of the leading wolf, owing to the lowness of the sled, were within reach of Henreich's shoulder. But the latter cared little for this. The brutes were after the mare, and upon her courage and fortitude depended the escape of herself and master.

If the alarmed creature could have the nerve to keep steadily onward in the track she had a good chance of eluding her pursuers, for the moment the wolves sprang outside the road to pass the sleigh, the depth of the snow so diminished their speed that they fell behind. But should the mare, in her terror, spring aside and plunge into the snow, Kaupman knew it was all up with both of them. Such a proceeding would disentangle her from the sled; and, before she could flounder a dozen yards through the snow, the wolves would be tearing her to shreds.

Henreich leaned forward and spoke kindly to his animal, which raised her ears that were flat with terror, and fell into a more even pace. He then turned, and, brandishing his keen-edged hatchet, shouted to the brutes, but it did not discomfit them in the least.

Reaching forward he patted his mare with the hand that held the reins, while he held the hatchet with the other, and kept his eye upon the ferocious beasts. However, he did not use the weapon, for the closer the wolves kept to the sled, the less they were seen by the horse, and, as a consequence, there was the less probability of her terror becoming uncontrollable, and her breaking aside from the path.

So long as matters remained in their relative position, Henreich felt that all was going well.

It was not long before the wolves discovered that there was little prospect of success so long as they remained in the track, and they now began springing aside and attempting to get abreast of the horse. In every instance they fell behind; but each effort revealed them to the terrified mare, that had no blinkers, and the furious plunges she made filled Henreich with the greatest anxiety.

One of the wolves was very large and straight-limbed, and showed a speed superior to the rest. More than once, when he sprung out into the snow, he advanced nearer abreast the horse than did the others. Upon this gaunt creature Henreich fixed his eye, and caught the green light that played from his eyelids.

By-and-by the snow became flatter, and the huge wolf again sprung aside. The speed of these animals is extraordinary, and he gained rapidly. Henreich waited until he got just abreast, when, rising in his seat, he circled the hatchet over his head and brought it down with the quickness of lightning. The head of the wolf was cleft in twain, and with a dying yelp he doubled over in the snow, and was quickly left behind.

One of the dreaded animals was dispatched. There were three left as furious for blood as ever, and these never abated their speed in the least. Had they got a taste of the blood of their companion they would have gagged themselves on him before seeking the horse; but he whisked off the stage of life so suddenly that they scarcely noticed his absence.

The distance from home was rapidly diminishing between the quick steps of the mare, which continued to carry the sled at full speed, until the fear of overturning became again a source of anxiety. Henreich, too, had learned by this time that these were no ordinary animals with which he had to deal, but sharp-set, fiercely courageous and determined brutes, to which man or beast would be alike welcome, their preference, however, as manifested by their actions, being for horseflesh.

These were not the animals to be frightened away by the sight of a man's house, and there was a bad open space between the outskirts of the forest and Henreich's home, to which he looked with no little apprehension.

They had now approached the very edge of the wood, and the wolves began gaining on each side. The terror-stricken horse became uncontrollable, and, bounding terrifically forward, caught the sled against the stump of a tree, overturned it, and galloped away at a full run, leaving Henreich alone in the snow.

Before he could rise, he felt the brutes clawing at his throat, but his garments were so thick that he was saved from injury, and, rising to his feet threw them off. His hatchet had been jerked out of his hand as he fell, and he looked desperately around for it, but it was not to be found.

By this time the mare was almost out of sight, and two of the wolves were upon the defenseless man, and the other, deserting the animal, bounded back. Henreich faced the foremost, and the next moment was surrounded.

The powerful man now called into play all the strength for which he was so renowned. He struck furiously at the leaping, snarling brutes, and flung them off when they attempted to cling to him. Had he possessed a weapon, even a club, it is not impossible that he would have saved himself. One blow, with a club in his hands, would have cracked the skull of the largest brute, and with a knife he could have ripped them open.

But there was no hope, fighting with his naked hands. His blood had already dyed the snow, and the smell and taste of it made the brutes furious. Their lithe, heavy bodies were hurled against him, as if impelled by some power not their own, and finally they pulled him down.

The sweets of this earth, the mystery of heaven, swept through poor Henreich's mind; nay, in those brief, terrible moments, the particulars found time to intrude. It is often, very often, thus in the moment of death.

He thought how his devoted Mary would watch through the vigil—how his mangled remains would tell his fate in the morning—a life's despair for the mother of the helpless little ones. All these things rushed through his brain, and he knew that he himself was in the jaws of the wolves.

Then those foul, lurid eyes glared over him; the tightening of the throat followed, and thinking was finished. Still he struggled to release his arms—the grasp on his throat was choking him; his senses reeled; when, like the whizzing of a meteor, another hard-breathing animal shot in among the assailants and fastened itself on the chief.

The wolves for an instant relaxed their fury; Henreich reeled giddy to his feet, and recognized his brave dog. For a moment he stood bewildered, when he saw the wolf retreating, and the other two attacking his dauntless dog. He turned to help him, and a bright object caught his eye; it was his hatchet lying on the snow, within an arm's length of the last terrible struggle. Henreich snatched it up, and was himself again.

His arms were bleeding, but their giant strength remained. The next instant he had split the skull of one of the wolves, and now he turned, like the madman that he was, upon the fierce animal that had borne his faithful dog to the ground.

The first blow laid bare the gaunt backbone, the next gave his throat a terrible gash, and the third loosened his fearful gripe upon the dog. Still he struggled fiercely, when Henreich sprang upon the animal, and cut and hacked and slashed until the wolf was mincemeat.

As he arose, a hand was on his shoulder, and, turning, a hand was on his bosom.

"Henreich!"

"Mary!"

Long did the young people stand in speechless embrace; but the weaker supported the strong; for Henreich's manly nerves were gone, and he leaned upon Mary like a helpless child.

The arrival of the frightened horse aroused the wife, and the moment she opened the door the dog rushed forth, led by his kindly instinct. Mary fled wildly after him, not pausing to bring the rifle. But this, it has been shown, was not needed.

The Speaking Date.

The automaton I shall now describe is a huge carbuncle, in form and appearance, just like an ordinary date such as any one would handle and attempt to eat without suspecting deception. It was owned and exhibited by a Hindoo ventriloquist, who was also a juggler; and he called his carbuncle "The Speaking Date." Whenever he spoke to it the answer came promptly, and appropriately, as it seemed, from the very heart of the date, which lay on a table, several feet from the exhibitor.

It was not always, however, an obedient servant, for sometimes, when the master gave an order, the date argued the point, making objections, offering excuses, and finally yielding, as it were, under protest.

It would complain that it was "sleepy," or "tired of doing the same thing over and over," or "the people were not paying attention." But all this only enhanced the interest of the occasion; and when, at last, the rebellious little thing concluded to do as it was bidden the audience was in ecstasies.

A tree was made to grow in our presence, as if from the very heart of the date, putting forth its long, pointed leaves, then the dainty blooms, and finally a clump of the luscious fruit. But of this we were not invited to eat, for it disappeared suddenly, and only the single little golden-brown date we had seen at the first remained. This was, of course, only a specimen of the sleight-of-hand "tricks" that Hindoo jugglers know so well how to perform, while the apparent speaking of the date was the result of ventriloquism—the juggler being able to make his voice sound as if it came from where the date lay, and so induce the audience to think that the voice came out of the fruit-like carbuncle itself.

But, after this, the stone jumped, walked, ran and finally, with head and wings suddenly attached, flew across the stage and alighted between the conjurer's joined hands. This was all accomplished by means of machinery adroitly hidden between the carbuncle and the golden tripod upon which it lay. Curious and startling as were the movements, they were wonders of mechanism, and, of course, had nothing to do with supernatural powers, such as the ventriloquist pretended to possess.—St. Nicholas.

Washington as a Fireman.

In 1774 the Friendship Fire Company, which still exists, was organized. It at first consisted of citizens who, out of "mutual friendship," agreed to carry to every fire "two leathern buckets and one great bag of oznaburg or wider linnen." Washington was made an honorary member, and when he went as a delegate to the Congress of 1774, at Philadelphia, he examined the fire engines in use there. On his return to Philadelphia to the Continental Congress in 1775, he bought from one Gibbs a small fourth-class engine for £80 10s., and just before he set out for Boston heights to become Commander-in-Chief he dispatched this little engine to the Friendship Company. When in Alexandria in his younger days he always attended at fires, and assisted to extinguish them. In the last year of his life a fire occurred near the market. He was riding down King street, followed by his servant, also on horseback, and he saw the Friendship engine poorly manned. Riding up to a group of well-dressed gentlemen near by, he called out: "Why are you idle there, gentlemen? It is your business to lead in these matters." And, throwing the bridle of his horse to his servant, he leaped off and seized the brakes, followed by a crowd that gave the engine such a "shaking up" as it never knew afterward.—Wm. F. Carne, in Harper's Magazine.

GOSSIP WITH GRANT

About His Cabinet and Other Men and Matters.

[John Russell Young's "Around the World With Grant."]

"Hamilton Fish," said Gen. Grant, "is, I think, the best Secretary of State we have had in fifty years, unless it may have been Marcy. This will be the opinion of those who study the records of the State Department. He differed from Marcy and excelled him in this, that he never did anything for effect, while Marcy would often do things for effect. In this—his aversion to anything that looked like striving for an effect—Fish was so straight that I sometimes thought he leaned backward. When I formed my Cabinet I consulted no one. The only member of it whom I informed in advance was A. T. Stewart. Mr. Stewart had so many vast and stupendous private interests that I did not think it would be fair to offer him such a place without first knowing whether he could accept. I thought his genius for business would be the quality required for the treasury, and I wanted the treasury conducted on strict business principles. When I spoke to Mr. Stewart he was pleased. My first choice for the State Department was James F. Wilson, of Iowa. I appointed Mr. Washburne under peculiar circumstances. Mr. Washburne knew he was going to France, and wanted to go. I called on him one day when he was ill. I found him in a desponding mood. He said that before going to a country like France he would much like to have the prestige of a Cabinet office; that it would help his mission very much. He suggested the treasury. I had already spoken to Mr. Stewart on the subject, and said I would make him Secretary of State. So came the appointment. You remember Schofield was retained for a time as Secretary of War. I did this to mark my approval of his course in going into Johnson's Cabinet. As a matter of fact, before Schofield accepted Johnson's offer he consulted with me, and I advised him to accept. But Schofield was in the army, and a General. Of course he could not resign a life position of so high a grade to take a political office that would last four years. And I do not think it proper that an officer in high rank should be either at the head of the army or navy. After Rawlins died, I debated for some time between Belknap, whom I did appoint, and Fairchild, now the Consul General in Paris. What decided between the two were state considerations. I appointed Mr. Borie to the navy because I knew him to be an exalted character, one of the best types of Americans I have ever known; a merchant who had amassed a large fortune, and perfectly fitted for any place. If Mr. Borie had felt able or willing to undergo the labors of the Navy Department, he would have made an admirable Secretary. He declined the place, and only remained for a time at my urgent entreaty. I wanted the Navy Department to go to Pennsylvania and offered it to George H. Stuart, of Philadelphia. He was a business man and could not accept. Then I asked Lindley Smith, of Philadelphia. His professional engagements were too absorbing. Mr. Borie mentioned Robeson, and arranged that we should meet on an excursion I was taking to West Point. Here I made Robeson's acquaintance, and out of it came his appointment to the Navy Department. After I gave the treasury to Boutwell, of course it would not do to have two Cabinet officers from Massachusetts, and Mr. Hoar retired. I have a great esteem for Mr. Hoar, and was sorry the Senate did not confirm his nomination for the Supreme bench. I look back upon my Cabinet selections with great pleasure, and am very grateful to the gentlemen associated with me for their assistance. Boutwell went out of the Cabinet to become a Senator. But I think he regretted it. He told me one day that he felt homesick after leaving the administration. I was sorry to lose him. I had difficulty in inducing Mr. Fish to remain eight years. At one time he was so bent on resigning that I had selected his successor. It would have been President White, of Cornell. Under the present administration one thing has been achieved which I admire, namely, the proper position of the General of the Army. It is now as it was before Marcy, as Secretary of War, quarreled with Scott. Scott became angry and retired to Elizabeth, leaving Marcy in command of the army. Secretaries have commanded it ever since until now. Now it is as it should be, and I think it will remain.

"I never knew Greeley well," said the General, "and don't think I ever met him until after I was elected President. But I had a great respect for his character. I was raised in an old-line Whig family, my father being an active man in the Whig party—attending conventions and writing resolutions. So that all my earliest predilections were for Greeley and his principles. I tried very hard to be friendly with Mr. Greeley and went out of my way to court him, but somehow we never became cordial. I invited him to the White House, and he dined with me. Greeley had strange notions about the kind of men who should take office. He believed that when a man was a helpless creature, who could do nothing but burden his friends, and was drifting between the jail and the poorhouse, he should have an office. For good men to hold office was, in his mind, a degradation. I remember on one occasion meeting him on the train between Washington and New York. I had a special car, and sent for him to come in. We talked all the way. He laid down this doctrine. I said, laughingly, 'That, Mr. Greeley, accounts for your always pushing so-and-so,' naming one of his herd of worthless men who were always hanging about the Washington hotels with letters of recommendation from him in their pockets. He was much annoyed at my personal application, although I had no idea of offending him. I don't think he ever quite forgave me for my raillery. Greeley was a man of great influence and capacity, but I think that in his latter years, at least when I knew him, he was suffering from the mental disease from which he died. He made suggestions to me, and recommendations to office, of the most extraordinary character, that he never could have conceived in a healthy frame of mind. I should like to have known him earlier, when he was himself. If he had been elected President he never could have lived through his term, and the Government would really have been in the hands of B. Gratz Brown."

"By the way," said the General, "the indirect claims case, as presented in our case against England at the time of the Alabama arbitration, was an illustration of what those in authority are compelled sometimes to do as a matter of expediency. I never believed in the presentation of indirect claims against England. I did not think it would do any good. I knew England would not consider them, and that it would complicate our meritorious case by giving her something to complain about. When Mr. Fish prepared our case against England, and brought it to me for approval, I objected to the indirect claim feature. Mr. Fish said he entirely agreed with me, but it was necessary to consider Mr. Sumner. Mr. Sumner was at the head of the committee in the Senate that had charge of foreign affairs. He was not cordial to the treaty; we had overruled one of his suggestions, namely, that our first condition of peace with England should be the withdrawal of her flag from the American continent. That suggestion was a declaration of war, and I wanted peace, not war. Mr. Sumner had also laid great stress on indirect claims. Not to consider them in our case, therefore, would offend him. Then, if we made a treaty without considering indirect claims, they would exist as an unsettled question, and be used by demagogues as pretexts for embroiling us at some future time with England. The surest way of settling the indirect claim question was to send it to the Geneva tribunal. The argument of Mr. Fish convinced me, but somewhat against my will. I suppose I consented because I was sincerely anxious to be on good terms with Mr. Sumner, as I wanted to be with all of our leading Republicans."

FACTS AND FIGURES.

POOR'S Manual (1878) gives the total number of miles of railroad operated in the United States as 74,112, and the total cost of construction, $3,715,725,000—about an average of $50,000 per mile.

THE latest statistics in reference to the miles of telegraph lines give the length of various lines in the United States as 70,618, and the length of the wires as 164,610. We have no information regarding their cost.

OVER 20,000 car-loads of live and dressed poultry are carried into New York city yearly, and 25,500,000 dozens eggs go to the same market. According to the best estimates, the United States produces 9,000,000,000 of eggs annually.

THE poverty of Germany, as compared with France, is indicated by the statement that the latter country has 100,000,000 acres of land under cultivation, with a population of 39,000,000; while Germany, with a population of 42,000,000, has only 80,000,000 acres devoted to farming purposes.

OF the 202 minor planets now known, 155 have been discovered by ten astronomers. The list is as follows: Peters, 38; Watson, 23; Palisa, 21; Luther, 20; Goldschmidt, 14; Borrelly, 9; Hind, 9; De Gasparis, 7; Prosp. Henry, 7, and Hogson, 7. The whole number of discoverers is thirty-three.

THE two towers of the Cologne Cathedral, which is now nearly completed after centuries of work, are the highest in the world. They are 524 feet 11 inches and 415 feet 1 inch high, respectively, while St. Peter's at Rome is but 409 feet 2 inches. The ridge tiles of the Cologne Cathedral are 360 feet 3 inches from the ground, while the top of the dome of St. Paul's in London is only 4 feet 10 inches higher.

THE annexed table shows the commercial failures in the country and the liabilities for eight years:

Year.	Failures.	Amt. of liabilities
1872	4,069	$121,056,000
1873	5,183	228,499,900
1874	5,830	155,239,000
1875	7,740	201,060,000
1876	9,092	191,117,000
1877	8,872	190,669,936
1878	10,478	234,383,132
1879	6,658	98,149,053

THE last census reports 47,846 persons engaged in 5,204 establishments, making cigars, snuff, chewing or smoking tobacco; the value of the products $72,762,044, an increase of nearly 76 per cent. over that of 1860, in tobacco and snuff, and 268 per cent. increase in the production of cigars. Tobacco crop in the year 1840, 219,163,319 pounds; 1850, 199,752,655 pounds; 1860, 434,209,461 pounds; 1870, 262,735,341 pounds. In 1878 the tobacco crop was 392,546,700 pounds, valued at $22,137,428.

WESLEY SUMMERS, of Pickens county, S. C., a colored boy a little less than 18 years old, defied his father's opposition by marrying. The father spent all the next day hunting for his son, and, finding him in the evening, took him home, where the youthful bridegroom was beaten until he was almost senseless. The unhappy boy then employed the little strength he had left in committing suicide.

"MY darling," wrote a husband to his wife, "I shall not be home till very late this evening. Do not wait for me. It's for thy sake I work by the light of the pale, effulgent moon, as if it were the bright, dazzling sunshine." She didn't wait; she went and got a detective and hunted him up.

AN interesting French blue-book has been found, showing that the Jesuits, though thrice expelled from France, hold prosperous establishments in fifty-one of its eighty-one departments.

TURKEY'S territorial loss is estimated by a German authority as a territory almost as large as Prussia proper, with a population of 11,000,080.

AD VIRGILIUM.

BY PAUL M. RUSSELL.

[A reflection of Horace's ode.]

May Venus, guardian of the "Happy Isle"
And Helen's brothers, radiant orbs of light,
Befriend, and on thy bark benignly smile;
May Aeolus in caves of lasting night
Enchain all winds save welcome northern gusts;
And thou, O ship, bear safe to Attic ground
The priceless charge which Rome to thee intrusts;
O triple were the brazen bands that bound
The oaken heart of him who cleft the deep
With earliest beak. He feared not Afric gales
That wrestle with the polar blasts and sweep
The sea. He, daring, spread his snowy sails
Beneath the Hyades, and fearless crossed
The liquid realms that tyrant Notus ruled;
What path of death would he have shunned, who tossed
Upon the main and to all dangers schooled,
Had seen the monsters of the flood and watched
The fretted seas that washed the stars and saw
The tempest-smitten cliffs by lightnings notched!
All vain was made Jove's salutary law
Which placed repelling seas between far Greece
And our Hesperia, since godless barks
Leap scornful o'er the waves. Old customs cease
And man, attempting all, no longer marks
The bounds assigned to gods. Prometheus
From other realms stole living fire by charms
And ate it. Then famine and disease, alas!
Embraced the earth with their infectious arms
And direful Death advanced with rapid pace.
On wings forbid to man, the daring Greek
Essayed an airy path through cloud-sailed space,
And Hercules caused Acheron to shriek.
There is no cliff too high for man to scale;
And folly leads us on to sack the sky.
Our crimes great Jove still causes us to wait,
And jerks his deadly lightning from on high.

PINAPHORISM—Better late than hardly ever.

"THEN, I suppose, Miss Strongmind, you and Mr. Sparrow are soon to be man and wife?" "No, sir; woman and husband."

AN Irishman tells of a fight in which there was only one whole nose left in the whole crowd, "and that belonged to the tea-kettle."

"I AM astonished, my dear young lady, at your sentiments; you make me start!" "Well, sir, I've been waiting for you to start for the last hour."

ART received rather an awkward criticism from a free-and-easy young man who met a sculptor in a social circle, and addressed him thus: "Er—er—so you are the man—er—that makes—er—mud heads?" And this was the artist's reply: "Er—er, not all of 'em; I pidn't make yours."

LIFE.

"We live but one life here," he said;
"The soul needs love, the body bread."
So to the needy and the poor
He gave, nor turned one from the door
That asked admittance to his heart.
Each, with a blessing, did depart.
This man will find, when death arrives,
He's lived a part of many lives.

ETTIE.

A CONFIRMED card-player became convinced that card-playing was wrong—perhaps because he had a long run of bad luck, and perhaps for higher reasons. He broke the subject very gently to his companions when they were busy at their favorite game by saying, seriously, "Well, friends, I think after all that a great deal of valuable time is wasted in playing cards." His partner, who never dreamed of the depth of his remark, answered, "Yes, I've often thought so, too. Now, just think, for instance, how much time we waste in shuffling."

THE WOLF AND THE MOUSE.

A wolf into the wilderness one day
Bore off a stolen sheep, and on the prey
Fed to the full. Then, finding he could not Devour it to the bone upon the spot,
Resolved till supper time the rest to keep,
Beside it laid him down and went to sleep.
Meanwhile the smell allured a neighboring mouse
To creep with caution from his tiny house.
A particle of meat he slyly stole,
Then swiftly sped him back into his hole.
Yet, spite of all his care, the wolf awoke,
And into cries and lamentations broke:
"Halloo, there! Murder! Robbery! Will none
Fetch the police? I'm ruined and undone.
Confound these miscreant tricks! Oh, shame and grief,
That any four-legged thing should be a thief!"

SABBATH READING.

The Book.

Gallery of sacred pictures manifold,
A minster rich in holy effigies,
And bearing on entablature and frieze
The hieroglyphic oracles of old.
Along its transept aureoled martyrs sit:
And the low chancel side-lights half acquaint
The eye with shrines of prophet, bard and saint
Their golden tablets traced in holy writ!
But only when on form and word obscure
Falls from above the white supernal light
We read the mystic characters aright,
And light informs the silent portraiture,
Until we pause at last, awe-held, before
The one ineffable face, love, wonder, and adore.

A Positive Christianity.

I once had a conversation with an intelligent infidel, who stared me in the face while he asked me if I was positive that my Christianity was true; to which I replied that I had not a doubt, and that the evidence was fixed in my heart; to which he replied that it had always been a difficult thing for him to believe a doctrine that was a matter of so much uncertainty to so many who call themselves Christians. "Well," said he, "I am in the habit of asking Christians whether they have the assurance that the Lord is with them, and when they answer in the affirmative their faces betray them, and look as though they had been caught in the act of stealing. And, for my part, I never can be a Christian as long as I find such poor representatives of Christianity. Why, sir, it is the rarest thing that I can find a man that is positive; and, therefore, there must be something wrong. When a business man makes himself known to me as such, he does not say, 'I think I am a member of such and such a firm,' 'I hope I am thus and so.' I do not question his veracity, and rarely think it necessary to ask him for any papers to prove it, because he is positive about it; but the usual answer to my plain question is, 'I hope so,' 'I am trying to be,' 'I used to be,' or 'would like to be.' Suppose I was appointed Prime Minister to some foreign state, and my business was to represent the interests of the United States of America, would I leave any room in the mind of the Governor as to the genuineness of my mission? If the Bible is true, and you are the representatives of its blessings, why are you ashamed to own it?"

I was not just then prepared for such a sermon from this celebrated infidel. Although he did not seem to doubt my statement, yet he taught me a lesson I will not soon forget, and that lesson was the awful responsibility of professing Christians.—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

"All Things Are Now Ready."

From age to age the call is still the same. As one generation sweeps another off the stage—some heeding, some despising, some not even hearing the benignant invitation, it is still repeated: "All things are now ready." Yes, at whatever moment the poor, sin-sick, starved, exhausted sinner first begins to feel his want, and turns his dim and haggard eyes toward that scene of splendor and festivity, before unknown or madly disregarded—however untimely the appeal may seem—though the prayer be breathed at midnight, in the dark, from the beggar's hovel, the field of battle, or the dungeon, or the scaffold—the response is still the same: "Come, for all things are now ready." The resort to this supply can never be too early; it should never be too late. It can never be too early; for the soul is never without consciousness of want—a restless craving for enjoyments, better than the best it has experienced. It should never be too late—as it is, alas! too late for thousands—because all things are now ready; and when all things are now ready, and the opportunity afforded of securing them but transient, it is self-destruction to refuse acceptance—it is folly, it is madness even to postpone it.—J. A. Alexander

Religious Notions.

Notions about religion may grow up in people's heads as hair grows on them—without any feeling.

Much that we cannot ask of man, we are, O! so glad, if any wise and friendly man will offer.

Whosoever examines and enjoys a Scripture story feels that he is brought nearer to God thereby.

Whatever, innocently interesting the mind, fills the heart with pure affectionate feeling serves for edification.

Christ has both to make Himself desired as a guest, and to persuade those who already desire Him that He is most willing to come.

It is quite natural and very useful that there should be much homely and simple narrative in the Bible. This makes us feel that "salvation" comes to the house; and does not merely wait in the church till we go to it.

The Evangelic narratives domesticate the "Gospel" in our souls; the dignified truth becomes affable, yet remains dignified; and we love what we revere, because it is so familiar with us.—Rev. T. T. Lynch.

The Waste by Fires.

If there be any virtue in the old proverb, "Willful waste makes woful want," the citizens of these United States ought to heed the warning emphatically given them in the record of losses by fire. This record shows that over $353,000,000 worth of property—products of the brain and brawn and industry of our people—was wasted by fire during the last five years.

The losses by fire in the United States during 1879 exceed by many millions of dollars similar losses during 1878, '77, '76, and fall short by less than $400,000 of the losses recorded in 1875, notwithstanding that in the month of October of that year Virginia City, Nev., was visited by a conflagration that destroyed $6,000,000 worth of property.

The losses to insurance companies last year were in excess of those of any of the four previous years. These losses amounted in 1875 to $39,325,400; in 1876, to $34,374,500; in 1877, to $39,398,900; in 1878, to $36,575,900; and in 1879, to $44,464,700. The destruction of special hazards and the losses thereby to the insurance companies progressed in a similar proportion to this.

In Canada the losses for each year varied widely. In 1876 and 1877 the Dominion was visited by no less than five large conflagrations; while in 1878 and 1879 the largest aggregate losses for one month amounted to $1,257,300. Of course the losses to insurance companies for each year varied in a like proportion.

The number of fires has been gradually and surely increasing each year. In 1870, for instance, the number of fires, each of which caused a loss of $100 and upward, was 9,391. Last year the number of similar fires reached 12,849, or an average of about one fire in every forty minutes.

There is not a shadow of doubt that a large proportion of these fires might have been prevented. Poorly constructed buildings, carelessness on the part of occupants, and incendiarism are the principal causes of fire. Were these causes remedied or removed, fires would be "few and far between."—Insurance Chronicle.

Alexandria and Gen. Washington.

The pilgrim who leaves the nation's capital to visit the grave of Washington arrives, midway to Mount Vernon, at the quiet town of Alexandria. There he may find, if he will but blow aside the dust of a century, foot-prints of the Father of his Country that tell of his ways as he moved round about his home. Elsewhere the great chief is on horseback, or sits high in some chair of state, lofty and removed from common men; but in Alexandria he is dismounted and afoot—a townsman and a neighbor.

The town and Washington came together into active life; for it was just as he grew from childhood into youth, at his brother's home, Mount Vernon, that the neighboring hamlet of Belhaven grew into the town of Alexandria. Belhaven was a tobacco warehouse and some log-huts on the southern part of a patent owned by the great-grandchildren of one John Alexander, who in 1669 paid 6,000 pounds of tobacco for nine miles of river-shore nearly opposite what is now the District of Columbia. Just after this purchase, Washington's great-grandfather had led from the settled lands near the mouth of the Potomac a troop of militia to punish the Dogne Indians for the murder of Robert Hen, a herdsman, near what is now Mount Vernon. He became enraptured with these magnificent hills, and soon included them in a patent of 7,000 acres. Over sixty years afterward this tract descended to Lawrence Washington, George's elder brother, who married a daughter of Col. William Fairfax, of Belvoir, the County Lieutenant, and became neighbor to his father-in-law by settling at Mount Vernon. Hither came young George Washington, fresh from school. Having failed to be a midshipman, he was becoming a land surveyor—a profession not so opposite as might seem; for in mathematical methods the pursuits are identical, and the survey of a wild country is, in peril and adventure, not unlike a voyage at sea. Into Belhaven young George Washington rode every day. Tradition says that he came ten times during one week, each time upon a different horse, every one an animal that would have delighted Gen. Grant. In those days the fine rider of a fine horse readily won his way to the popular heart. The lad had borrowed in turn all the best horses of the country-side, and he managed each with such skill and grace that thereafter his future was made in the village.

The family circle at Belvoir and Mount Vernon included, besides the visitor, Lord Fairfax, Baron of Cameron, Col. William Fairfax, his son George William Fairfax, his sons-in-law Lawrence Washington and John Carlyle, and William Ramsey, a cousin of the Washingtons. These gentlemen united with the Alexanders, who owned the Belhaven land, and some village traders, and established a town at Belhaven warehouse, designed as a practical matter to make money, and as a matter of taste to honor at the same time the royal family of England and the Fairfax family of America. The new town took shape with its streets at right angles. One center street, Cameron, flanked south by King, Prince and Duke streets, and north by Queen, Princess and Duchess streets, and these streets crossed by another center street, Fairfax, flanked by Royal street on one side and the river on the other. Anxious as the young surveyor, George Washington, was to perfect himself in his art, it is impossible to believe that this plan was made by his relatives and friends without his familiarity.

The lots of the new town were sold on the 13th of July, 1749. Among the purchasers were Lawrence Washington, John Carlyle, Adam Stephen, afterward a subaltern under Braddock, and one of Washington's Generals in the Revolutionary army, and John Champe, father of Sergt. Maj. Champe, of Lee's legion, who feigned desertion in the hope of capturing the traitor Arnold. The bids were made in Spanish pistoles. The lots, one-quarter acre each, sold at from $15 to $250 each. Young Washington had no money to spare to buy town lots; but he owned some land opposite Fredericksburg, and was already earning a doubloon a day by surveying the wild lands of Lord Fairfax. Almost as soon as this survey was completed, he was commissioned Major in the Colonial militia, and appointed Adjutant of the frontier district, with headquarters at Alexandria. From this center he organized the militia of the frontier counties, selected drill-masters for the officers, attended and regulated musters, and, on this limited field, first developed that mastery of detail and talent for organization which, twenty-five years later, organized on Boston heights a crude militia into a Continental army. There lingers yet in the traditions of the town the dim figure of a tall, wiry, sunburned young man, always on horseback, of "bitter" wit, and yet of great popularity; not a personal magnetism that attracted individual men, but a dominating power that won men in mass by giving every one assurance of safety under his lead.—William F. Carne, in Harper's Magazine.

The folly of the existing system of Indian management, remarks the Newport (R. I.) News, "is seen on a small scale in the persistent keeping up of a separate nationality in Rhode Island, where we have a tribe of Narragansetts with not a single Narragansett Indian in it.

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

What We Pay for Tobacco.—A writer in Blackwood's Magazine computes the whole amount of tobacco grown on the face of the globe at not less than 4,000,000,000 pounds. The price paid for tobacco by consumers, including all varieties, must exceed 25 cents a pound. A curious estimate makes the expenditures consequent on tobacco-using, direct and indirect, in a single century, to equal all the property on the earth. If 50 cents a day be spent by each devotee, the 300,000,000 in the world would waste $3,000,000,000,000 in a single generation.

Alphabet of Gems.—A diamond dealer gives the following alphabet of gems, by the guide of which any English word can be spelled out on ring, bracelet or other article of jewelry, with a setting of stones:

A—Amethyst.
B—Beryl.
C—Cat's-Eye.
D—Diamond.
E—Emerald.
F—Feldspar.
G—Garnet.
H—Hyacinthe.
I—Idocrase.
J—Jasper.
K—Kyanite.
L—Lapis-lazuli.
M—Malachite.
N—Natrolite.
O—Opal or Onyx.
P—Porphyry.
Q—Quartz Agate.
R—Ruby.
S—Sapphire.
T—Turquoise.
U—Ultramarine.
V—Verd-Antique.
W—Water Sapphire.
X—Xanthite.
Z—Zircon.

Pitting in Small-pox.—Somebody has ascertained the curious facts, in small-pox, that poor people are pitted least, rich people are pitted most, and no class are pitted under their dress. Poor people have less light in their homes, the rich plenty of light, and under the dress there is, of course, less light than in either case. The explanation, according to this observer, is a scientific one. The sunlight consists of three primary colors. The red, the blue and the yellow rays have distinct and characteristic properties—the yellow gives light, the red heat, and the blue actinism. Now, the pus of variolar pustules absorbs, by its yellow medium, the actinic rays, which results in corrosion of the tender flesh at the base, thus leaving "pits."

Year.—The Egyptians, it is said, were the first who fixed the length of the year. The Roman year was introduced by Romulus, 738 B. C., and it was corrected by Numa, 713 B. C., and again by Julius Cæsar, 45 B. C., who fixed the solar year as being 365 days and six hours. This was denominated the Julian style, and prevailed generally throughout the Christian world till the time of Pope Gregory XIII. The calendar of Julius Cæsar was defective in this particular, that the solar year consisted of 365 day, 5 hours and 40 minutes, and not of 365 days, 6 hours. This difference at the time of Gregory XIII. had amounted to ten entire days. To obviate this error Gregory ordained in 1582 that that year should consist of 355 days only; and in 1751 it was ordered to be so used in England; and the next year eleven days were left out, the 3d of September, 1752, being reckoned as the 14th, so as to make it agree with the Gregory calendar.

Declivity of Rivers.—A very slight declivity suffices to give the running motion to water. Three inches per mile in a smooth, straight channel gives a velocity of about three miles an hour. The Ganges, which gathers the waters of the Himalaya mountains, the loftiest in the world, is, at 1,800 miles from its mouth, only about 800 feet above the level of the sea, and to fall these 800 feet in the long course the water requires more than a month. The great river Magdalena, in South America, running for 1,000 miles between two ridges of the Andes, falls only 500 feet in all that distance; above the commencement of the 1,000 miles it is seen descending in rapids and cataracts from the mountains. The gigantic Rio de la Plata has so gentle a descent to the ocean that, in Paraguay, 1,500 miles from its mouth, large ships are seen which have sailed against the current all the way by the force of the wind alone—that is to say, which, on the beautiful inclined plane of the stream, have been gradually lifted by the soft wind, and even against the current, to an elevation greater than that of our loftiest spires.

Origin of the Term "Uncle Sam."—Immediately after the last declaration of war with England, Elbert Anderson, of New York, then a contractor, visited Troy, on the Hudson, where was concentrated and where he purchased a large quantity of provisions—beef, pork, etc. The inspectors of these articles at that place were Messrs. Ebenezer and Samuel Wilson. The latter gentleman (invariably known as Uncle Sam) generally superintended in person a large number of workmen, who, on this occasion, were employed in hunting over the provisions purchased by the contractor for the army. The casks were marked "E. A.—U. S." This work fell to the lot of a facetious fellow in the employ of the Messrs. Wilson, who, on being asked by some of his fellow workmen the meaning of the mark (for the letters U. S. for United States were then almost entirely new to them) said he did not know, unless it meant Elbert Anderson and "Uncle Sam" Wilson. The joke took upon the workmen, and passed currently, and "Uncle Sam" himself being present was occasionally rallied by them on the increasing extent of his possessions. Many of these workmen being of a character denominated "food for powder," were found shortly after following the recruiting drum and pushing toward the frontier lines, for the double purpose of meeting the enemy and of eating the provisions they had lately labored to put in good order. Their old jokes accompanied them, and, before the first campaign ended, this identical one first appeared in print; it gained favor rapidly till it penetrated and was recognized in every part of the country, and will, no doubt, continue so while the United States remain a nation.

The Reporter.

A man falls from the scaffold. The reporter hastens to the spot and pushes his way to the man's side. "My life voyage is nearly ended," whispered the dying man, as he held the reporter's hand. "My soul, like an unfinished craft, is being swept from its earthly mooring and carried out into the great, pathless ocean of eternity. Oh, how unprepared I am for this journey! How my spirit shrinks from embarking on that silent, solemn sea! I have a wife and beautiful child who will mourn my absence; and now that I see no future, nothing but the dark, impenetrable shadow of death, which will soon hide me from earthly eyes, the world looks more beautiful, and I long—oh, how I long to stay. Good-by. Good—farewell. Pre—prepare for this—" "Courage! courage!" whispered the reporter, while tears as big as hickory-nuts chased each other down his nose; "but—business is business." "Courage!" he whispered; "how—how do you spell your name?"—Exchange.

INDIANA NEWS.

Greencastle is experiencing a temperance revival, fifty having joined the Blue Ribbon Club during the past week, and 180 since New Year.

The farmers of Northern Indiana have got their work in good shape, and, when the time comes for spring plowing, there will be nothing in the way.

New Albany had a terrific thunderstorm the other night. The entire heavens appeared to be one blaze of electric light, followed by terrifying claps of thunder.

The report of the State House Commissioners for the past quarter shows that the total expenses have been $182,577.37, of which $146,145.42 was on account of construction.

William Lasur has been arrested at Peru, charged with swindling the farmers of Miami and Howard counties by inducing them to sign their names to a report to the Agricultural Department, and leaving a space blank above their names which he would fill out as a promissory note. As far as known, he had not succeeded in selling any of the notes.

Constitutional Amendments.

Several important amendments to the constitution of Indiana have been agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two houses of the General Assemblies of 1877 and 1879, and by an act of the last General Assembly approved March 10, 1879, these said amendments are to be submitted to the electors of the State of Indiana for ratification or rejection, at an election to be held on the first Monday in April, 1880. The law providing for the submission of these amendments to the electors of the State enacts that "The Secretary of State shall procure ballots of blue paper on each of which shall be printed the word 'Yes' in one line, and in another line the word 'No;' that any qualified elector may vote for or against amendment by depositing one of said ballots in the ballot-box. If he intends to vote for any amendment he shall leave thereon the word 'Yes' and erase the word 'No' by drawing a line across it, or otherwise. If he intends to vote against any amendment, the word 'Yes' shall in like manner be stricken out, and the word 'No' left; and, if both words are allowed to remain without either of them being so erased, the vote shall not be counted either way." These amendments are designated by numbers, and are numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 9, numbers 7 and 8 having failed to receive the majority of the votes of both branches of the last General Assembly.

AMENDMENT NO. 1.

Amend section 2 of article 2 so as to read as follows:

Section 2. In all elections not otherwise provided for by this constitution, every male citizen of the United States of the age of 21 years and upward, who shall have resided in the State during the six months and in the township thirty days, and in the ward or precinct thirty days immediately preceding such election; and every male of foreign birth, of the age of 21 years and upward, who shall have resided in the United States one year, and shall have resided in the State during the six months and in the township sixty days, and in the ward or precinct thirty days, shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, conformably to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization, shall be entitled to vote in the township or precinct where he may reside, if he shall have been duly registered according to law.

As the constitution now stands no fixed period of residence is required in a township and ward before voting.

AMENDMENT NO. 2

Simply provides for striking out the words: "No negro or mulatto shall have the right of suffrage," contained in section 5 of the second article of the constitution. And thereby conforming the constitution of Indiana to the constitution of the United States.

AMENDMENT NO. 3.

To amend section 14 of the second article to read:

Section 14. The general elections shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, but township elections may be held at such time as may be provided by law. Provided, that the General Assembly may provide by law for the election of all Judges of courts of general and appellate jurisdiction by an election to be held for such officers only, at which time no other officer shall be voted for; and shall also provide for the registration of all persons entitled to vote.

AMENDMENT NO. 4

amends by striking out the word "white" from section 4 and 5 of article 4, conforming the same to the constitution of the United States.

AMENDMENT NO. 5.

amends the fourteenth clause of section 22 of article 4 to read as follows:

In relation to fees and salaries, except the laws may be so made as to grade the compensation of officers in proportion to the population and the necessary services required.

This provision will enable the General Assembly to grade the compensation of county officers and pay them in proportion to the population of the county and the services actually required.

AMENDMENT NO 6.

The following amendment is proposed, to-wit: Amend section 1 of the 7th article to read:

Section 1. The judicial power of the State shall be vested in a Supreme Court, Circuit Courts, and such other courts as the General Assembly may establish.

The words "such other courts" are substituted for the words "such inferior courts," enabling the Legislature to establish other courts not inferior in jurisdiction to the Circuit Court.

AMENDMENT NO. 9.

No political or municipal corporation in this State shall ever become indebted, in any manner, or for any purpose, to an amount in the aggregate exceeding 2 per centum on the value of the taxable property within said corporation, to be ascertained by the last assessment for State and county taxes previous to the incurring of such indebtedness, and all bonds or obligations in excess of such amount given by such corporations shall be void; provided that in time of war, foreign invasion, or other great public calamity, on petition of a majority of the property owners, in number and value, within the limits of such corporation, the public authorities, in their discretion, may incur obligations necessary for the public protection and defense, to such an amount as may be required in such petition.

THAT REPUBLICAN TIDAL WAVE.

[From the New York World.]

It is well known to the readers—if not to the editors—of our esteemed Republican contemporaries that the elections of 1879 showed everywhere that the Democracy had vanished before the Republican party as beard before the razor, and that the Republicans were about to ride into power upon a tidal wave higher than any recorded in books of travel. Any doubts that may have existed on this subject must have been triumphantly resolved by the discovery that the Republicans were so sure of carrying the pivotal State of New York that they intended to have its vote cast without putting the electors to the trouble of going through the motions of an election. It is not, however, until we examine the returns for the individual elections that the progress made by the Republican party all over the country bursts upon us in all its magnitude and majesty and makes the heart of Democracy sink down into the boots of despondency. For instance, there are the Congressional vacancies. In California the Republicans have elected three Congressmen—as they elected three at the preceding election; in Iowa a Republican has succeeded a Republican; in Missouri and Texas Democrats have replaced Democrats; in New York a Democrat has been chosen in a district that went Republican in 1878. Altogether, in the language of a famous French speech, "Nothing has been changed; there is only one Democrat the more!" Let us, if we are not sufficiently impressed by this showing of immense Republican gains, consider the popular vote in the various States that held elections last year. In 1876, when the Republican party's vote was at high-water mark, these States voted as follows:

PRESIDENT IN 1876.

	Total.	Republican.	P. ct. Rep.
California	155,777	79,269	50.90
Colorado*	27,470	14,154	51.52

Taking it by and large, as it were, it seems that the Republican tidal-wave of 1879 amounted to about 60,000 less than the Republican tidal-wave of 1876, which wasn't big enough. The Republican popular progress is singularly like the mill in the story, which ground with such rapidity that the owner ate the flour as fast as it was produced, and went on eating till he starved to death.

Two Opinions.

The statement was made at the beginning of the trouble in Maine that the Fusionists were only proceeding upon the basis of Supreme Court decisions, given on points submitted after previous elections by the leaders of the Republican party. The Augusta Standard has published an example of the way the machine worked in one instance and did not work in another the opinions being respectively given Dec. 22, 1877, and Jan. 3, 1880, as follows:

"OPINION," 1877.	"OPINION," 1880.
It is to be regretted that votes are lost by the negligence of town officers but the obvious remedy is to choose such as know their duty, and, knowing it, will perform it.	The representative is not to be deprived of his right because municipal officers have neglected their duty.
John Appleton, C. W. Walton, W. G. Barrows, John A. Peters, Artemus Libbey, J. G. Dickerson, Wm. Wirt Virgin.	John Appleton, C. W. Walton, W. G. Barrows, John A. Peters, Artemus Libbey, Jos. W. Symonds, Chas. Danforth.

If correctly stated, two conclusions are inevitable: First, that the Supreme Court knows more of partisan trickery than is necessary to the honest administration of justice; second, that the opponents to Republicanism have no show in the court of final resort.—Chicago News (Independent).

College Presidents and the Third Term.

Three college Presidents—Seelye, of Amherst; Chadbourne, of Williams, and Copen, of Tufts, write to the Springfield Republican against a third term. Mr. Seelye says he would regard the election of a President for a third term as a "national calamity;" Mr. Chadbourne says the "time has not come for the people to call for a 'strong man' in any other sense than one strong enough to do the bidding of the public." Mr. Copen says a third term would be a "menace to our free institutions" as well as a "fatal blunder" for the Republican party. Ex-Gov. Washburne, Col. T. W. Higginson, and ex-Congressman H. L. Pierce express sentiments on the subject equally hostile.—New York Tribune.

Big Fees.

Erskine, the leader of the English bar in his time, and one of the most brilliant lawyers Great Britain ever produced, never received a greater yearly income than $60,000 and more than £5,000 in any one case. Sir James Scarlet, afterwards Lord Abinger, a very successful lawyer, had an income certainly not to exceed Erskine's. The same is true of Garrows, another great English lawyer. Ballantyne received from the British Government a very large fee for going to Calcutta to try a murder case, but a large part of it was consumed in expenses.

America takes the lead in big lawyer fees, and it is only a dozen years or so that our lawyers have been so lucky. Pinckney, Webster, Choate or any of our great lawyers in times past never dreamed of such extravagant bills. The first great fee ever known in this country was received by Clarkson N. Potter, in the foreclosure of the Canandaigua railroad, not many years ago. It is stated that he received $100,000 in that case. It is reported that Charles O'Conor received $75,000 in the Jumel will case and $100,000 in the Parrish will case.—Troy Press.

STARVING IRELAND.

An Idea of the Extent of the Suffering in the Afflicted Isle.

[Dublin (Feb. 4) Telegram to New York Herald.]

The daily, hourly cry of distress in Ireland becomes more and more urgent and wide-spread. Every day reveals new horrors in the catalogue of suffering. The outlook for the coming months is gloomier than any prediction has yet painted. No language can describe the appalling privations, the utter destitution, which prevail; but a vivid picture can be found in the statement and figures below. They are unexaggerated and well authenticated. It is impossible to overdraw the situation, so rapidly do matters become worse. What might have been an exaggeration yesterday will to-morrow be an underestimate.

Three hundred thousand people are slowly starving, and can only be kept alive by superhuman efforts on the part of their fellow-creatures. Some of them are living on one meal a day of turnips or of meal. Thousands more are consuming their last potatoes. Local efforts are becoming feeble. People are looking to the world for succor. The land agitation has hidden its head for the moment, the land agitators lending a hand in the common cause. Parnell's attack upon the Mansion House and the Duchess of Marlborough funds is a crime, the responsibility of which no man should take upon himself at this time.

The confusion thus caused only blinds the eyes of America to the present awful necessities of the Irish peasantry. If Parnell be a true Irish patriot he will sink animosities, which every one deprecates, even his friends and sympathizers, and will become the champion in America of that cause in which all the world is one—the cause of charity.

The following figures are compiled from the official returns of the local committees to the central bodies organized for the distribution of relief in Dublin as well as from private inquiries made by your correspondent. They are vouched for by Protestant and Catholic clergy, gentry, and public officials. Further returns are arriving daily in overwhelming numbers. The returns by counties where the chief distress exists show the numbers of those suffering to be as follows:

Mayo	64,509	Tipperary	6,300
Galway	43,263	Leitrim	5,800
Sligo	42,930	Wicklow	3,600
Kerry	33,100	Monaghan	3,300
Donegal	28,000	Westmeath	1,800
Roscommon	26,150	Longford	1,878
Cork	23,798	Kilkenny	1,790
Clare	19,300
Limerick	7,000	Total	312,379

Accompanying this report is printed a tabulated statement covering a page, and containing an analysis of the actual condition of 250,000 of the persons represented in the summary.

The Molva, a financial, commercial and literary paper published at St. Petersburg, has been virtually stopped by being prohibited from receiving advertisements. The Molva is the only Russian newspaper which has consistently advocated retrenchment, a reduction of army expenditures, and a pacific policy throughout, particularly toward England.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES!

IMMENSE STOCK OF GOODS FOR 1880.

No Advance on Teas, Coffees, Syrups, Sugars or Tobaccos.

All of these goods, in consequence of the increased demand, have advanced in the east, but we were fortunate in laying in a full supply when the prices were way down and our customers shall have the benefit of our purchases at old prices.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS!

The consumption of TEAS the last six months has been double to what it has been since the panic; this, coupled with the short tea crop, created a great speculation in them, so much so that some grades have advanced 20 to 30 cents per pound, but our method of purchasing is direct of the importers, thereby saving the profits of the speculator and jobber, and enables us to still continue to sell to our customers at the same low prices as last year.

Butler Township.

—John Coil, of Cedar Creek, is visiting friends in Adams county.

—J. W. Ammon started Monday for a visit at his old home in Champaign county, Ohio.

—Rev. Bear is holding a revival among "Christ's little ones" at Cedar Creek. May success crown his efforts.

—Since the attempted robbery of Sol. Barney, our worthy squire, John Harvey, has procured his second revolver. Just ask how much it cost him.

—We this week record the death of two of our oldest citizens, Levi Houser and John Ero, aged, respectively, 70 and 75 years. P. T.

Newville.

—We are having pleasant weather once more and are correspondingly pleasanter.

—Wm. Meeks set fire to his house Sunday night, on account of some difficulty with his wife, and the children were taken in charge by neighbors. Meeks is crazy and has fled.

—On account of the horrible condition of the roads, business has been exceedingly dull for some time past; but things are brightening up considerably now, and we hope to see activity.

—As we are on the eve of a very important election, when everybody should be posted, now is the time to subscribe for the COURIER. Pitch in, every subscriber, and try and get at least one more; I will bind myself to do this much, at least, and hope to be rewarded by seeing our paper improved and well sustained. ALPHA.

St Joe.

—S. S. Barr, who has been the agent here for the B. & O. railroad for the past year, vacates his position this week. He has made hosts of friends who will be loth to part with him.

—The family of G. W. Woodcox, some of whom have been sick for the last two months with typhoid fever, are slowly recovering.

—Moving time has commenced with some of our people. A. Hall now occupies the property of James Rickets, Wm. Van Zile, of Spencerville, will soon move into the house Al. vacated, and L. S. Saylor occupies a part of the house known as the Rhodabeck property.

—Dr. Mitchell has been cooking his own grub and washing the dishes for the past week, his better half being away on a visit. The doctor says that bachelor's hall has no charms for him.

—Mort. Olds and Dr. Mitchell took in Toledo, Ohio, Friday. The latter went to buy drugs, while the former purchased some dry-goods, groceries, bologna sausage and other refreshments.

—J. D. Leighty visited the lumber regions of Michigan last week, and we understand that it is his intention to start a lumber-yard at St. Joe in the spring—one that will compete with anything in the county. Whatever Jake undertakes is bound to be a success, as he recognizes no such word as fail.

—The ladies of the west end of town are having lively times with the saloon located in that vicinity, rolling whisky-barrels in the mud, breaking windows, smashing beer-glasses and other furniture, being the order of the day.

—Some of the boys in the neighborhood of King's Corners, while returning from church a few evenings since, thought it would be fun to mutilate the fence in front of Cotrell's nursery; the did so, and the fun costs them $2.60 each. It served them right, and we would publish their names only for their connection with respectable people.

In Memoriam.

At a special meeting of Forrest Lodge No. 299, F. A. & A. M., of Butler, Indiana, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted in memory of Brother James J. Rank, who departed this life Jan. 28, 1880;

Resolved, That while we bow with humble submission to the will of our Supreme Grand Master, we cannot but feel that in the death of our worthy brother this lodge has lost a faithful and efficient member, his companion a warm and affectionate husband, his children a kind and indulgent father, and the community at large a benevolent, true and honest citizen.

Resolved, That we will always hold the memory of our departed brother in high esteem; that we will try to emulate his many virtues, and that we will individually look forward with hope to that day in the future when we will all be re-united in the Grand Lodge on high, which will be called by the Supreme Architect of the universe, never to be again closed.

Resolved, That we will drape our lodge-room in mourning for thirty days, and that these resolutions be spread upon the records of the lodge, and that a copy be presented to the family of our deceased brother; and also that they be published in the Butler Record, DeKalb County Republican and the Auburn COURIER.

S. W. OTIS, Secretary.

Examinations.

Examinations for the year commencing June 1st, 1879, will be held regularly, at Auburn, the last Saturday of each month; at Waterloo, the first and at Butler the second Saturday of every spring and fall month. Special examinations at other points on due notice.

W. H. MACINTOSH,
Co. Sup't, of schools.

Special Announcmnt.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishishers of the STATE SENTINEL which enable us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the COURIER and WEEKLY SENTINEL one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "THE LAW OF THE FARM," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.

2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.

3rd What the deed of a farm includes.

4th The farmer's rights in the road.

5th As to farm fences.

6th As to estray and trespassing animals.

7th The farmer's liabilities for his animals.

8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.

9th Of water rights and drainage.

10th Of trespassing on the farm.

11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The INDIANA WEEKLY STATE SENTINEL is an eight-page paper, (the same as the COURIER) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the COURIER subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

Thanatopsis.

To him who in the love of Nature holds
Communion with her visible forms, she speaks
A various language; for his gayer hours
She has a voice of gladness, and a smile
And eloquence of beauty, and she glides
Into his darker musings with a mild
And healing sympathy that steals away
Their sharpness, ere he is aware. When thoughts
Of the last bitter hour come like a blight
Over thy spirit, and sad images
Of the stern agony, and shroud, and pall,
And breathless darkness, and the narrow house,
Make thee to shudder, and grow sick at heart—
Go forth, under the open sky, and list
To Nature's teachings, while from all around—
Earth and her waters, and the depths of air—
Comes a still voice—yet a few days, and thee
The all-beholding sun shall see no more
In all his course; nor yet in the cold ground
Where thy pale form was laid, with many tears,
Nor in the embrace of ocean, shall exist
Thy image. Earth, that nourished thee, shall claim
Thy growth, to be resolved to earth again,
And lost each human trace, surrendering up
Thine individual being, shalt thou go
To mix forever with the elements,
To be a brother to the insensible rock
And to the sluggish clod, which the rude swain
Turns with his share and treads upon. The oak
Shall send his roots abroad and pierce thy mold,
Yet not to thine eternal resting-place
Shalt thou retire alone, nor couldst thou wish
Couch more magnificent. Thou shalt lie down
With patriarchs of the infant world—with kings,
The powerful of the earth—the wise, the good,
Fair forms, and hoary seers of ages past,
All in one mighty sepulcher. The hills,
Rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun—the vales
Stretching in pensive quietness between;
The venerable woods—rivers that move
In majesty, and the complaining brooks
That make the meadows green, and poured round all,
Old ocean's gray and melancholy waste—
Are but the solemn decorations all
Of the great tomb of man. The golden sun,
The planets, all the infinite host of heaven,
Are shining on the sad abodes of death
Through the still lapse of ages. All that tread
The globe are but a handful to the tribes
That slumber in its bosom. Take the wings
Of morning, traverse Barcan's desert sands,
Or lose thyself in the continuous woods
Where rolls the Oregon, and hears no sound,
Save his own dashings—yet—the dead are there;
And millions in those solitudes, since first
The flight of years began, have laid them down
In their last sleep—the dead reign there alone.
So shalt thou rest, and what if thou withdraw
In silence from the living, and no friend
Take note of thy departure? All that breathe
Will share thy destiny. The gay will laugh
When thou art gone, the solemn brood of care
Plod on, and each one as before will chase
His favorite phantom; yet all these shall leave
Their mirth and their employments, and shall come
And make their bed with thee. As the long train
Of ages glide away, the sons of men,
The youth in life's green spring, and he who goes
In the full strength of years, matron and maid,
And the sweet babe, and the gray-headed man—
Shall one by one be gathered to thy side
By those who, in their turn, shall follow them.

So live that when thy summons comes to join
That innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
About him and lies down to pleasant dreams.

[William Cullen Bryant.

A Cosy Home.

[Daily News.]

It was a real cosy picture to look upon. The wife sat by the table sewing while her husband was reading a copy of the News beside her. The baby lay asleep in its pretty cradle and the old family cat lay behind the base burner. There was a cheerful glow in that warm, cosy room and every thing denoted comfort.

"We ought to be very thankful," said the husband as he laid the paper down, "for having such a comfortable home and such a pleasant household."

"Yes, indeed," replied the wife, whose face was beaming with tenderness and love.

"I pity our neighbors, Brown and his wife," said the husband, "they're always quarreling and wrangling about something. It must be very unpleasant over there. Why can't folks live pleasantly together?" and he picked the paper up and resumed his reading. The cat purred, and the baby laughed in its sleep.

"I was reading Tennyson's Miles Standish to-day," exclaimed the wife, "and I find it very interesting."

"Miles Standish! Tennyson! Tennyson didn't write Miles Standish. It was written by Dickens."

"Oh, yes he did love, I remember—"

"No Dickens wrote it."

"My love Tennyson wrote it. Don't you remember—"

"No, I don't remember anything, only that Dickens wrote Miles Standish."

"You're mistaken, George, Ten—"

"Well, Mary, I know better, Dick—"

"Well, George, I know better. Don't I—"

"I don't think you know anything about it."

"Neither do you."

"I know more about it than you do."

"You don't, you're real unkind."

"Well, you musn't dispute me. Dick—"

"Dickens didn't write it. Ten—"

"Don't make a fool of yourself, Mary."

"You're a wretch, and I wont be called a fool by you, either."

And then the fun commenced. The husband went over backward against the wall, the cat scooted out from under the stove and took refuge on the what-not; the baby awoke and commenced yelling at the top of his voice, and when Brown came in to see what time it was, the wife stood over the prostrate form of her husband with a boot-jack in her hand.

"What's the matter?" asked Brown.

"Oh, nothing," said the wife. "George said I was making a fool of myself, and there he lays." And Brown went in and told his wife about the fuss.

◆

A Romance of Illinois.

[Chicago Tribune.]

It was night.

And such a night!

The wind came in savage gusts from its lurking places on the broad prairies that stretched away to the westward, and howled in mournful cadence the requiem of the dying year.

Yes, the old year was dying. It would soon be deader than a smelt, and the demise of that young fish means business.

A young man with flashing eyes and clearcut lips, around which hovered the remnant's of a cold, cruel smile, nervously strode across the floor of a richly-furnished room in one of Chicago's most elegant mansions. For more than an hour he paced the apartment, never once striking a trot. This showed that he was a natural pacer. In his right hand he held a tiny piece of paper, which fluttered in the breeze created by the clip he was going. That piece of paper was from Penelope McGuire, a proud and haughty beauty, the only daughter of a man whose demesne was one of the most extensive on Aberdeen street.

Perhaps she had been giving the young man the breeze in which the note fluttered

But, apparently, she hadn't.

No, no. The missive told him of her undying love, and how his image was never absent from her maiden fancy. This looked as if you could bet on the girl; but who can tell the workings of a woman's heart?

This is what bothered the young man and had set him to pacing. He had wooed the maid with all the ardent nature of his soul—and innumerable boxes of candy.

Was this saccharine margin to be swept away by a sudden decline of her love for him?

Not if he know it.

"'Twas but yesterday e'en," he said, "that I saw her boarding a car as the clocks were striking 8, and yet the false creature thinks to explain away her action by saying she was going to see a sick friend. She little knows that I saw her bangs, and know full well that no woman wears them unless she is going where she can be seen. But she shall trifle with me no longer; I will scorn her proffered love"—and he seated himself at an inlaid ebony writing desk.

The next day's mail bore to Penelope the following missive:

"Nobuddy can pla [illegible] Awa [illegible] and practis your wiles on anuther.

GEORGE."

"Do we need compulsory education?" ask our public men.

Well, I should remark.

Commercial Law—Brief Digest of late Decisions.

A BILL OF EXCHANGE.

A writing as follows: "D. & Co., bankers; pay to the order of—, on sight, $200 in current funds, E. L." is not a check, because no payee is indicated by it, and no action on it can be maintained against the drawer on its non-payment.—McIntosh vs. Lytle, supreme court of Minnesota.

BOUNDARY.

A party having the means of knowledge, if not actual knowledge, of the boundary of his lot, who has helped to lay off the lot of the adjoining proprietor, and has stipulated for the use of a wall about to be erected, and flues therein, and has actually used them is thereby estopped from asserting that the building is over his line.—Vanderman vs. Colberg, supreme court of Tennessee.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

A chattel mortgage upon a stock of goods in a store to secure a debt, contained this clause: "Said stock to be kept up to the present value until above-mentioned debt is satisfactorily paid." Held that an objection taken that the mortgage did not cover goods put in to keep up the stock was of no force, as it expressly covenants and contemplates the keeping up of the stock.—Cadway vs. Fray, supreme court of Michigan.

COLLATERAL SECURITY.

A creditor who takes a negotiable note before maturity, so indorsed that he becomes a party to the instrument as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, in consideration of an extension of time to the debtor, actually granted, is, according to the "law merchant," a holder for value, and his acts as such are not effected by equities between antecedent parties of which he has no choice.—Oates vs. First National bank, supreme court of the United States.

CONTRACTS OF SALE.

The agent of an intending purchaser of property having made an offer for it, received in reply a letter from the vendor's agent accepting the offer, and fixing a time for signing the contract. The purchaser's agent not having attended within the time named, the vendor refused to complete the transaction. Held, that the contract was complete, for that the naming of a time for signing a formal contract did not constitute a condition of the acceptance.—Branson vs. Stannard, reported in London Law Times.

A reporter of the Fort Wayne News has been interviewing the democrats of that city with a view of ascertaining who was their first choice for governor, and according to the News reporter Judge Lowry stands at the head of the list. The following is the result of the interview: For Judge Lowry 31; Jos. E. McDonald, 18; W. H. English, 4; Frank Landers, 22; Isaac P. Grey, 23.—Ligonier Banner.

A Rabelais club has been started in London, in answer to the kind of persecution to which his works have been recently subjected. It is intended to have affiliated clubs in Paris, Boston, and other intellectual centers, and the fact that Messrs. Bret Harte, Leland ("Hans Breitman"), and Henry James, Jr., are members, will render such an extension easy. Many of the best known English poets, novelists and essayists are enrolled, and it is proposed to add to their number by a process of invitation, instead of the usual form of candidature. It device is "Sursum Corda."

IMPORTANT TO SCHOOL OFFICERS AND TEACHERS.

Opinion of State Superintendent Smart.

QUESTION—If a teacher's license expire after the commencement of his school, within the term for which he was employed, how long can he teach without procuring another license?

ANSWER—1. Section 34 of the school law reads in part as follows: "Said superintendent shall license said applicant for the term of six, twelve, eighteen or twenty four months, according to the ratio of correctness and other evidences of qualification given upon said examination." The law thus places a limit upon the time for which a person may be licensed. The reasons for this limitation are very obvious. The law-makers saw that the standard of excellence required of [illegible] would be continually raised, and hence that a teacher well qualified at one period of the development of the schools might not be so at a subsequent period. They saw, also, that teachers, especially those able to obtain the lower grades only, needed the stimulus of a re-examination to induce them to take steps for their self-improvement. Thus the law of re-examination is fully established, and for a very wise purpose. To permit young and comparatively inexperienced persons to teach in the public schools under a perpetual license would be fatal to the interests of education.

2. Section 28 of the school law reads in part as follows: "Trustees shall employ no person to teach in any of the common schools of the state, unless such person shall have a license to teach, issued from the proper state or county authority, and in full force at the date of the employment; and any teacher who shall commence teaching any such school without a license, shall forfeit all claim to compensation out of the school revenue for tuition, for the time he or she teaches without such license." So strictly is the law of re-examination to be regarded, that trustees are by these provisions prohibited from employing a teacher who does not hold at date of employment an unexpired license. The applicant may have received a half dozen licenses, each for two years, but if the one last granted, expires but one day even before that on which the trustee wishes to make the contract, the contract cannot be legally made. The trustee may have employed the applicant to teach during a former term the particular school for which the contract is about to be made, and may know the applicant to be well qualified, yet he cannot make a legal contract until a new license is obtained. The trustee cannot make a contract upon condition that the applicant will obtain a license before commencing the school. The teacher is bound by conditions no less stringent. He forfeits all right to compensation if he begins to teach without possessing a valid license. The purpose of these stringent provisions are very obvious. It is to keep unlicensed, and hence, in a legal sense, unqualified persons from teaching in the schools of the state. The fact that persons have at one period been qualified is no evidence whatever, in the eyes of the law, that they are qualified at a subsequent period, and no trustee and no teacher has a right to act on any such presumption. The law does not permit a county superintendent who has licensed a person twelve times for twelve successive years to act upon such a presumption and grant a thirteenth license without a thorough examination.

3. Section 28 further says: "And if a teacher's license shall expire by its own limitation within a term of employment, such expiration shall not have the effect to stop the school, or stop the teacher's pay." This provision should certainly be construed so as to make it, as far as possible, harmonize with the spirit of the law as laid down in paragraphs one and two of this answer. The purpose of it is not to afford the teacher any exemption from the operations of these general principles. There is no good reason why such an exemption should be made. The purpose of it is to provide a means whereby the school children may be protected from unnecessary interruption in their school work. It was the evident intention of the framers of this provision of the law that, when a teacher's license expired within a term of service, the school should not, by such expiration, be interrupted, but that a reasonable time should be allowed to the teacher to obtain a new license, or to the trustee to obtain another teacher properly licensed. A strict examination of the language of the law quoted in this paragraph shows that it gives the teacher no authority to teach until the end of the term for which he was employed.

THE NEW STYLE

$25 FAMILY SEWING MACHINE.

THE USUAL $65 MACHINE REDUCED TO 25.

$1.50 per Week Made Easy.

Horse and Wagon Free to Agents.

The CHEAPEST and BEST in the World.

Too Long in Use to Doubt its Superior MERITS

No Money to Pay until Machine is Delivered to you and Examined.

It makes the shuttle, double-thread, lock-stitch, (the same on both sides of the work), which received the highest reward at the Centennial exhibition, Philadelphia, Pa., 1876. And is complete with a larger assortment of attachments for fine work than any other machine, and reduced to only $25.

It is an easy and pleasant machine to operate, requires the least care, produces every variety of work, and will last until the next century begins. Strong, simple, rapid and efficient.

Use it once and you will use no other. The money cheerfully refunded if it will not outwork and outlast any machine at double the price.

Agents sell them faster than any other in consequence of their being the "best at the lowest price."

Each machine thoroughly warranted with written guarantee for five years. Kept in order free of charge; money refunded at once if not satisfactory.

It is the most solid, reliable, and satisfactory machine ever invented for all kinds of family work. It is an acknowleged unequivocal mechanical success, thoroughly tested and used in thousands of homes. An efficient, silent, rapid, reliable and ever ready helper to the weary wife or seamstress, it will do the work of a family for a lifetime, or it will earn from $4 to $5 per day for any one who wishes to sew for a living. This machine costs less than half the price of any new machine of like quality. Has extra long, large-sized shuttle, easily removed. Extra large-sized bobbins, holding 100 yards of thread, doing away with the frequent rewinding of bobbins. It is built for strength and constant hard work. Interchangeable working parts, manufactured of fine polished steel. Will run for years without repairs; is simple to learn, easy to manage, understood perfectly in an hour, and always ready in a moment to do every description of heavy or fine work, at less cost or trouble than any other machine at any price ever did or can do. It will sew anything a needle can pierce, from lace or cambric to heavy cloth or harness, with any kind of thread, and will run off twenty yards per minute; it uses strong, straight needles, and never breaks them. It cannot miss or drop a stitch, ravel or break the thread. If you have any other machine buy this and have a better one. The ease and rapidity of its motion and quality of its work, are its best recommendations. It will hem, fell, tuck, braid, cord, bind, gather, quilt, ruffle, pleat, fold, scallop, shirr, roll, baste, embroider, run up braids, etc., with elegance, ease and quickness, unsurpassed by any machine ever invented.

BEWARE OF IMPOSITION.

The price for our new machines are less than those asked by dealers in second-hand, rebuilt and refinished machines, or those selling out old stock to close up business, many such inferior and old style machines being offered as new at reduced prices; beware of imposition and only buy new machines. There are no new first-class machines offered as low as the "FAMILY," by many dollars.

Machines Sent for Examination Before Payment of Bill.

Pause, Ponder and Pruse!

The invention of that Superior and Complete Sewing Machine (The Family Sewing Machine), marks one of the most important eras in the history of machinery and when we consider its great usefulness and extremely low price ($25), it is very difficult to conceive of any invention for domestic use of more or even equal importance to families. It has great capacity for work; beautiful, smooth, and quiet movement, rapid execution, certainty and delightful ease of operation, that at once commends it above all others. The working parts are all steel, strong and durable, and will last a life time; the bobbins hold 100 yards of thread; the stitch is the firmest of all the stitches made, neat and regular, and can be regulated in a moment to sew stitches from an inch in length on coarse material down to the finest, so infintesimal as to be hardly discernable with the naked eye, and with a rapidity rendering it impossible to count them as fast as made; it has more attachments than any other, and it does to perfection all kinds of heavy, coarse, plain, fine, or fancy needle-work, with ease, and far less labor than required on other machines. It needs no commendation, the rapid sales, increasing demand and voluntary encomiums from the press, and the thousands of families who use them, amply testify to their undoubted worth as a standard and reliable household necessity, extending its popularity each day. Machines sent any where to be examined before any money is paid. Agents wanted by the Company. Address them for information. Family Sewing Machine Co., 153 Broadway, New York, New York. 43-1y.

TO MISS ID"A"-ALITY ON HER MARRIAGE.

BY LUCIUS C. WEST.

Dear child—sweet girl—no! woman now!
An awful, solemn, sacred vow
Thou'st taken in thy fair young years;
Not wantonly, nor yet with fears;
But, as a pure and crystal stream,
Rippling and gay, from which a gleam
Of heaven's bright smiling face we catch
'Mong flower-decked hills and woody thatch,
As on it flows, gurgling and free,
To meet its king, the mighty sea,
You have, fair ideal girl, with smiles
And kindly words and helpful wiles,
And tenderness and strengthening tears,
Quite drifted into woman's spheres;
Have plowed into another's life
His comfort, joy—ah! heaven, his wife!
Oh, may your blue orbs ever scan
The present manhood of the man—
His truth vouched for thee, through all life—
The highest honor given a wife.
Pray let your sweet lips ever speak
Kind words, your lover's heart to reach;
Then, as the warm sun melts the snow,
All rancor from your souls will go:
And, mark me, mark me, never miss
Unasked to give the parting kiss.
Oh may your heart, 'neath bosom white
Now thrilling with a new delight,
Deeply imbued with wisdom be
Through all the life God gives to thee.
Pray teach your fair hands e'er to do
What as a wife is meet for you:
With tender touch smooth from his brow
The cares of him who loves you now—
Your soft caress will feed the flame,
May bar dishonor from his name.
When have your feet forever trod
The wifehood's path marked out by God—
Through virtue, truth, and love's sweet bliss,
A heaven on earth you will not miss.
Then deep a chamber in his heart,
Your friend and bard will set apart,
Where, mingling with his songs, will reign
The memory of an ideal twain!

KALAMAZOO, Mich.

HILDA'S RIVAL.

"Then you will not help her?" said Geoffrey Brandon.

Hilda De Vere curled her beautiful [illegible]

Geoffrey Brandon eyed her narrowly, and there crept over his handsome face a look of admiration, which the girl was not slow to perceive, and the disdainful curve of her perfect lip rounded into a sunny smile, as she said:

"But why should we quarrel about her, Cousin Geoffrey? Suffering or not, she is as haughty in her low position as she was when she was the mistress of half a million, and I do not care to encounter her insolent pride again, even at your special request, my friend. No doubt some of her many admirers will assist her, so why should I trouble myself?"

Hilda De Vere loved the noble man before her with all the power she possessed of loving anything beyond herself; and, had she known how her last cruel words struck to his heart, she would have left them unuttered.

She saw she had made a mistake when he said, coldly:

"As you choose. I came to you with her story of distress, for I thought you had a tender heart, and I felt I had some claims on my cousin's generosity when I was pleading the cause of so old and tried a friend of hers as Christine Verne. I see my error, and will not detain you longer."

He bowed, and was about to withdraw, but Hilda, with a mighty effort, curbed her rising anger, and, hastening after him, laid one exquisite hand on his arm, and said, pleadingly, with lovely eyes misty with tears:

"You are angry with me, Geoffrey. What will become of me without your love and sympathy?"

Such a perfect picture as she made, with her blue velvet dress sweeping around her graceful form, and her beautiful face, like a grieved child's, raised to his.

She knew her power, and was not surprised at the softening expression in his eyes, as he answered:

"I am more grieved than angry, Hilda. You loved Christine Verne once, and were untiring in your offers of friendship when she had but slight need of them. Now, when she is in poverty and disgrace, through no fault of her own, and you have in your power to aid her, you refuse. Why will you not give her this position of governess for your little sisters, when you know how noble and worthy she is? Cousin Hilda, reconsider your decision, and for my sake give her the aid one true woman has the right to expect from another."

His handsome eyes wore a look of earnest pleading, which Hilda would have found it hard to resist, had her sympathy been asked for any other person than Christine Verne. But, as it was, a hard, determined look settled over her face, obliterating all its lines of soft beauty, as she listened to the thrill of tenderness in his voice.

She had humbled herself to him, and this was the result—to hear him plead, with all the eloquence he possessed, the cause of the one woman she hated, the one rival she feared, and in whose downfall she triumphed.

"If you force the truth from me, Geoffrey, here it is! I believe Christine Verne is as vile as her miserable uncle, whose name is now the talk of the town. I would no more have her in my house than I would the veriest vagabond in the street. If her story so moves you with compassion," and her red lip curled into a sneering smile, "why not go and offer her the consolation of your love, and the shelter of your home? No doubt she would gladly accept both, as she has so long been trying her arts to win you!"

"May God forgive you, Hilda, for your cruel, unjust words! Would that I were worthy of her love, or had a hope that she would listen to me. I would go to her this hour, and ask her to be my wife! Your heartless words against her have opened my eyes, and now I know she is the only woman I have ever loved. Good-by!"

And Hilda knew, as she heard him going down the steps, that her princely cousin was lost to her forever.

She clenched her dainty hands, and muttered, wrathfully:

"But he shall never marry her! I will take care that she does not cross his path again."

An hour later, when Christine Verne, in her humble abode, with her pure, proud face wearing a look of pitiful anguish, heard Hilda's soft, sympathetic voice breathing in her ear a plan of escape from her wretchedness and poverty, she said, with a glad ring in her sweet voice:

"How good you are, Hilda! How could I ever have doubted your love and sympathy? How did you manage to get this position for me, dear?"

And Hilda answered with apparent hesitation, her soft cheek crimsoned with loyal indignation:

"After hearing your sad story I first went to Cousin Geoffrey for counsel; for, you know," with another still lovlier blush, "we are engaged, and I thought perhaps he could find some position for you without delay, he has so many influential friends. But, do you know, dear—I hate to tell you, it was so horrid—Geoffrey actually declared that he doubted your honesty!"

Poor Christine drooped her proud head with a gasp, as of pain.

"Yes; was it not dreadful? After that, of course, I would have scorned his help, as I told him, on your behalf. But, fortunately, I knew of this Mrs. Harcourt, who wants a governess at once, to go abroad with her, so I went to her without delay, recommended you as you deserved, satisfied all her scruples, and you are to go to her this very evening, and the day after to-morrow you will sail for Italy."

The lovely, flower-like face, drooping beneath her words, as from a cruel blow, stirred no throb of pity in Hilda's false heart, though her voice assumed a more tender tone as she continued:

"So you must cheer up, dear, and look life bravely in the face again. Once away from this horrid city, with its thousand cruel tongues, you will forget your trouble, and, with your beauty and pride, you will win the heart of some rich foreigner or other. Good-by."

And the traitress stooped and kissed [illegible] aching heart, at the very hour when Geoffrey, his breast burning with tender love, was hastening toward her humble home, determined to put his fate to the test, and ask her to be his wife.

Urgent business had taken him from town immediately after his interview with Hilda, and she had time to mature her plan, and to see it accomplished, before his return.

His surprise and chagrin may be imagined when he found her gone, and all his inquiries could elicit no information about her.

At last, in despair, he resorted to Hilda.

"Do you know what has become of Miss Verne?"

She arched her brows.

"How should I, not having your interest in her welfare? Should I repeat what rumor says, I should almost fear you would slay me," and she shrugged her graceful shoulders provokingly.

"Tell me what you have heard," he said sternly, with compressed lips.

"Only that she and Signor Ruccini, her old music master, who was always such an ardent admirer of hers, in spite of pretty little Mistress Ruccini and the three babies, disappeared from the city on the same day, and some gentleman, who is nameless, saw two persons, bearing a striking resemblance to the runaways, walking, arm-in-arm, in a most confidential manner, in Brighton, yesterday morning."

"A foul, base slander! Who was the man who dared say this thing? He shall retract his false words, or die!"

Hilda laughed musically.

"I said he was nameless. As I have told you all I know on the subject, suppose we select a more pleasant theme of conversation. Did you have a pleasant trip to Manchester?"

And all of Geoffrey's inquiries could elicit no further information about the woman he loved. At last he fell into a settled gloom, and went abroad to seek relief in change and travel.

And Miss Verne, the governess, after the first strangeness of her position wore off, took up the burden of life again with a brave spirit. Her little charges soon learned to love her, and, being a true woman, her loving heart went out to them in deep tenderness, and she daily thanked Hilda De Vere's kindness in obtaining for her the position she occupied.

But there was one drop of wormwood which time seemed powerless to soften. That Geoffrey Brandon, the man to whom she had given her heart in those dear old days—whose look, tone and manner had so often told her she was beloved of him—should have turned against her in her sore distress and trouble, should even have doubted her honesty, was a blow hard to bear.

Doubtless, ere this, dear Hilda was his wife, and even the pain of his cruel treachery grew less sharp as the months rolled away in beautiful Italy, and she was permitted to bask in the glory of that wonderful land.

Until, one day, in a picture gallery in Rome, she met him face to face.

She tried to escape him, but his eager gaze had fastened upon her lovely features in a very rapture of delighted surprise, and, unmindful of the two children by her side, he caught her hands and asked, in that thrilling tone she so well remembered:

"Miss Verne! Christine! How happy I am to find you! Where have you hidden yourself all these weary months?"

He would have drawn her arm through his, but she drew herself haughtily away, and answered, icily:

"Thank you, Mr. Brandon. I have purposely kept my residence a mystery from one whose doubts of my integrity convinced me that he could have no possible interest in my welfare. Good-by!"

She turned away, but he caught her hand.

"Christine, what does this mean? Do you not know that I love you better than life? Did you not read the truth in the old sweet time, when nothing but the fear of my own unworthiness kept the avowal from my lips? Dearest, dearest, do not turn away! Mine, at least has been the one loyal heart. Surely such love as mine deserves a better response than scorn!"

And, in spite of the two curious children, and the stray visitors that flitted through the gallery, the truth came out at last, and Geoffrey learned the perfidy of Hilda De Vere's heart, and Geoffrey Brandon blessed the mistake that gave him his bride at last.

Hilda never met her beautiful rival again, for she married a rich old banker, and went to Bristol to live, before Christine crossed the channel once more as the honored wife of the man they both loved.

Woman's Nerve.

A tall lady with a saturnine countenance went into the Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle office and demanded of one of the reporters if Virginia offered a good field for a series of a dozen lectures on woman suffrage.

"I don't think the Comstockers have thought much about female suffrage," replied the reporter frankly.

"Don't say female," said the tall lady sharply.

"Why not?" asked the reporter, in innocent surprise.

"Because, sir, a term that is used to describe sex in animals should not be applied to women."

The reporter admitted, in great humiliation, that the point was well taken, and looked up in some alarm at the severe countenance of the lady, who was a head taller than himself and manifestly able to thrash him in the interest of progress, if so disposed. The stern countenance softened somewhat at the signs of confessed inferiority, however, and the lady continued:

"The cause of woman is the cause of humanity. The cause of humanity embraces all progress. Why, then, should the people of Virginia be indifferent to woman?"

"They're not!" cried the small reporter, hastily. "Far from it. Woman is the boss in this camp. Everything she [illegible] deep scorn. Playthings for an idle hour. You cover woman with silks and gauds and sink her soul into insignificance by circumscribing her sphere and allowing her no mission in life."

"Well," admitted the small reporter, "that's about the way we look at it up here, that's a fact. Women haven't got the nerve to rastle for themselves like men."

"Ner-r-r-ve!" She uttered this word in a terrific tone, so terrific that the small reporter half rose from his chair. "Nerve! What is there requiring nerve that you do that I am incapable of?"

"No offense, madam, no offense. I meant nothing personal, I assure you."

"Am I not stronger than you?" she demanded, scorning the apology. "Am I not gifted with as great a brain? Why do you despise my sex? We can bear more pain, and are, therefore, your superiors in courage."

The small reporter was gazing fixedly at dark corner of the room, and made no answer.

"Nerve, indeed!" continued the tall lady; "why, women have infinitely more nerve than men. Only yesterday I saw a woman—"

"That's the biggest rat I ever saw in the office," said the small reporter, staring intensely at the corner.

The screams that rent the air brought in all the printers and several citizens from the street. When they arrived the tall one was standing on a chair with one hand covering her eyes and the other convulsively clutching at her skirts as she gathered them close around her.

The small reporter wisely took advantage of the crowd to slip out, and he telegraphed from Gold Hill that he was going down to Carson to work up a big item.—Virginia City Chronicle.

Divers Among Dead Bodies.

When to the silence and loneliness of ocean or river depths are added the blackness of darkness and the dread presence of death, the diver must needs have courage who boldly descends. In the operations at the Tay bridge, the less experienced divers were by some suspected of succumbing to the terrors of the situation. If there were any human bodies there they were imprisoned in a double prison of carriage and cage-like girder. It was impossible for any diver quickly to clutch at the body, and, ere he had time to think of his ghastly work, to procure by signal the instant withdrawal of himself and solemn burden to the surface. The work involved patient and deliberate handling of the dead in the dark and silent deep, and few who suspected the divers of shrinking from this task felt brave enough themselves to blame them seriously for it. The suspicion, after all, had probably but small foundation; at least two of the divers strongly declared that no "eerie feeling" would prevent them doing their duty, and said that if necessary they would be glad to bring up the dead even in their arms. Still, the very way in which these men talk of this subject seems to show that below water they cannot face the dead with the callousness of men who are brought into contact with bodies on shore; that, in fact, they have to reason with themselves against a natural timidity. "My duty," said one diver at the Tay, "is to the living. When I go down to find the dead, I feel that I am going down to do what I can for the people they belong to, and that it is not the dead I have to be frightened of. I think of the friends to whom the bodies are to be restored, and nothing would give me greater pleasure than to give them their only satisfaction." If death and darkness do inspire timidity even in these hardy men, it is sometimes even more difficult for the diver to go among the dead in the light of day. "The horrible conceit of death and night" is matched by the reality, as seen, for example, by the divers at the Princess Alice, when they met the cold stare of the group of cabin passengers who had clung together in agony as the ship went down; or as experienced by certain divers who refused to recover wrecked treasure at the Faroe islands because they saw dead sailors in the rigging, and could not bear the sight.—London News.

WE have heard of some Indians out West who captured a lot of kerosene in a whisky-barrel, and drank some, thinking it was liquor, and when they discovered their mistake and sat down to smoke and think the matter over, the results were frightful. Now, Gath, it's your turn.

COMMON SAYINGS.

And Who First Said Them.

Many of our common sayings, so trite and pithy, are used without the least idea from whose mouth or pen they first originated. Probably the works of Shakspeare furnish us with more of these familiar maxims than any other writer, for to him we owe, "All is not gold that glitters," "Make a virtue of necessity," "Screw your courage to the sticking place" (not point), "They laugh that win," "This is the short and long of it," "Comparisons are odious," "As merry as the day is long," "A Daniel come to judgment," "Frailty, thy name is woman," and a host of others.

From the same we cull, "Make assurance doubly sure," "Christmas comes but once a year," "Count their chickens ere they are hatched," and "Look before you leap."

Washington Irving gives us "The almighty dollar," Thomas Morton queried long ago "What will Mrs. Grundy say?" while Goldsmith answers "Ask me no questions and I'll tell you no fibs." Charles C. Pinckney gives "Millions for defense, but not 1 cent for tribute." "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his fellow-citizens" (not countrymen), appeared in the resolutions presented to the House of Representatives in December, 1790, prepared by Gen. Henry Lee.

Thomas Tasser, a writer of the sixteenth century, gives us "It's an ill-will turns no good," "Better late than never," "Look [illegible] in But[illegible]

Dryden says: "None but the brave deserve the fair," "Men are but children of a larger growth," and "Through thick and thin." "No pent-up Utica contracts our power," declared Jonathan Sewell.

"When Greeks join Greeks then comes the tug of war," Nathaniel Lee 1692.

"Of two evils I have chosen the least," and "The end must justify the means," are from Matthew Pryor. We are indebted to Colley Cibber for the agreeable intelligence that "Richard is himself again." Johnson tells us in "A good hater of Mackintosh," in 1791, the phrase often attributed to John Randolph: "Wise and masterly inactivity."

"Variety's the very spice of life," and "Not much the worse of wear"—Cowper. "Men proposes, but God disposes"—Thomas a Kempis.

Christopher Marlow gave forth the invitation so often repeated by his brothers in a less public way: "Love me little, love me long." Edward Coke was of the opinion that "A man's house is his castle," To Milton we owe "The paradise of fools," "A wilderness of sweets," and "Moping melancholy and moonstruck madness."

Edward Young tells us "Death loves a shining mark," "A fool at 40 is a fool indeed," but, alas for his knowledge of human nature when he tells us "Man wants but little, nor that little long."

From Bacon comes "Knowledge is power," and Thomas Southerne reminds us that "Pity's akin to love." Dean Swift thought that "Bread is the staff of life." Campbell found that "Coming events cast their shadows before," and "'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view." "A thing of beauty is a joy forever," is from Keats. Franklin said, "God helps them who help themselves," and Lawrence Sterne comforts us with the thought, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb."

Even some of the "slang" phrases of the day have a legitimate origin. "Putting your foot in it" is certainly not a very elegant mode of expression, but, according to the Asiatic Researches, it is quite a fine point of law; when the title to land is disputed in Hindocstan, two holes are dug in the ground and used to incase a limb of each lawyer (?), and the one who tired first lost his client's case. Fancy, if you can, some of our famous "limbs of the law" pleading in such a manner! It is generally the client who "puts his foot in it."

When things are in disorder they are often said to be turned topsy-turvy; this expression is derived from the way in which turf used for fuel is placed to dry, the turf being turned downward; and the expression then means top-side turf-way.

Plutarch, in his life of Argesileus, King of Sparta, gives us the origin of a quaint and familiar expression.

On a certain occasion an Ambassador from Epirus, on a diplomatic mission, was shown by the King over his capital. The Ambassador knew of the monarch's fame—knew that though only nominally King of Sparta, he was yet ruler of Greece—and he had looked to see massive walls rearing aloft their embattled towers for the defense of the town; but he found nothing of the kind. He marveled much at this, and spoke of it to the King.

"Sire," he said, "I have visited most of the principal towns, and I find no walls reared for defense. How is this?"

"Indeed, Sir Ambassador," replied Argesileus, "thou canst not have looked carefully. Come with me to-morrow morning, and I will show you the walls of Sparta."

Accordingly on the following morning the King led his guest out upon the plains where his army was drawn up in full battle array, and, pointing proudly to the serried host, he said:

"There, thou beholdest the walls of Sparta—10,000 men, and every man a brick!"

Washington's Last Hours.

The certificate of Drs. Craik and Dick, the physicians who attended George Washington at the time of his death, has just been unearthed from a Georgetown newspaper of 1799. It does not appear in any of the biographies of Washington. The certificate concludes thus: "He was fully impressed at the beginning of his complaint, as well as through every succeeding stage of it, that its conclusion would be mortal; submitting to the several exertions made for his recovery rather as a duty than from any expectations of their efficacy. He considered the operations of death upon his system as coeval with the disease; and several hours before his decease, after repeated efforts to be understood, succeeded in expressing a desire that he might be permitted to die without interruption. During the short period of illness he economized his time in the arrangement of such few concerns as required his attention with the utmost serenity, and anticipated his approaching dissolution with every demonstration of that equanimity for which his whole life has been so uniformly and singularly conspicuous."

SIGNS AND PORTENTS.

When the crescent of the young moon sets supinely, its horns in the air, it is a sign of dry weather, because in this position it holds all the water, thus preventing its fall to the earth. This is also a sign of wet weather, the explanation in this case being that a waterful moon is emblematic of a water-soaked earth. Don't forget this sign of the new moon. It is rarely you will find one so impartially accommodating.

Whoever finds a four-leaved clover is generally a liar. It is so much easier to detach one leaf from a five-leaf stalk than to hunt for one with four that the temptation to mendacity is too much for average clay.

When a mouse gnaws a hole in a gown some misfortune may be apprehended. The misfortune has already happened to the gown, and may be apprehended to happen to the mouse.

An old sign is that a child grows proud if suffered to look into a mirror while less than 12 months old. But what the average infant can see in a [illegible] to make it proud is difficult for [illegible] its parents to understand.

[illegible] sky in the west at evening indicates that the next day will be pleasant, barring accidents of rain, snow and hail.

If you take down your shingle, preparatory to putting it up in a new location, it is a sign you are moving.

If a hen runs across the street directly in front of you, it is a sign that a hen will soon be on the other side. If she crosses over just behind you—pshaw! who ever knew a hen that wouldn't die in her tracks rather than cross one's pathway in his rear?

When you see a cat running around furiously, it is a sign that the crockery or glassware is in danger.

When you drop a knife and it sticks in the floor, it is a sign that some one is coming. If you are a small boy, that some one may be your mother, and her coming be to remonstrate with you with her slipper.

To dream of a wedding is a sign of inanition.

To dream of a funeral betokens too much pork and cabbage.

To dream of finding money betokens that it is easier to dream of finding money than to work for it.

To dream that it is Sunday morning is heaven.

To be suddenly awakened from your sweetest sleep to find that it is not Sunday is—that is to say, very disagreeable. It is a sign that you will be unhappy.

A great many more equally infallible signs might be given, but the reader has probably had enough for one day. The man who believes in signs is sufficiently credulous to believe that our knowledge in that line, as well as in every other line, is inexhaustible.

Over the Virginia Battle-Fields.

We sped, all too rapidly for me, through a deeply interesting country. We were traveling a hundred miles of most momentous history. From Washington we crossed the Long bridge into the State of Virginia, and ran down seven miles in a parallel course with the Potomac to the city of Alexandria. Thence to Quantico, where the train took the track of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac railroad, and entered a broken and desolate-looking region, famous to all time as "The Wilderness," which was the scene of some of the most terrible battles fought in 1863 and 1864. Twenty-one miles beyond Quantico we halted at the quaint-looking old town of Fredericksburg, on the south bank of the Rappahannock, and near which was fought a bloody engagement, in which the Federal General, Burnside, was defeated by the Confederate commander, Robert Lee. The graveyard of the gallant dead who fell in that strife is fully visible from the cars. Eleven miles west of Fredericksburg the battle of Chancellorsville was fought. There "Stonewall" Jackson was mortally wounded. He died at a little hamlet called "Guiney's," and his last words were: "Let us cross over the river and rest under the shade of the trees." Leaving Fredericksburg we came to Hanover Junction, where, in May, 1864, another doughty battle was fought between Gen. Grant and Gen. Lee. A very cock-pit, this country—a tilt-yard of heroes. The trees are very young and slim, and grass grows very richly hereabouts; but the land, they tell me, the desolate "Wilderness" always excepted, is beginning to smile again, and this last harvest-time was teeming with grain and tobacco. May it teem through unnumbered harvests! The old State of Virginia has surely seen enough of the dreadful realities of the war, and to spare.—Cor. London Telegraph.

Blunders.

Few attributes of character are more charming than the faculty of gracefully acknowledging one's errors. The man who makes a blunder and sticks to it is a person with whom argument or controversy becomes impossible. The trouble and time spent in attempting to convince him of the truth are completely wasted; for he will still believe that what he has advanced must be right, even in the face of actual demonstration that it is wrong. On the other hand, of the action of one who will admit with frank and ready courtesy that he has been mistaken, it may be said that it "blesseth him that gives and him that takes"—it covers his own retreat with gracefulness, and gives his adversary a pleasant memory of an encounter with a generous foe.

BY ANONYMA.

Oh, golden dream! that spans the skies,
Whose tender blue is like the eyes
That haunt my sacred memory,
Fade not away in boundless heaven,
Like closing gates of yon bright even
Before night's spell of glamoury.

Oh, fleeting bliss! that mocks our haste,
Like mirages in desert waste,
So passing fair in distant scene;
Approached unto the vision fades;
We stand within the realms of shades,
Before their sphynx of horrid mein.

Though withered is thy garland now,
Though death hath calmed thy tortured brow
And hushed the voice that sang rare glees,
I'm glad to know life's richest wine
We pledged each other—mine and thine—
Yet, thus, more bitter are the lees.

If you haven't got a white one, send me a black one." This same little girl was corrected by her mother the other day for being naughty. "Well, I can't help it," she said; "when you prayed for me why didn't you pray for a better child?"

Gold-Hunting.

Gold-hunting and gold-digging fascinate thousands of persons, because the element of chance, that which makes gambling attractive, enters into their results. An exchange publishes sundry facts about this mania which we commend to the young.

Despite the immense yield of gold in California, it is now shown that her tillable soil produces more actual wealth than her richest mines.

Her grain and her fruits exceed in value the best of her placers.

Most persons think of California as only a gold-bearing State, and it is pleasant to know that her agricultural resources are beyond those of her mines.

Agriculture is apt to pay better than gold or silver-seeking in any fertile, well-cultivated region; but there is a sort of fascination about the precious metals which allures men the world over, and blinds them to the more rational and legitimate branches of industry.

Even bridesmaids will soon be among the things that were. Every lady in every land will be interested to know that a striking innovation in the wedding ceremonial has been introduced in Paris, which will probably in this, as in other things, set the fashion to the polite world. Boys, beautiful as Raphael's cherubs, are substituted for bridesmaids. As they are dressed in red or blue velvet and satin, with silk stockings and gold shoe-buckles, they add to the dramatic effect of the ceremony.

SABBATH READING.

"God Knows."

[Some years ago a child's body was found on the coast of England, having been thrown there by the waves. The parish clerk, on being asked what should be put on its grave, answered in perplexity: "God knows." This proved a fitting epitaph.]

Where the tear-fed violet blooms,
Where the shade of the sunbeam chases;
Where in mossy marble tombs
Sleep the dead beneath the daisies;
Where the mourner slowly wanders
When the bird had sought its nest
And amid the gloaming ponders
Over those who tranquil rest;

Clouds across the crimsoned sky
Homeward gayly were careering;
But in that lone churchyard, I
Heeded not that night was nearing.
Discords in my bosom swelling
Broke the music of life's song,
For my soul was weary dwelling
'Mid the over-earthly throng.

Far within the still'y shade
Of a quiet, sequestered corner,
Where the wild flowers bloom and fade,
Gently nurtured by no mourner,
Was a grave, an infant's only.
No one knew the name she bore.
Ask the waves which, dark and lonely,
Cast her lifeless on the shore.

O'er the grave a humble stone
Reared its lichened head so lowly,
Like a sentinel alone,
Watching 'mid the silence holy.
Hither came the croaking raven;
From this stone its weird notes rose;
On its surface rudely graven
Were the simple words: "God knows."

As a moonbeam on the sea
Charms the sad wind's shrieks to singing
So these tender words to me
Turned my song, sweet solace bringing.
Though my thorn-strewn way was dreary,
Though my feet found no repose,
Yet my soul, life-worn and weary,
Rested in the thought: "God knows."

A Strange Prayer.

It was the prayer of a duelist. It was uttered in the bright sunshine of a lovely morning in May, as he had the death-bearing weapon in his hand, and stood with his antagonist before him. The place did not appear like one where prayer would be likely to be made; nor did the duelist, a young man of about 24 years of age, named Crawford, seem like a praying man, though he was distinguished by his manly air and gentle manners.

But "things are not what they seem." Beneath a show of indifference many a man carries "a wounded spirit;" and in this case the inner battle between pride and conscience was a kind of torture that no earthly physician could relieve.

My friend, whom I am now describing as he appeared at the turning-point of his life-course, was an only son. He was the heir of a large property in one of the Southern States, and had witnessed, in his 14th year, the death of his mother—an excellent Christian woman.

He had grown up in his native home amid the excitements of fashionable life. It happened one night, after leaving the theater, while taking wine at a hotel, his glass touched accidentally the glass of a military officer.

This trivial act became the occasion of a harsh word, a quarrel and a challenge to mortal combat.

Early on the morning of the set day the combatants, with their attendants, met at the appointed place. Crawford, naturally fearless, had already arranged his worldly affairs in view of the risks he incurred, and, clearly seeing its possibilities, he had said, "I am ready."

Just then his quickened memory called back the last words he had heard from his mother's lips, "Meet me in heaven."

She seemed at that moment a living presence. Suddenly every act of his dissipated, wasted life was remembered as clearly as the events of the passing week—and conscience began its work. It charged him with being intentionally a murderer.

But did he dare to confess the whole truth then and there? No; he was too proud for that. At the critical moment, strange to say, he whispered the secret prayer—

"O God, save us both from blood-guiltiness, and help me to change my way and meet my mother in heaven."

Without the tremor of a nerve he discharged his pistol in the air, and was but slightly wounded by his antagonist. Immediately the seconds interposed, reconciliation was effected, and thus the first part of the prayer was answered at once.

In this young man's history "the darkest time of night was just before day," for the second petition was granted speedily.

He had occasion to visit New York, where I first met him, in a gathering of relatives and friends, and there, too, I witnessed his public introduction to the church, his baptismal oath of loyalty to his rightful King, taken with an heroic spirit inspired by his new love.

He became a good soldier, bold in winning recruits, and he would often say, "Despair of none. If my strange prayer was answered, who need fail?"

Misnamed Prayers.

A correspondent of the National Baptist, discussing the Lord's Prayer, takes occasion to say: "Our Father which art in heaven" is the commencement of the prayer, which is—I think erroneously—usually called "the Lord's Prayer."

In Matthew, vi. 9, and Luke, xi. 1, we read that the Savior taught his disciples at their request to "pray in this manner," not always repeating those words, but indicating the proper objects or subjects of prayer. They teach how created intelligence may supplicate the Almighty. This may be called the model prayer, showing how man may pray as taught by the Son of Man Himself.

The Lord prayed for Himself on various occasions. The special Lord's Prayer is recorded in John, xvii., and may be read to advantage by all. Portions of it, not all, may be used by us; but it is mainly His own, and His alone.

It may be well to read the many prayers recorded in both the Old and New Testaments. They will instruct us to the best methods and proper supplications. They should prevent "vain repetitions" and guide our aspirations.

The true "Lord's Prayer" is in John, and is not all adapted to our wants. The model prayer, in Matthew and in Luke, is all ours, capable of much enlargement, adapted to our varied wants and necessities, and is "authorized," not by any human authority, but by the only Mediator and Great Intercessor between God and man for universal humanity.

NATIONAL RAILROAD LAW.

A Granger on the Objections of the Railroad-Lobby Lawyers.

[From the Nebraska Leader.]

The world is waking at length to the monstrous iniquity perpetrated by the railroad corporations upon the people.

In Germany the Government is purchasing the roads and equipments bodily, and will operate them.

This, of course, is impracticable here under our system.

But the enormity of the wrongs which the people suffer has at length aroused discussion.

Reagan's bill is the entering wedge.

He proposes to regulate inter-State commerce by fixing certain rules and regulations.

This is the signal for the corporations to send forward their attorneys.

The committee charged with the Reagan bill in the House is now the center of the fire of the corporations.

The audacity of the attorneys of the railroads is something to be admired.

They boldly defend the system of pooling as the best that can be devised for the people.

They say competition which is cutting down rates is bad for the people.

Read the report and see that this is true.

These skillful "manipulators of phrases" say that the world is too ignorant to attempt to legislate upon so delicate a subject.

They say a commission should be appointed to gather statistics for a few years before anything should be attempted in this direction.

Their impudence is, indeed, wonderful.

The business of the country is oppressed by their robberies.

The agricultural community is reduced to penury and the extremest hard times by the monstrous rates which these gigantic and remorseless robbers have fixed.

If members of Congress have not heard these things, next election ought to send a new set to Congress who have heard of them.

Farmers, merchants and shippers do not need a commission to inform them of these intolerable grievances.

The world gropes to find a solution of the difficulty that will leave the roads in the hands of the private owners.

There is no such solution.

Ownership of the public ways of the country is what envelops the question with difficulties.

Make the track a free public highway, and all the complexity of the case disappears.

The discussion of the matter in Congress might be looked to for more light, if the people were represented there by some one who would defend their rights before the committee.

The corporations are there.

They have millions of money to hire counsel and to press with ringing eloquence their views upon the hesitating committee.

On the other hand, the crude ideas of those who favor the Reagan bill, supported by the weak arguments of expediency alone, can never be effective.

The philosophy of the situation has not yet dawned upon the advocates of regulating railroads.

All such schemes must fail, from the complexity of their design.

Laws to be effective must be simple.

The more complicated the machinery by which legislation seeks to accomplish a given purpose, the less effective it will be.

The simple, natural way to destroy this monstrous iniquity is to liberate the track.

Throw it open to all men, and no more necessity will exist for regulating tariffs than there is for regulating rates between New York and Liverpool.

The Value of a Dollar.

We once employed for a short time in ditching, a man, who at 21 years of age was worth some $15,000, but who lost most of it, on the whole, foolishly, and was compelled, for a time, at least, to support his family by working for daily wages. One night when we paid him, he said, "I'm much obliged both for the wages and the tuition." We supposed he referred to instruction in laying tile drains, but he said, "No, I mean instruction as to the value of money. I never knew what a dollar was worth before. But, after working all day in the ditch to earn one, I'm not likely to spend 25 cents of it for a cigar or any other nonsense."

We could point out scores of city boys who have become miserable spendthrifts from the lack of just such knowledge. Their fathers were more or less wealthy, but the sons were not put into the office, or mill, or shop, and made fairly to earn their money by tiresome labor, either physical or mental. Their fathers said to themselves: "My sons shall never have to drudge as I did," and so the boys did no labor, bore no responsibility and never learned how money was fairly and honorably earned, and, of course, never knew its value or its proper use.

In a certain rural district we know we can count, within a radius of ten miles, more than as many young or middle-aged farmers who have since their majority "run through" from $10,000 to $30,000 each that their hard-working fathers left them; and all because they never learned the value of a dollar. One such, on his sudden accession to his property, thought to impress some of his young friends at a hotel where they had stopped for dinner by spreading a $100 bill on his slice of bread and butter and eating it with great apparent relish. He did "impress" the one he might have married with the belief that she had better not marry a man who was both spendthrift and fool; and the young man in less than twenty years saw the time when he was glad to get the bread and butter, without the $100 bill for a relish! In youth he had never been taught to labor, had had a large stock of spending money compared with the other farmers' sons, and supposed the only limit to the amount was "the old man's stinginess."—Rural New-Yorker.

THE GRANT MACHINE.

Probable Effect of the Pennsylvania Convention—Signs of a Republican Kick Against the Domination of the Camerons—German Opposition to Grantism.

WASHINGTON SENTIMENT.

[Washington Cor. Chicago Times.]

Grant, and the possibilities in his case, continue to be the all-absorbing topics of conversation. The only doubt of Grant securing the nomination at Chicago comes from conservative Republicans, who do not want him to succeed. They say that it has been claimed for Grant that he would be nominated with a hurrah, and without opposition, and that the enthusiasm that dictated his nomination would insure his election. The very fact that formidable opposition was developed in Pennsylvania, they say, is enough to show that it will be folly to nominate him. They say that one more success like that of yesterday would be a defeat. This idea was outlined in a talk between Gen. Farnsworth, of Illinois, and Secretary Schurz. Gen. Farnsworth said:

"Grant appears to have everything his own way."

"Yes," said Mr. Schurz, "but look at the strong opposition that was developed."

"In my opinion," said Gen. Farnsworth, "that means absolutely nothing. It is not a fighting opposition, for, if it were, why did not the convention vote down the unit resolution? After the convention had declared for Grant the unit resolution was declared without any dissent, so that the very best construction that can be put upon it is that the gentlemen who voted for Blaine simply preferred him, but would vote for Grant willingly enough if he were nominated."

"If that is the case," said Mr. Schurz, "we will have to beat them at the polls," and Gen. Farnsworth said that that was just about the condition of affairs, "for," continued he, "New York will follow as a matter of course; Illinois will do the same thing, and Michigan and Wisconsin will be coming in with early conventions, and, influenced by the action of the preceding States, there will be but little doubt of what they will do."

While Gen. Farnsworth is confident Grant will be nominated in Chicago, he thinks that he will be the easiest man to beat that could be put up by the Republicans.

Mr. McMahon, of Ohio, said that he did not think the action of the convention indicated the success of Grant. He said, however, that nothing could be more agreeable to the wishes of the Democratic party than for the Republican Convention at Chicago to nominate Grant.

Springer, of Illinois, concurs in the opinions and feelings of Mr. McMahon. He says that, if the instructions of the Pennsylvania Convention had been given unanimously, or without serious opposition, it would undoubtedly have indicated the nomination of Grant by the Chicago Convention. The opposition to Grant will be intensified by the action of the Harrisburg Convention. "Friends of Mr. Blaine," he says, "now enter the field in opposition to Grant's nomination, and, from this until the meeting of the convention, the contest will grow more bitter from day to day. It seems to me that Gen. Grant cannot afford to enter into a scramble of this kind. He had been pressed by his friends, upon the ground that he was the only man who could be elected, and that there was absolute unanimity among the Republican masses in favor of his nomination. He could hardly enter the Presidential race upon any other terms, unless his modesty is less than I had given him credit for. It would appear to an outsider at least that a man who had been elected President of the United States twice should not enter the political arena as a candidate for a third term and make war upon all others in his party who sought the office. So far as the Democrats are concerned," Mr. Springer said, "I think a majority are of the opinion that Gen. Grant can be defeated easier than any other candidate named, and therefore prefer his nomination. It is well known that the German vote is largely opposed to his election, and there is a large conservative element in the Republican party, and perhaps two or three members of the Cabinet would not support him or vote for him. Those who are pressing Grant's nomination are the old office-seeking element of the party, and do not represent the judgment of the lay members of the party. There is a growing sentiment, in my judgment," continued he, "among the people, to the effect that no man should be elevated to the office of President for a third term. The honors given Washington and other Presidents in the early history of our republic were considered as meeting the full measure of obligation of the people to our distinguished statesmen, and there is an indisposition now to elevate any man to higher honors than were conferred upon the father of his country. If Gen. Grant should finally be nominated, I feel perfectly confident that the Democratic party, with a reasonably good nomination, will succeed."

Gen. Keifer, of Ohio, who talked with the President on the result of the Harrisburg Convention, says that they arrived at practically the same conclusion regarding it. Mr. Keifer says:

"The fact is, the delegation will be for Grant, but it appears very clearly and conclusively that Grant is not the unanimous choice of the delegation. It also appears that it has required a good deal of management to even carry the delegation in that State, and, in view of the claim that Grant wants the unanimous choice of the people before he will accept the nomination, it is quite evident that he cannot be a candidate. The effect of this convention upon other States will probably be unfavorable to Grant, rather than favorable. I am inclined to think that the fight that Blaine made there will be against him; his supporters may go off to somebody else."

HENRY WATTERSON'S OPINION.

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal.]

With New York and Pennsylvania in the East, and Illinois in the West the Grant people have possession of the keys to the position, and neither Blaine nor Sherman has given any proof of a diverting strength sufficient to stand against a perfectly-drilled body of resolute and expert managers, who know what they are about and mean to have what they are after. * * * Just as, in 1876, there was, long in advance of the Republican nomination, a tolerably well-defined conspiracy to bring in the Republican nominee at any cost, have we already formed a conspiracy to bring in Gen. Grant, no matter how the election may go. He is the one man, the only man, under whom the revolutionists—for such they are—think they can succeed. Their idea is to make a hot canvass for a solid North against a solid South. If, by stirring up the war-like passions of the North, they succeed, why, well and good. But, if they fail, the leadership of Grant furnishes them still another chance. The two houses of Congress are Democratic. The South furnishes the Democratic majority in both. They think that, after the election, they will only need to muddle the returns that they may secure a pretext for overriding Congress, on the ground that Congress is a mere body of pardoned rebels, who are about to turn the Government over to the disloyal South, and practically to put the Confederacy above the Union—a thing not to be brooked by loyal men. Thus, with Grant, the hero of the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, in the saddle, and the Grand Army of the Republic ready to take the field, they expect to accomplish in 1881 by force what in 1877 they accomplished by fraud. * * * In a grand game of bluff the Republicans have every advantage—in position, in organization, in leadership, and, as a last resort, in actual resources. Thus do the revolutionists who propose a third term, as the precursor of a life tenure, calculate, and, considering the situation of public affairs and the state of the country, it must be allowed that they do not wholly reckon without their host. * * * Democrats may as well begin to consider how they shall proceed against all this, for not merely the nomination of Gen. Grant, but the programme we have hastily sketched, seems now the inevitable.

JOHN SHERMAN SNUFFED OUT.

[From the Cincinnati Enquirer.]

The action of the Republicans of Pennsylvania is significant. * * * The Republican candidate for the Presidential nomination who, above all others, has engineered for it, who has used machinery for it, who has used patronage for it, is John Sherman. Blaine has no patronage, or next to none, to offer as a bribe. * * * Notwithstanding this tremendous advantage John Sherman gets not the slightest support in Pennsylvania; it is known that he has none in New York, the Empire State; it is known that he has scarcely half the friendship of his own State, the third political State in the Union. He is not in the position of a "dark horse," as Hayes was four years ago. He is an avowed candidate. He cannot, in the Chicago Convention, take the attitude, which for him would be enviable, of a "dark horse." * * * The fight made by Blaine in the Pennsylvania Convention was for second place; it was not a vicious contest against Grant. Blaine will fight vigorously against any other man than Grant, as the friends of Sherman in Ohio will learn. Blaine already has notice that in John Sherman's own State he (Blaine) has about one-fourth or one-third of the Republican friendship. It is not reported that any Republican in Maine is in favor of John Sherman. Don Cameron has again successfully tested his power in Pennsylvania. The power of Conkling in New York has recently been proved. The Republican temper of these two great States is known. The political guide-board now points toward Grant as the Republican nominee. Will it be Grant and Blaine?

THE GERMAN REPUBLICAN ORGAN.

Der Herold, Milwaukee, the most influential German daily newspaper in Wisconsin, Conservative Republican in politics, denounces the action of the Harrisburg Convention in unmeasured terms. As Der Herold is the representative of the German Republicans of the State, its utterances are of importance. A portion of a leading article on the subject is as follows:

"The victory of the day belongs to Don Cameron, the most unscrupulous of the ring politicians. As Cameron is well aware of the intentions of Grant, we are justified in assuming that he acted with the knowledge and consent of the ex-President. Thus Grant himself has come forward as a candidate. Mr. Conkling will do the same thing in New York that Cameron has done in Pennsylvania, and there is no doubt that Grant will be nominated. It need not be explained what his nomination would imply. The republic is in danger of being delivered into the hands of a man who has been the worst President the country has ever had, and into the clutches of Senators who look upon the country as their prey. A new era of corruption and unrestrained rascality is impending. The free people of this country are about to be degraded to a wretched herd of voting cattle. In the face of the result of the Harrisburg Convention, it becomes the duty of all citizens who are not willing to bend the neck beneath the yoke of a Government unworthy the name of a republic to unite against and prevent the disgrace that lies in a third term."

The Statistics Bureau at Rome estimates the population of the Eternal City at the close of the past year at 296,232. The number of deaths in 1879 averaged 24.7 per 1,000, which goes far to show that the climate is not so unhealthy as is generally claimed. At Naples the average number of deaths in the same year was 26 per 1,000; at Trieste, 36; at Paris, 24.9; at Brussels, 33; London, 27; and Buda-Pesth, 32.

Mr. J. H. Smart, State Superintendent, says a teacher cannot legally keep school after license has expired.

By a recent decision of the Supreme Court, Shelby county finds herself liable to have to pay in bounties the sum of $15,000.

Gov. Williams has pardoned another convict on condition that he abstain from the vice of intoxicating drinks during the time for which he was sentenced.

The car-house of the Evansville Street-Car Company was destroyed by fire one morning last week, with all their cars, ten in number. Loss, $10,000; insurance, $4,000.

George Zeigler has been pardoned out of the Southern prison. He was convicted of grand larceny on Nov. 2, 1876, by the Bartholomew Circuit Court, and sentenced for five years.

Elijah Rodgers, a farmer 86 years old, was run over by a freight train on the Logansport and Terre Haute road, at Bowers, killing him. Both legs were cut off above the knees.

Benjamin Ekkers, a Cincinnati bartender, while hunting with several Richmond friends in Boston township, Wayne county, was instantly killed by pulling his loaded shot-gun, muzzle toward him, through a hedge.

The Pollard estate, which has been the source of considerable litigation in Cass county, and which was thought to have been settled, is to be all torn up again, as twenty-six additional heirs have come to light, residing in Tennessee, Iowa and Illinois, and are asking for a new division.

There are by the last annual report 708,701 school children enumerated in Indiana, and of this number 503,989 attend school. The total amount of the school fund is $9,080,581.96, and the revenue for the year ending November, 1878, was $2,861,837.48. (This amount was applicable to school purposes for the year ending November, 1879.) The total valuation of school property is $11,787,705.37.

Indiana Railways, 1879.

The year 1879 has been a remarkable one in railway progress in Indiana.

During the year several important new lines were opened, but the most noteworthy changes relate to the reorganization and consolidation of the old companies.

Nearly all the travel and traffic between the West and New York and other Eastern seaports must pass through Indiana. Hence the general revival of business has had a specially favorable effect on railway property in this State.

The Indianapolis, Cincinnati and Lafayette and Chicago roads now form a consolidated line from Cincinnati to Chicago, with a thorough reorganization of the offices and a judicious distribution of these at Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Lafayette.

The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Indianapolis is rapidly becoming an important part of the consolidated lines of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton, and other companies.

The Ohio and Mississippi road has greatly improved, both the main line to St. Louis and the branch line to Louisville, under the stimulus of the heavy business of this year of prosperity.

The Louisville, New Albany and Chicago road, which hitherto has been only a local road, yet which of late years has paid good returns on its reorganized capital, will become a part of the Louisville, Nashville and Great Southern system, and will at once take rank as a through line from the Southern States to Chicago and the Northwest.

The indications also are that there will be a consolidation of the lines from Terre Haute via Danville to Chicago, which, with the road to Evansville, will form another through line from the Ohio to Chicago.

The Logansport, Crawfordsville and Southwestern road has been sold, under foreclosure, to the Vandalia Company, and is now part of the Indianapolis and Terre Haute road. Under the new management the road will be thoroughly rebuilt; the special coal interest will be more fully developed and the entire line be placed under better management than was possible in the hands of a receiver.

The Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western road has been taken out of the hands of the receiver and is now thoroughly reorganized under the name of the Indiana, Bloomington and Western. The new company is possessed of ample means, and has the sagacity to fully appreciate the unequaled value of the location of this line from Indianapolis by the most direct route to the Northwest and to Omaha and the Pacific.

The completion of the Indianapolis, Decatur and Springfield road is a very important addition to the Western roads from Indianapolis.

This road is the most direct route to Decatur and Springfield, and will be a formidable competitor with the old roads for the valuable business from the coal regions of Indiana and the rich agricultural sections of Central Illinois.

The grand consolidation of roads from Toledo to Omaha, by which the Wabash became a part of the Toledo, St. Louis, and Western, is the greatest of the changes in the railway system of the State, and is one the importance of which is but feebly realized.

The ultimate seems to be a united interest from San Francisco to New York, with all the possible advantages and disadvantages which are included in such a colossal scheme. The immediate effect has been the diversion of a large traffic to the Wabash line which hitherto has been carried over the lines eastward from Chicago.

The Pennsylvania Company has reorganized the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis road, and will in the future, as in the past, make it one of the best roads in the State.

The Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis, the Peru and Indianapolis, and the two lines from Indianapolis to St. Louis continue under essentially the old organizations, with their well-known efficiency.

The new system of transfers at Indianapolis over the Belt railroad is a complete success. The city tracks are no longer crowded, while the new road quite around the city, and common to all the lines, offers attractions for the location of every sort of manufacturing business, unequaled in the United States.

On all the lines in the State special attention has been given during the year to the improvement of the roadbeds and the renewal of the tracks. More miles of steel rails have been laid than in any previous year, and, with the contracts already made for further improvements, there will be scarcely a line in the State which will not be fully equipped for the rapidly-increasing business of the country for 1880.—Cincinnati Gazette.

"If."

He stood twirling his hat in his hand in the hallway. It was about time for the morning stars to begin their song together.

"Well," and he moved one step nearer the door.

"Well," she replied, as she stepped to the door also.

"Well, I—I must be going. If—"

"That's right, John, if," and she leaned her head on his shoulder. "If—you—have—any—conundrums—to—ask—ask—them—now."

He was measured for a new plug hat and a pair of kid gloves on that same day.

Mixed.

Artemus Ward was in Louisville just at the close of the war, and one day at the Louisville Hotel was introduced to a loud-talking Confederate Colonel. "Let's see, Colonel," said Ward, as they shook hands, "what Michigan regiment did you command?" "Michigan!" cried the Colonel, fairly dancing with rage; "I was on the other side!" "Beg pardon," said Ward, looking annoyed himself; "but I have got this war all mixed up, somehow."

A number of Irishmen hold commands in the armies both of Chili and Peru. The chief officer of the Peruvian artillery is a Col. O'Horgan, and, according to the gazette of Lima, there are five Majors, thirteen Captains, and over two score of officers of inferior grade, either Irish by birth or descent, fighting in the army of Chili, while the Irish element in the victorious forces of the hostile republic is even greater.

The population of Nebraska is now about 500,000. It produced of grain last year about 20,000,000 bushels, with an increase of live stock over any former year of over 60 per cent. Omaha, its principal city, erected last year, in round numbers, 1,000 new buildings, and its business transactions reached the large sum of $200,000,000.

AUBURN, INDIANA, FEB. 19, 1880

THEODORE REED, ROB. J. LOWRY
EDITORS.

FOR PRESIDENT,

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS.

Subject to the decision of the democratic national convention.

"NO SOLID SOUTH, NO SOLID NORTH, BUT A SOLID UNION."

The members of the democratic county central committee of DeKalb county, Indiana, are requested to meet at Auburn,

Friday, February 20th, 1880,

at 10 o'clock a. m., for the transaction of important business. A number of new propositions will be submitted for the consideration of the committee and it is important that every township be represented.

The following named persons constitute the committee:

J. Quince,	Butler	township.
J. J. Walter,	Jackson	"
S. S. Shutt,	Concord	"
G. H. Munn,	Newville	"
Joseph Wilson,	Stafford	"
Wm. H. Madden,	Wilmington	"
D. D. Moody,	Auburn	precinct.
D. Y. Husselman,	Waterloo	"
B. D. Thomas,	Keyser	township.
C. B. Kagey,	Richland	"
Sol Reinoehl,	Fairfield	"
B. C. Waterman,	Smithfield	"
Joseph Sewell,	Franklin	"
B. F. Cornelius,	Troy	"

W. L. BLAIR, Chairman.

The Columbia City Commercial has recently been enlarged and greatly improved. We are always glad to note the prosperity of the newspaper men at our old home.

The rejection of over fifty war claims in one day (last Friday) by a democratic congress, ought to satisfy the people that the democratic party is opposed to claims legislation.

The house committee in congress has agreed to report favorably Representative Cox's resolution providing for the enforcement of the eight-hour law, and a full day's pay for eight hours work.

The nomination of C. T. Holstein attorney of the United States for the district of Indiana, has been confirmed by the senate. Mr. Holstein was formerly the deputy of U. S. Attorney Trussler.

John C. New, chairman of the republican state central committee, has concluded to have the vote of Indiana cast for Grant in the Chicago convention. How do you like it, Blaine men of DeKalb?

Leading liberal republicans, who fear Grant will be nominated at Chicago, talk of holding a mass convention and nominating some man whom the democrats would indorse. The democrats will not be in that kind of business this year.

It is given out from official circles that Hayes and his cabinet have decided to take precautionary measures to protect America's interest in the isthmus, by dispatching the war ships Kearsarge from New York and Adams from San Francisco, under sealed orders, their destination supposed to be the isthmus.

At a meeting of the National Trotting Horse association, held at the city of Washington recently, a resolution was adopted that owners of tracks upon which "ringster" trotters appear, should have all such horses photographed and send copies to the secretary of the national association, the collection of photographs to be known as the "ringsters gallery." A good idea.

Through the influence of the United States internal revenue bureau, a bill has been introduced in congress authorizing the issue of government license by the day at yearly rates, for the convenience of those who desire to sell cigars and liquors at fairs, festivals and similar gatherings. As the law now stands a license for a whole year is required in order to sell the goods named for one day or more.

The democrats of Washington City are making strong efforts to secure the national convention for that city. The committee will meet next Monday; in the meantime the members will be banqueted, and junketed down the river on Sunday, to gain their kind feeling to Washington. Chicago, St. Louis and Cincinnati, are all bidding for the convention, and the latter city seems to be last in the race. The west should not allow it to go to Washington.

One of our democratic township trustees showed us one of the "Enquirer bureau" circulars last week, which is a copy of those furnished the trustees throughout the state. The pretended object of the circular is to ascertain the political status of the several counties for the benefit of the Cincinnati Enquirer, the truth is that Woodard, by whom the circulars are signed and who is the Indiana correspondent of the Enquirer, is a radical republican, energetically engaged in furnishing information for the republican state central committee of this state for the campaign of 1880. We advise democrats in whatever position, to give Mr. Woodard (Jayhawker) a wide berth, as he is a snake in the grass.

RICH, RARE AND RACY REPUBLICAN RACKET.

MONSTER (?) MASS MEETING OF THE MUDDLED MANAGERS.

The County Convention.

The call for a mass meeting of the republicans of DeKalb county brought together at the court-house last Saturday, 100 republicans, including a number of prodigal greenbackers. The meeting was called to order by C. K. Baxter of the Waterloo Press, who stated the objects of the meeting, as indicated in the call of the state central committee. Mr. R. M. Lockhart was made permanent chairman, and the republican editors of the county secretaries of the convention. Mr. Kist of the Butler Record being absent, the arduous duties of the secretaryship devolved upon Messrs. Baxter, of the Press, Weamer, of the Republican, and Powell, of the Herald.

The first business being the organization of a county central committee, the following names were reported for the several townships, to constitute the committee for the ensuing two years.

Butler	township	Joseph Sarvock,
Jackson	"	J. G. Lawhead,
Concord	"	John A. Provines,
Newville	"	N. T. Fuller,
Stafford	"	John Crouse,
Wilmington	"	W. M. Kist,
Auburn	precinct	C. Beugnot,
Waterloo	"	John C. Somers,
Richland	township	Amos Britton,
Fairfield	"	J. W. Squires,
Smithfield	"	John C. Brand,
Franklin	"	T. D. Oberlin,
Troy	"	W. R. Emerson,
Keyser	"	Dr. Sherman.

Then came the contest for the chairmanship of the committee. The wire-pullers had decided upon H. C. Peterson, while the redeemed greenbackers and ex-soldiers supported Geo. W. Gordon. The result of the ballot showed that Mr. Gordon's greenback ideas of the last campaign had ruined his chances for republican preferment. The vote stood, Peterson 61, Gordon 31. For secretary of the committee the names of R. D. Tefft and R. H. Weamer were announced, the ballot resulting in favor of the latter by a vote of 68 to 37; this time the soldier element was victorious.

Next in order was fixing a date for the county nominating convention. Mr. McBride, with strategic ability moved that the fixing of the time be left to the county central committee, which motion was carried without opposition. Upon motion of Mr. Rose it was decided that all republicans who attend the state convention from DeKalb county be considered delegates, and that no unit vote be cast by the delegation against the will of a minority. DeKalb is entitled to twelve votes in the republican state convention.

Delegates to the judicial, senatorial, joint representative and congressional conventions to be sent from the several townships, each township and precinct being entitled to one delegate for each 50 and fraction over 25 republican votes for secretary of state.

The following named persons were selected to represent DeKalb county in the district convention to be held at Auburn on the 25th inst:

BUTLER TOWNSHIP.
C. B. Jones, Philip Noel.

JACKSON.
Alexander Provines, S. P. Jones,
Samuel George.

KEYSER.
Lewis Covell, Amos Rakestraw,
O. C. Clark, Samuel DePew,

CONCORD.
Delegates not named.

NEWVILLE.
George DeLong, N. T. Fuller.

STAFFORD.
Not named.

WILMINGTON.
Amos Bechtol, D. D. Diehl,
P. B. Nimmons, G. W. Haines,
G. W. Swarts, Geo. Pugsley,
John Wilson.

AUBURN.
Those in attendance.

WATERLOO.
H. Willis, C. K. Baxter,
R. Wes McBride, R. M. Lockhart,
John Bidler, J. W. Patterson.

RICHLAND.
Wm. Mercer, H. Bangs.

FAIRFIELD.
A. Buchanan, Harrison Jones.

SMITHFIELD.
R. G. Daniels, J. E. Thompson.

FRANKLIN.
Jerry Lewis, I. K. Firestone,
Aaron Ash.

TROY.
D. McClellan, W. R. Emerson.

Before adjournment an effort was made to instruct the delegates to the district convention to use their influence in favor of C. K. Baxter, of DeKalb, as a delegate from this district to the national convention at Chicago. After considerable discussion the mover was compelled to withdraw his motion, owing to a strong feeling against "binding the hands" of the delegates. There was some person else in view for the same position, but his friends were too timid to name him, besides, Baxter is known to be for Sherman and the meeting had already expressed a preference for presidential timber as follows: Blaine 51, Grant 11, Sherman 19, Washburn 4; so that the Blaine men ruled the roost, compelling the withdrawal of Sherman's admirer.

All in all, the convention was a very tame affair, no enthusiasm whatever was shown, notwithstanding Mr. Lockhart's efforts to "raise the wind."

PRESIDENTIAL BOOMS.

A BIG ONE FOR GRANT.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean of the 13th inst. contains the following double leaded editorial:

"The persistent efforts of certain journals hostile to General Grant in trying to make the people believe that the Hon. E. B. Washburne is a candidate for the presidency have become annoying to the gentleman, and he authorizes the Inter-Ocean to announce that he is not, and under no circumstances will he be such a candidate. He is for General Grant first, last and all the time. He further says that the friend who wrote this paper the other day that he was a candidate for governor of Illinois was more zealous than wise."

A LITTLE ONE FOR TILDEN.

A special dispatch from New York, dated 13th inst. says concerning an accident to John Kelley:

"He was riding down town on a horse car this morning, and, instead of having it stopped, he jumped off while it was in full motion, slipped on a piece of ice, and was thrown violently against a pillar of the elevated railroad. His shoulder was dislocated, and he was badly bruised. He was unconscious when they took him into a neighboring building, and great fears were had that his injuries were fatal. He had nausea and groaned continually. When the surgeon arrived three strong men were directed how to pull the dislocated shoulder into place. In three hours Mr. Kelley was sufficiently recovered to be carried home. Hundreds of politicians flocked to his house, and Cardinal McCloskey sent his regrets at the accident."

The New Orleans Picayune says: It is, perhaps, about time to remind Messers. Kelley and Tilden that the democratic party is not the property of either of them, and that it does not propose to adopt their differences as national issues. It is not at all essential, either to the triumph of the party or the prosperity of the nation, that Mr. Kelley should name the next democratic candidate for president, or that Mr. Tilden should be that candidate.

Judge H. W. Bruce, in giving some personal recollections of the Confederate congress before the Southern Historical society the other evening, spoke of the firmness of Jefferson Davis, "which many called obstinacy," and related an anecdote of Mrs. General Heningsen, whose husband, a Hungarian, having fallen in disfavor with the president, lost his position in the army, and no entreaty was strong enough to move Mr. David from his purpose. This so enraged Mrs. Heningsen that she told some of the president's friends that if she had been at the Battle of Bosworth when King Richard III. cried, "A horse! a horse! my Kingdom for a horse!" she would have pointed to Jefferson Davis and said, "There's your mule." Which saying became a byword throughout the armies.

IMPORTANT TO SCHOOL OFFICERS.

4. If it were held that a teacher holding a six months' license which expired the day after the commencement of the term of service for which he was employed, could, without obtaining another license, teach during the entire term of such employment, the general principles of the law of frequent examinations might easily be violated. For example, the term of service is chiefly within the discretion of the trustee. It may be for an entire year, possibly longer, and thus by a convenient selection of the time of procuring license and of making a contract, a person might be able to teach nearly eighteen months on a six month's license. Thus the purpose of the law in placing a limit on the time for which teachers may be licensed would be defeated.

5. In view of the foregoing propositions, it is held that it is the duty of a teacher whose license expires during his term of service, to obtain a new one as soon as possible. If the examinations are held regularly each month, the period of exemption need not last longer than one month. It is also held that, on failure of such teacher to obtain a license after a reasonable time, it is the duty of the trustee to secure the services of another teacher, and one who is qualified by the possession of a suitable license, as soon as practicable.

J. H. SMART,
Superintendent of Public Instruction.

P. S.—Inasmuch as this opinion differs somewhat from a former ruling of the department on the same subject, it is recommended that all teachers now in service who are affected by it, be given a reasonable time in which to make preparations for the examination. J. H. S.

The above recent opinion of the state superintendent is published in reply to a number of questions addressed to the county superintendent.

It is advisable that teachers generally improve the first opportunity to obtain an examination, since they are now familiar with problem and principle, likely to be forgotten before the fall examination. The only examinations which will be held, unless special notice is given, are those on the last Saturday in each month at the high school building in Auburn. I hope many of our teachers will attend examinations at the close of their terms, and those who have been teaching without their licenses being valid to close of term, will take the first opportunity to rectify the mistake. W. H. [illegible]
County Superintendent.

The heavy rainfall in Kentucky and parts of Indiana, Ohio, Tennessee and Virginia, during the night of the [illegible] inst., caused a great loss of life and property.

Several of the boys here feel for their heads every morning, and with the aid of a step-ladder can just reach the outskirts.

—Mike Boland, our genial recorder, tries to be affable and pleasant to everybody, but he has had a very harassing case of female book-agent on hand during the present week—a regular "stayer," so if Mike appears irritable, don't notice it.

—Quite a party of young folks assembled last Tuesday night at the residence of H. H. Weaver, on South Main street, to the complete surprise of his daughters, Libbie and Jessie, for whose benefit it was given. A jolly good time was the result.

—A. B. Richards, of the Waterloo bus line, is accommodating and courteous to all his passengers. As a natural result, he gets a full share of the patronage, all of which he delivers to Butt's hotel, that popular haven for the weary and hungry traveler.

—Geo. Schaab and lady returned from their wedding "tower" Saturday, and some of the urchins in their part of town made it quite pleasant for them Monday night. Our "partner" ("Bill Dills") says it was the biggest racket on a small scale that he has heard in ninety-five years—no, months.

—Superintendent McIntosh has finished his first visit to the schools of this county. To visit 111 schools and attend all of the township institutes, is no small job, especially when we consider that the work has to be done during all kinds of winter weather. The superintendent reports the schools in a prosperous condition, with but few exceptions.

—A number of lady readers of the Courier having expressed a desire for Bryant's, justly popular Thanatopsis, for their scrap-books, we publish it on the first page of this paper in plain type. We shall publish other popular poems from time to time in the same manner, for the accommodation of the lady friends of the Courier who are preparing scrap books.

—Our old friend W. Walter called to see us again this week. He still represents the wholesale liquor house of Fred. Walter, at Mansfield, Ohio, one of the largest wholesale establishments in the west in that line of goods. Mr. Walter informs us that he now has exclusive control of their western Ohio and northern Indiana trade, with headquarters at Columbia City. He will visit Auburn about once a month and will take pleasure in supplying first-class goods at very low prices. Those who deal in his line of goods will do well to give him a trial order.

Wouldn't it Be Funny to See

George Foster drink water?
Uncle Sammy Ralston dance a hornpipe?
Frank Dills in the "Orphans' Home?"
Tom Gross set 'em up?
Judge McClellan stay away from club dances?
Coop. Ralston give his horse a rest?
Father Swineford on a flying trapeze?
John Leasure when he didn't have something to say?
W. J. Austin on a whiz?
Frank Griswold in Sam. Pomeroy's barber-shop?
A man who hates to see his name in the paper?
The saloons closed at 11 o'clock?
John Bunch in tights?
Democratic county officers?
Rev. H. J. Norris flying a kite?
Jas. L. Davis without a cigar in his mouth?
The Republican get out on time?

Amusements.

[illegible]

This exceedingly funny burlesque was presented by home talent last Friday and Saturday evenings to a meager audience on both occasions. Considering everything—the limited means of the company and the time they had to [illegible]—the presentation was quite [illegible] amateurs in our little city who would, with a little drilling, make good records on the stage. [illegible] company intends making a tour [illegible] neighboring towns, [illegible] financially and otherwise.

ALFRED J. KNIGHT.

Tuesday evening [illegible] hall contained [illegible] an audience, if not quite as large as any that has been seen there [illegible] the [illegible] intelligent [illegible] people in Auburn was the [illegible] performance of Alfred J. Knight, the talented elocutionist and historical costume impersonator. His Shakespearian impersonations were exceedingly fine, and could not well be excelled by any one, especially those of Mark Antony, Cardinal Wolsey and Hamlet; and his selections of humorous recitations were equally entertaining, creating great merriment and eliciting hearty applause from his interested hearers, [illegible] of Bob Burdette's "Romance of a sleeping-car." Mr. Knight fully sustained the reputation which [illegible] accorded him, and can congratulate himself upon having appeared before the bon ton of Auburn and the most refined audience that we have seen assembled in Ensley hall.

F. G. WHITE COMBINATION.

Beyond all question, this is the best theatrical troupe that has ever favored Auburn with its presence. The drama presented at Ensley hall last Monday evening, entitled "Risen from the ashes," had the desired effect upon a very fair audience that had gathered for the first time to witness the performance of Mr. White's company in this place. To say that everybody was pleased with the entertainment would be but vaguely expressing it; they were carried away, convulsed with laughter and delighted beyond expression with the performance from beginning to end. F. G. White, in the double role of "Gerald Gray" and "Joe Blossom," was of course the cardinal feature, and the impersonation was perfection. Fanny Mathias, who also assumed two characters,—"Blanche, the Orange Girl" and Mlle. LeFleure,"—could not have been improved upon, her caste being pleasing in the extreme. H. F. Norman had a difficult character to sustain, that of "Lester Blake," the villain, as he naturally has the prejudice of the audience; but in spite of this he drew their admiration, for his end was admirably held up. This charming company, each one of whom are "stars in the profession," will re-appear here Friday and Saturday evenings, Feb. 20 and 21, and we can assure them a booming house. The play to-morrow (Friday) evening will be Mark Twain's celebrated drama entitled "Colonel Sellers, or, There's Millions in It," which should be seen by everybody. It will be a rich thing. Seats now for sale at Willis & Co's book-store.

Obituary Notice.

WRITTEN BY A FRIEND.

Died, at his residence in Troy township, DeKalb county, Indiana, Sunday, Feb. 15, 1880, Samuel Learned, aged 67 years and 11 months.

The deceased was born in New Hampshire, Feb. 29, 1812, and after a long and useful life, over thirty years of which was spent in this county, his spirit has sought its final abode in a land of the blest. The hand of Death has taken from his grief-stricken wife a faithful husband, and from this community an upright and worthy citizen. His heart was ever alive to the woes of others, and in him the poor and needy found a true and steadfast friend. But he is gone; his voice, ever ready to plead for the sick and distressed, will be heard no more, and may the memory of his many virtues be ever cherished by those with whom he mingled in the walks of life. May his bereaved family be comforted with the assurance that God doeth all things well.

Dead Beats.

The following chapter on dead beats, was handed to us for publication, by one of our subscribers who has evidently been victimized. He asks: Who are dead beats, and what are they good for? and answers that they may be found in every town, and are good for nothing except to beat you out of all they owe you. If through kindness you permit them to get in debt to you, and after waiting for your pay for months and perhaps years you chance to dun them, they will either make piecrust promises or pretend to be greatly insulted by your impudence. Ask a dead beat to do a day's work for you, and he will inquire at once how much you will pay per day, and if you tell him 75 cents or $1.00 he will say "O, I would rather do nothing than work for such low wages." And, if he should happen to pay you a few cents on an old account three or four years old, he will want you to treat him for his benevolence; if you refuse to treat until the full account is paid, he will denounce you as being the meanest man in town, and will leave for other fields of credit and represent [illegible] to his new victim [illegible] his debts [illegible] work a day [illegible] will be sure to [illegible] before [illegible] D'Voingt, don't you know [illegible] merchant worked hard to pay for his dry goods and groceries before he sold them to you; that the butcher paid the cash for his meat before it was [illegible] his wheat bed [illegible] when afflicted, and perhaps saved you from death; that the newspaper man who furnishes you with items [illegible] and to pay cash for his paper and material? If you know all this, why not act like an honorable being and pay your just debts? If [illegible] demand high wages, you had better work for what you can get, rather than stand on the street-corners doing nothing. Good workmen can find plenty of work at good wages, and unless you do your share and pay for what you get, you are not entitled to credit, and ought to have the g. b.

St Joe.

—Singing school at the church once a week, with Prof. Mitchel in the chair and Aleck Leighty door keeper.

—Jewelry shop at the drug-store; barber-shop at the sign of the striped pole; whisky shop at the west end. Well fixed.

—Appearances indicate that building will commence early in the spring. M. P. Bishop, W. Volmer and John Conner [illegible] will build one residence [illegible]

—The place known as "Blue Ruin" has again changed hands, Wm. Livergood retiring and James Ferell taking possession. Beer flows freely, as usual.

Wonder who gets the dollar for the use of the school house for clog dancing. Will the school fathers explain why our school buildings are used for dance houses?

—Following is a summary of the business transacted by the B. & O. railroad at this place during the year ending Dec. 31, 1879: Of stock there were shipped 38 car-loads; of lumber, 41 car-loads; of grain, 213 car-loads of wheat, 27 car-loads of oats and corn, 2 car-loads of clover-seed, 5 car-loads of apples, 6 car-loads; hay in bales, 2 car-loads; potatoes, 1 car-load. The amount of freight handled at the station and elevators is, in round numbers 5,915,457 pounds, for which the railroad company received $10,791 55. Of freight received there were 7[illegible],031 pounds, for which the agent received $889.71. We are not inclined to boast, but we must say that the above is a pretty good showing for our little town. Looking back to 1875, we see but one little bit of a house and that a farm house—where to-day stand comfortable dwellings and elegant business houses. The people of St. Joe are bound to win in the long run, if they have to bridge the river by contributions.

—Salas Nugew is visiting friends in Michigan.

—Preaching every two weeks at Shugars' school-house.

—Mrs. Taylor, from Canton, Ohio, is visiting at Mrs. Swisher's.

—John Shugars is having a barn erected under the management of Mr. King, of Auburn.

—The school No. 3, taught by A. H. Provines, is in a thriving condition, and will terminate in a few days.

—Literary next Tuesday evening at Shugars' school-house. The question for discussion is: "Resolved that novel reading has an immoral tendency." All are invited to attend.

—Martin Goetschius and family will leave in about two weeks for Montana territory, at which place they expect to make their home.

—Rev. W. Meese is holding a revival at the Lockwood school-house, two miles south of this place. Notwithstanding the bad roads, the attendance is large.

CLEVELAND, November 1, 1879.

Editors "Wachter am Erie,"

GENTLEMEN.—Allow me, as an old reader of your valued journal, herewith to send you a few lines, which please insert in your next issue. I will vouch for their truth, and know that by their publication a great deal of good will be accomplished. Having been a reader of your paper for many years, I hope you will kindly grant my request.

For twelve years I had suffered, from time to time, terribly with rheumatism, to such an extent that I was unable to move about, and lost the use of my limbs. I tried everything recommended to affect a cure, consulted some of the most prominent physicians, and expended large sums of money, hoping to find relief, but without any success. Glancing over the columns of the "Wachter," I read about the St. Jacobs Oil, and the many cures this remedy had affected. Having been disappointed so many times, I lost all faith in any remedy, the St. Jacobs Oil included, until I saw one day that it had cured a well-known citizen with whom I am acquainted. Other parties fully endorsed the value and wonderful power of the Oil, telling me that it had cured them of different ailments in a very short time. This brought me to a conclusion. I said to myself, "Schweizer, fifty cents won't break you;" so I went to my druggist, Mr. Bock, bought a bottle of the Oil, and must now confess that the result was truly wonderful. I used it every two hours, and found relief immediately upon the first application, and the pain ceased entirely after a few more applications. Fearing a new attack, I remained in bed and continued to use the remedy every three hours. All pain having left me, I arose from my bed and walked down stairs without any trouble.

Since that time I have been able to follow my occupation, and feel no pains or inconvenience, however disagreeable the change of the weather may be. Having thoroughly tested the St. Jacobs Oil, I can conscientiously recommend it to all afflicted with rheumatism. Fifty cents is a small expense when the services for so trifling an outlay are considered. If I was one thousand miles away from all human habitation, I should, nevertheless, procure this remedy and keep it always in my house. LOUIS SCHWIZER,
Cor. Mervin and Centre Sts., Clevland O.

A Baltimore barber lost confidence in the pecuniary responsibility of a man whose beard he was shaving off, and demanded his pay when the job was half done. The man had no money, and was turned into the street, where the peculiarity of his face—half clean and half covered with whiskers—drew a throng.

The superintendent of the census in a circular to supervisors, says the appointment of enumerators must be non-partisan. He is aware of no reason existing in the law for regarding women as ineligible for appointment as enumerators. Each supervisor must be the judge for himself whether such appointments in any number would be practically advantageous in the district. It is clear that in many regions such appointments would be highly objectionable; but the superintendent is not prepared to say that localities may not be found where a canvass of the population by women would be conducted without disadvantage being encountered by reason of the sex of the enumerator.

The Mason County (Ill.) Democrat favors a "dark horse." "If we want success, do as we did in '44 and '52; trot out a dark horse, and succeed as our party did in those campaigns. On the other hand, if we want to stick to some old party leader, let us follow the example set us in '48, and we guess the result will be something similar to what it was then. While we are neither prophet or the son of one, we think 'The Hoosier Rodkin,' as the Chicago Times styles him, at this time the most prominent of dark horses, one of whom must be put up to beat Grant in 1880, as there was the dark horse that beat General Scott in 1852. While we [illegible] the [illegible], we will state for one reason of this preference that the East has had the candidate for the past 20 years, now the West ought to have it."

WEEKLY NEWS REVIEW.

THE EAST.

The contributions for Ireland's relief in New York are increasing every day. The wealthy men of that city, being convinced of the genuineness of the reports from Ireland, are now giving all the way from $100 to $1,000 each.

The body of Miss Dolly Hartman was cremated in the Le Moyne furnace at Washington, Pa., last week. The operation appears to have been expeditious and successful. Visitors were not denied admission to the crematory, but few were present. The father of Miss Hartman stated that he should not be guilty of the folly of preserving the ashes in an urn, but should strew them over the front yard for the purpose of increasing the yield of flowers, this, in his opinion, being the disposition that would be most agreeable to his daughter.... The coke manufacturers of Pittsburgh have decided to replace the striking workmen with 500 Belgians, who agree to work for less than the present wages, and who will bring their families with them and pay all their expenses.... Royal B. Conant, cashier of the Eliot National Bank, of Boston, has been found guilty of embezzling about $70,000..... Near Londonderry, N. H., a youth named Frank Dillingham, during the temporary absence from home of his uncle, ravished and murdered his aunt, a comely woman a few years his senior. The young fiend made an unsuccessful attempt at suicide.

Two men named Sackett and Feeney, near Bradford, Pa., upset a sleigh in which they were transporting 100 pounds of nitroglycerine put up in ten-quart cans. The material exploded with awful effect, Sackett being torn to shreds, while Feeney was fatally injured.

The church collections in New York city on Sunday, the 8th inst., for the relief of the starving people of Ireland were very large, probably three times greater than any previous collection for any purpose....The New York police propose to contribute to the Irish famine relief fund one day's pay, from the highest to the lowest man in the department.

The Chatham mills, an extensive brick structure, on Howard and Berks streets Philadelphia, burned last week, involving a loss of $175,000, nearly covered by insurance.

Burglars blew open the vault in the national-bank building at Westport, Ct., the other night, but the concussion was so great as to arouse the villagers, and the cracksmen secured only $3,500 in money.

Score another victory for the women suffragists. The Legislature of New York has passed, and Gov. Cornell has signed, a bill granting the weaker sex the privilege of voting for school officers.

THE WEST.

Capt. Jack, of the Utes, left Los Pinos last week for Grand river, at which point the White river Indians are said to be encamped, for the purpose of making another attempt to secure the surrender of the twelve guilty savages. Jack would make no promises, and refused to set a time for his return. Gen. Adams awaits him at the agency from which he started

The Iowa House of Representatives has, by a considerable majority, voted for a constitutional amendment, making women eligible to the Legislature.... Three masked men broke into the National Bank of Knoxville, Ill., a few nights since and seized Mr. Runkle, the President, who lives in the building, bound him hand and foot, bandaged his eyes, and demanded the combination of the safe. Mr. Runkle said he didn't know it, whereupon the burglars burned his feet, knocked him on the head and hung him by the neck, but not fatally, and finally gave up the undertaking and contented themselves with $3,000 in a private safe, the key of which they found in Mr. Runkle's clothes.... A dispatch of Feb. 8 from Las Vegas, New Mexico, says: "The cowboys, Jim West, John Dorsey, and Tom Henry, who were implicated in the shooting of Carson, at a dance, two weeks ago, were dragged from their cells this morning about 3 o'clock, by a mob of about seventy-five heavily armed men, who battered down the outer door and forced the jailer to give up the keys. Ropes were thrown around their necks, with hangman's knots, the men carried to the wind-mill pump in the center of the plaza, and hanged to the beams of the wind-mill. No time was given for mercy prayers. West, while being hauled up, cried out, "My God! my mother!" Henry replied: "Shut up, Jim; die like a man." No resistance was offered the mob, which quietly dispersed.

By the reckless use of a pistol a young man named John Barker killed John Lear and Berry Hardy near Cooperstown, Ill. It appears that Barker was drunk, and drew his revolver and fired two shots at random, each shot killing a man. The shooting is said to have been accidental. In each instance the ball penetrated the brain and caused instant death. No quarrel or ill feeling is reported, nor anything to justify the killing. All the parties are farmers, and belonged to respectable families.

A Southern Refugees' Relief Association, having for its object the collection and forwarding of funds for the relief of the colored people who have already or may hereafter come to the North, has been organized in Chicago.

An advance of 10 per cent. upon the prices fixed at their meeting of December last was voted by the National Wagonmakers' Association of the United States, at their session in Chicago last week....Scott Cooper, a prominent stock dealer, was robbed in a hotel at Brookville, Ind., of $3,000. Cooper was found at 6 o'clock in the morning by the proprietor of the hotel bound to the bed, gagged and in an unconscious condition. The thief had used chloroform to overcome his victim.

G. W. Carleton and S. H. Brummett were the editors, respectively, of the Telegraph and Enterprise, at Hollister, Cal. The Telegraph called Brummett a horse-thief. Brummett met Carleton on the Court House steps and asked him why he published those lies about him. Without speaking, Carleton drew a pistol and shot Brummett. The murderer was arrested.... The Wisconsin House of Representatives has passed a bill providing for biennial sessions of the State Legislature....The Imperial elevator, situated at the corner of Dearborn and Sixteenth streets, Chicago, containing 123,000 bushels of wheat, collapsed, the other morning, spilling its contents on the ground and wrecking an adjoining mill. The loss is estimated at $200,000....It is reported that the settlers in the vicinity of Ouray, a mining town in Southern Colorado, are in imminent peril from the Utes, who are now in an almost starving condition....Another immense grain elevator is to be built in Chicago. It will cover an area of 354 by 100 feet, is to be 155 feet in height, and have a storage capacity of 1,500,000 bushels.

THE SOUTH.

The Supreme Court of Georgia has refused a new trial to Cox, sentenced to imprisonment for life for the murder of Col. Alston. The case will be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States.

New Orleans, Galveston, Mobile, Memphis and other Southern cities indulged in the usual Mardi-Gras festivities....A deadly duel was fought the other day at Hancock, Va., by two girls, rivals in love—Miss Louisa Wise and Miss Margaret Downing, the former using a formidable club and the latter a pitchfork. Both girls were fatally injured.

It is stated on authority that the Louisville and Nashville Company has made a contract with the Georgia Central and South Carolina and Port Royal roads for five years, thus gaining control of every seaport from New Orleans to Charleston except Brunswick.

GENERAL.

Dion Boucicault proposes that all the theaters and music halls in the country shall give entertainments on St. Patrick's day for the benefit of the Irish relief fund, and offers to be one of 100 gentlemen to give $100 each per week.... By the upsetting of a schooner at Cheney's Cove, New Brunswick, Gran Menan, John Fesbit, Frank Robinson, John Larry, Mrs. Lindsey and Mrs. Simon Franklin were drowned.

By the explosion of a boiler in the Canada Paper Company's mill, at Windsor, Quebec, two men were killed outright, and ten others more or less seriously injured.... Burned: The City Hall, at Albany, N. Y., loss, $75,000; Talbot's block, Pennsylvania and Market streets, Indianapolis, loss, $30,000; Freick's bottling establishment, Evansville, Ind., loss, $13,000; State Normal School, at San Jose, Cal., loss, $250,000; Lehman, Durr & Co.'s cotton factory, at Prattville, Ala., loss, $100,000.

Another advance in the price of nails has been decreed by the Western Nail Association at Pittsburgh, to take effect at once. The new rate is $5.25, and it is expected that it will be sent up to $5.50 before the 1st of April.

WASHINGTON.

Advices having been received from the Government officials that preparations for invading the Indian Territory are assuming formidable proportions, this question was the subject of a somewhat protracted discussion at a Cabinet meeting last week, and it is understood a proclamation similar to that of last spring on the same subject will soon be issued by the President....The Cabinet has confirmed the finding of the Military Court of Inquiry in the last case against Reno, wherein the sentence was dismissal from the army.

President Hayes has, with the approval of the Cabinet, directed that Maj. Reno, recently court-martialed and sentenced to dismissal, be permitted to resign his commission in the army....It is said that the Ways and Means Committee will certainly report favorably on Mr. Fort's bill providing for a reduction of the price of print paper....All hopes of the Reagan Inter-State Commerce bill becoming a law at this session have been dissipated by the action of the House Commerce Committee, which has decided adversely to the measure by a vote of 8 to 7.

Secretary Sherman informs the public that until further notice proposals for the sale of $1,000,000 worth of bonds to the Government on sinking-fund account will be received on Wednesday of each week at the sub-treasury in New York city.

The bill introduced by Senator Garland proposes to extend the time for the completion of the Texas Pacific railway ten years. ....The President of the United States has issued a proclamation on the subject of unlawful invasion of the Indian Territory by white people for the purpose of settlement, declaring it to be the purpose of the Government to put a stop to the movement, and to rigidly enforce the laws and treaties under which the lands in that Territory are reserved for the exclusive occupation of the Indian tribes, officers of the Interior Department, and military posts. Notice is given that if necessary the military power of the United States will be employed to suppress the movement....Ohio Democrats say that they must have at least three of the Census Supervisors, and until they see that number on a list from the White House they do not intend to allow any confirmations.

POLITICAL.

Gen. Grant's friends at Washington are so confident of his nomination at Chicago that they are discussing the advisability of sounding Mr. Blaine on the subject of accepting the second place on the ticket. So says a Washington correspondent.....Indianapolis telegram: "The friends of Gov. Hendricks profess to be much gratified with the shape affairs are assuming in New York and elsewhere with regard to the Democratic Presidential nomination, and confidence in their favorite's chance begins to assume an aggressive character."...The Tennessee Republican State Convention to nominate candidates for State officers and appoint delegates to the National Convention is called for May 5.

The Wisconsin Republican Convention, to choose delegates to Chicago, has been called for May 4....The New York Times prints an "inspired" editorial, stating that Gen. Grant is not nor has he ever been a candidate, but that should the convention nominate him in the same manner any other candidate would be nominated he would deem it his duty to accept.

A State Convention of the German-Americans of New York has been called to meet at Syracuse....Of the thirty-six Republicans in the New Jersey House of Assembly twenty prefer Mr. Blaine as their Presidential candidate, ten prefer Secretary Sherman, four prefer Gen. Grant and two prefer Washburne.

Thomas T. Minor and Thomas Brents have been elected delegates to the Chicago Convention from Washington Territory. Mr. Brents is a Delegate in Congress from Washington Territory, and he and his colleague are Blaine men through thick and thin.

Washington dispatches state that the sub-committee of the House Committee on Elections, to which was referred the contested case of Ignatius Donnelly against W. D. Washburn, from Minnesota, will report to the full committee in favor of unseating Washburn and giving the seat to Donnelly. The seating of Donnelly would give the Democrats a majority of the Congressional delegation from Minnesota.

The Chicago Times has been canvassing, through the medium of its correspondents, the Republicans of Illinois as to their Presidential preferences. Republican voters to the number of several thousands were sounded in over half the counties of the State. The result shows Blaine far in the van, with Grant a good second, and Washburne pulling up hard. The Sherman boom, if this canvass is reliable, has not struck Illinois.

A Washington telegram says: "There was a conference at the house of Mr. Blaine, last night, of some of his declared adherents, the purpose of which is understood in part to have been to determine what position it would be proper for Mr. Blaine to take with respect to the Presidential nomination. The result of this conference is said to be that Blaine has determined that he will immediately begin an earnest campaign, it being admitted on all hands that Grant himself is an aggressive, active candidate."

A meeting of the political friends of Secretary Sherman, to further that gentleman's aspirations for the Presidency, was held at the Ohio State capitol last week. Gov. Foster, Col. Parsons and others made speeches. The meeting was discouragingly small in numbers and somewhat lacking in enthusiasm. ....The New Hampshire Republican State Committee has fixed upon May 6 as the time for holding a State Convention to elect delegates to the Republican National Convention. ....The Wisconsin Republicans will hold their State Convention on the 5th of May.

FOREIGN.

Gen. Roberts, the commander of the British forces in Afghanistan, reports that eighty-two of the natives who participated in the "revolt" at Cabul last fall have been executed, and fifteen others are under sentence of death....A dispatch from Galway, Ireland, states that a large body of tenantry in the town of Athenry, headed by Father McWhillim, beat off a number of process-servers, who were under the protection of a small detachment of constabulary. Great excitement prevailed among the populace.

The betrothal of the Austrian Crown Prince Rudolph and Princess Mathilde, daughter of Prince George of Saxony, is announced. ....A dispatch from Candahar, received in London, says: "Reports have been received here of a second and more bloody struggle between the rival parties at Herat. The local troops attacked the Cabulese stationed there unawares, and inflicted heavy loss before the Cabulese could bring their artillery to bear on their assailants. When this was done the Herateese were defeated with great slaughter."

It is reported in Berlin that the terms of the accommodation between church and state in Germany are substantially that the Vatican will recognize the right of the state to control the education and nomination of priests, and that, in return for this, the state will repeal all clauses of the Falk laws passed for the purpose of coercing the clergy.... The Theater Royal of Dublin, the largest theater in Ireland, and, next to Drury Lane and Covent Garden, in London, the largest in the United Kingdom, was, with its contents, entirely destroyed by fire the other day, the loss being estimated at $1,000,000. Six persons perished in the flames. ....A Constantinople dispatch reports that during a fete a barrack three stories high, near that city, suddenly collapsed. Two hundred soldiers were killed and 300 wounded.

A Dublin letter to a New York paper gives a terrible picture of destitution in some parts of Ireland. The famine fever prevails to an alarming extent in some places, and harrowing descriptions are given of distress. The following is the report about the condition of a parish named Carnagan: With perhaps a couple of dozen of exceptions the whole population of 5,000 are on the high road to death by starvation. Hunger has overtaken more than a third already. Those who have anything to eat are living on seed potatoes. Every day some family is eating its last meal of them. A number of families squat in their cabins, around the morsel of live turf, all day, in order not to awaken pangs of hunger by active exercise. Poor peasant mothers stumble over miles of sharp-pointed rocks with their bare feet to implore Indian meal for their whining children. They also carry loads of turf or dripping seaweed on their backs for ten or fifteen miles like beasts of burden. Starvation is growing far and wide. The weather is cold, and the people are half naked. There are no beds even for the sick. They lie in dirty clothes, with an old tattered rug around them. Nine-tenths of the whole coast population of Connaught, from Galway to Sligo, are on the brink of starvation.

Trade is rapidly improving.... The sessions of the German Parliament were opened at Berlin on the 12th inst. The speech from the throne states that the relations of the Government with all the foreign powers are peaceful and friendly. The principal measures for legislation announced in the speech are: A bill for establishing biennial budgets; a new military law; prolongation of the law against the Socialists; and for a commercial treaty with the South Sea islands. The speech justifies the military law as a measure of security made necessary by increased armaments of the neighboring countries....A Havana dispatch reports the defeat of a band of Cuban insurgents, and the capture of 225 of them.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS.

The House only was in session on the 6th inst., and it was engaged upon the private calendar. Among the bills introduced were: By Mr. Dickey, appropriating $25,000 for the purchase of Fraye's equestrian picture of Gen. Winfield Scott; by Mr. Washburn for the relief of settlers on public lands: Mr. Whitthorne offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the President for information as to the proceedings of the International Polar Congress held at Hamburg, Germany, Oct. 1, 1879. After very little business the House adjourned to Monday.

On reassembling on Monday, Feb. 9, the Senate ordered printed and referred a set of resolutions of the Louisiana Legislature declaring that Kellogg was not legally elected Senator, and that Spofford was, and should have the seat. Mr. Logan, from the Committee on Military Affairs, presented a minority report on the bill for the relief of Fitz John Porter. Mr. Wallace introduced a bill to prohibit the arrest of election officers on election day. The bill to revive and continue the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims was taken up, and Mr. Davis, of Illinois, Mr. Edmunds, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Garland and Mr. Thurman spoke upon the subject. Mr. Thurman, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely the bill to provide for an additional Circuit Judge for the Eighth Judicial District. Indefinitely postponed. Also, from the same committee, adversely on the joint resolution authorizing the President to veto parts of appropriation bills. Placed on the calendar.... In the House, the following bills were introduced: By Mr. Kelley, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue new bonds to the holders of bonds that may become redeemable in 1881; also for the issue of additional coupons to the holders of redeemable United States bonds; by Mr. Ward, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to designate a United States vessel to carry contributions to Ireland free of charge; by Mr. Spear, to prevent general legislation on the appropriation bills; by Mr. Young, creating the Department of Manufactures, Mechanics and Mines; by Mr. Kitchen, to remove the duty on iron and steel; by Mr. Rice, to establish a board of Commissioners of inter-State commerce; by Mr Hutchins, providing that the term of office of the Chief Supervisor of Election shall be two years, also prohibiting the arrest of election officers on election day; by Mr. Keifer, for a commission of inquiry into the cause, and for the prevention of, contagious diseases among domestic animals; by Mr. Barker, to promote colonization in the public domain; by Mr. Buckner, to reduce the duty on printing and other paper; also, for refunding part of the 6 per cents. of 1881; by Mr. Sapp, to transfer to the States the title to all islands, beds of unnavigable lakes, bayous, etc., which were "meandered" at the time of the public-land surveys; by Mr. Deuster, for a uniform rule and certificate of naturalization; by Mr. White, to reduce and reorganize the army. A bill for an additional land district in Kansas was passed. Mr. Thomas, of Illinois, from the Committee on the Revision of Laws, introduced and had passed under a suspension of the rules a bill to regulate the practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringements of patents. The balance of the day was taken up in the discussion of the Hot Springs Reservation bill, no conclusion being reached.

The House joint resolution appropriating $20,000 to enable the United States to be represented at the International Fish Exhibition at Berlin next April was passed by the Senate on the 10th. One thousand dollars was appropriated to transport the body of Maj. Gen. Sykes from Texas to West Point. The regular order, the bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to ascertain the amount of land located on military warrants in certain States, was taken up. Mr. Edmunds opposed the bill and moved its indefinite postponement. He spoke at length. The bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to deposit Indian trust funds in the treasury of the United States, and to draw the interest stipulated by treaty or prescribed by law in lieu of investment, was passed. A second minority report upon the case of Fitz John Porter was presented by Mr. Burnside, recommending a new trial. The President nominated Frank H. Mason, of Ohio, to be Consul at Basle, Switzerland....In the House, Mr. F. Wood reported a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for all evidence touching the enforcement of the Internal-Revenue laws in Northeast Georgia, and it was adopted. Mr. Conger reported back a bill for the relief of colored emigrants, which was passed. The Hot Springs bill was then passed after discussion. The President was called on by resolution for the correspondence with foreign Governments in regard to the interoceanic canal. Mr. Beltzhoover introduced a bill, which was referred, providing for general amnesty.

Mr. Cockrell, from the Committee on Claims, in the Senate, on the morning of the 11th, reported adversely on the bill granting a pension to the widow of the late Gen. Custer. At the request of Mr. Ferry it was placed on the calendar. Mr. Garland, from the Committee on Judiciary, reported a bill to amend the Revised Statutes in reference to bigamy and polygamy. The Fitz John Porter bill was made the order for Monday next. The resolution calling for correspondence with foreign Governments in regard to the Panama canal was passed, as was the bill readjusting certain Postmasters' salaries. The Vice President laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War recommending an appropriation of $40,000 for the construction of permanent brick buildings for quarters for troops at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. Discussion was resumed on the bill authorizing the ascertainment of the amount of land located on military warrants, etc., and Mr. Edmunds and Mr. McDonald spoke. The President nominated George Balcery to be Register of the Land Office at New Orleans; William M. Burwell to be Receiver of Public Moneys at New Orleans; Charles G. Belknap to be Indian Agent at the Tule River Agency, California, and William Whiting, of Illinois, to be Indian Agent at the Ponca Agency, Indian Territory....In the House, Mr. Price submitted the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency upon the affairs of the German National Bank of Chicago. The Coinage Committee reported a bill upon the value of foreign coins, which was ordered printed and recommitted. Consideration was then resumed of the Court-Removal bill, but the bill went over without action, and the House went into committee of the whole upon the revision of the rules. Mr. Whitthorne introduced a bill providing for a commission for the examination of the existing and proposed rules for preventing collisions on water, and for framing such rules as shall be in consonance with and in furtherance of the interests of international law.

On the assembling of the Senate on Thursday, Feb. 12, Mr. Saunders introduced a bill to abolish all the duties on the importation of salt, and Mr. Garland another to extend the time for the completion of the Texas and Pacific railway. Committee reports were made in favor of an elevator in the Government building at Indianapolis; for the incorporation of the National Educational Association; and adversely on the resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the present system of salaries, fees and emoluments allowed officers of the United States, and to ascertain if any abuses exist. Some time was spent upon the private calendar; after which the discussion was renewed upon the bill in regard to bounty land, Mr. McDonald and Mr. Thurman speaking. Several clerks in the Interior Department were authorized. Mr. Blaine introduced a resolution calling for information touching the alleged false statistics and fabricated testimony imposed upon the Halifax Commission, and used as a basis of their award in the matter of the fisheries, which was adopted. Adjourned until Monday....In the House, Mr. Stephens, of the Coinage, Weights and Measures Committee, reported back five bills relative to the metric system of coinage. The bill provides, first, for the coinage of metric gold coin, to be called the "stella," of the value of $4; second, for the coinage of the goloid metric dollar, $2 and fractions of a dollar, and also the coinage of a metric gold double eagle, eagle and half eagle, all of a standard value; third, for the mintage of ingots of metric gold alloy, its deposit in the treasury and the issue of certificates therefor; fourth, for the making of ingots of fine gold and ingots of fine silver of the value of $100 each for exportation, manufactures, etc.; fifth, for the coinage of silver dollars and fractions thereof of the full standard value upon the metric system. A resolution was passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish the states, for the use of agricultural colleges, one set of standard weights and measures. The resolution calling for information in regard to a pending treaty with China was adopted. The morning hour expiring, consideration was resumed of the revision of the rules, and a long discussion upon political amendments to appropriation bills was had.

PAPER DUTIES.

Mr. Fort's Bill to Repeal Taxes on Soda-Ash and Knowledge.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.

The bill of Representative Fort, the purpose of which is to place certain chemicals which enter into the manufacture of paper, glass and woolen fabrics on the free list, and to reduce the duty on printing-paper, has not yet been formally considered by the Ways and Means Committee, and, owing to previous engagements of the committee, probably will not be considered for some time to come. Col. Fort, in speaking of the causes which induced the bill, and of its prospects, said in substance that his attention was first called to the matter from the fact that the increase in the price of paper was likely to result in greatly increasing the price of school-books and in placing a burden upon intelligence; and, believing that there should be as few obstacles placed in the road to knowledge as possible, he commenced considering the case. While doing so, he saw statements in the newspapers that the paper-manufacturers were combining to increase the price, but he has not had any conference with newspaper publishers. He immediately examined the tariff question at the treasury, and discovered that while many articles which enter into the manufacture of paper are on the free list, soda ash is not. He also found that a great many articles taxed for other purposes are free, if used in the manufacture of paper. He was led to believe, therefore, that the paper manufacturers were using the existence of the tax on soda ash for increasing the price of paper. He accordingly introduced a bill, of which the following is the text, providing for the reduction of the tariff on unsized printing paper from 20 to 5 per cent. ad valorem:

A BILL to place certain articles imported and used in the manufacture of paper, of glass and of woolen fabrics on the free list, and to reduce the import duty on printing paper used for books, pamphlets, magazines and newspapers:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of July, 1880, all soda-ash and impure carbonate of soda imported to be used in the manufacture of paper, or of glass, or of cloths or fabrics composed wholly or in part of wool, shall be admitted free of duty.

Sec. 2. That all unsized printing paper used for books, pamphlets, magazines and newspapers exclusively, shall be subject to an import duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem.

It will be noticed that Mr. Fort does not include in the bill the more costly classes of paper—fancy paper of any kind, or what are known as papers of luxury—but simply covers the regular printing-paper of which the children's school-books and the poor man's newspapers are made. A number of articles, such as alum, sal-soda, chloride of lime, and others, upon which there is a small tariff, he did not include in the bill, although those articles are, some of them, taxed, and many of them are used in the manufacture of paper. The heaviest burden on the paper manufacturer is the duty on soda-ash, which yields an annual revenue of about $300,000. Rags, grass, and jute butts, and other material entering into the manufacture of paper, although otherwise dutiable, are free under the drawback system, if used to make paper. Mr. Fort has already been visited by representatives of the tariff interests, who oppose the bill. Some paper-makers, while admitting that the duty on the chemicals is the same as it was a year ago, and that the price of labor has not materially advanced, say that they will oppose by every possible means the reduction of the tariff for the reason that they think it just that they should reap a harvest now with other surviving industries, and for that reason they have increased the price of paper. Fort is of the opinion that, as a practical fact, the increase of price has been arbitrarily done by the manufacturers, and is not required by any necessity of manufacture, as the essential elements of cost are practically the same. Foreign rags are not higher, and are duty free, and it is very doubtful whether the laborers receive higher wages.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.

The representatives of the paper manufacturers have become alarmed at the bill introduced by Col. Fort to reduce the price of paper, and at the general opposition manifested by the newspaper press to this increase, and are preparing to contest at every point the Fort bill. Letters have been received here indicating that the Eastern paper manufacturers are already preparing statistics and arguments which will soon be sent here for use before the Ways and Means Committee to endeavor to defeat the bill. The friends of the Fort bill should prepare themselves to meet the arguments against that measure already prepared. Some of the representatives of the paper interest are already here.

Mr. Buckner introduced a bill on this subject yesterday, which goes a little further than Col. Fort's bill, and includes sized as well as unsized paper in the proposition for a reduction. His bill provides to reduce the duty on paper as follows: On sized paper suitable for printing, 5 per cent. ad valorem; unsized paper, for newspapers, books, pamphlets, etc., 5 per cent. ad valorem; manufactured paper, or of which paper is the constituent part, not otherwise provided for, 15 per cent. ad valorem; sheathing paper, 5 per cent. ad valorem; paper boxes and all other fancy paper, 15 per cent. ad valorem; paper envelopes, and other fancy paper, the same; papier mache, 20 per cent.

SENATE EXODUS INVESTIGATION.

Synopsis of the Testimony Elicited by the Voorhees Committee.

James Buchanan, of Indianapolis, a prominent Greenbacker, testified that the demand for labor in Indiana is far short of the supply; that never, since 1873, had a winter passed that Supervisors of the Poor in the vicinity of Indianapolis were not called on to supply food to able-bodied men, who would be glad to earn a living if they could only get work. He was opposed to the exodus because he believed the negroes were not improving their condition by coming to a State already oversupplied with labor. He was not moved to hold this view because of any prejudice against the black race, as he had been an Abolitionist until slavery was abolished, and a Republican until 1872. With reference to Indiana Republicans favoring this exodus movement, he believed nine out of ten Republican voters were opposed to it, but that half a dozen leaders whom he knew in Indiana, while they did not openly favor it, failed to condemn bringing these negroes to Indiana, when they knew perfectly well that there was no work for them there.

Leonard G. A. Hackney, Prosecuting Attorney for the district in which Shelbyville, Ind., where he lives, is located, testified that twenty-six colored emigrants arrived at Shelbyville Dec. 12 last. The Mayor called a meeting of the Council, and provision was made for the destitute. A meeting of citizens was held, at which it was resolved that the law of 1852, inflicting a penalty of $500 upon any one who should bring a pauper into the State, should be enforced by the proper officers. Witness learned from a negro named Flowers and a Mr. Harper there were to be 12,000 or 15,000 negroes sent into Indiana before the 1st of February. There was no doubt that all the Democrats dislike to see emigrants come, and probably the respectable Republicans do also. The laboring class generally discountenance the movement. The demand for labor in Shelby county is fully supplied. There is even complaint of the scarcity of work. Samuel A. Perry (colored), a citizen of North Carolina, was the next witness. He said the discontent among the colored people of North Carolina was due to the bad crops and the stringency of the Landlord and Tenant, Road, and other laws, and the insolent and domineering attitude of the whites, all of whom said this was a white man's Government, and the blacks had nothing to do with it, and another said a negro was no more a human being than a horse was a mule. He started for the West to look up a location for a colony of colored people who wanted to leave North Carolina, but on his way he met some colored people in Greencastle, Ind., who said the colonists could do well there. For his own part, however, he would rather live in Hades than in Indiana. According to him, the blacks are looked on as servants by the Southern whites, and are practically denied all representation.

F. J. Lofton (colored), of Kenster, N. C., testified to the good treatment of the colored people by the whites in North Carolina, and stated that white Republicans generally in his county (Lenoir) are opposed to the exodus of the blacks. J. H. Russell, an undertaker from Indianapolis, testified that within a period of two months there had been interred at the public expense from twenty-five to thirty men, women and children from among the colored emigrants who had arrived at Indianapolis from North Carolina. They were all buried as paupers at an average expense to the county of $5.15. From reports brought to him by men in his employ, and from his own observation, he could say there was great destitution among the emigrants in Indianapolis. James E. Baker, of Indianapolis, a Democrat and clerk in the State Auditor's office, testified that he had an interview with a colored emigrant from North Carolina, named Heath, in which he deceived Heath by representing himself as a Republican, and that he induced Heath to make a sworn statement, which was produced and identified by witness. Heath in this statement says, among other things, "We have been instructed to get away from North Carolina by the 1st of next June ('80), so that our numbers will show in the next census."

Scott Ray, editor of the Shelbyville (Ind.) Democrat, testified as follows: "I had a conversation with Henry S. Byers, ex-Chairman of the Republican Central Committee of Shelby county, Jan. 25, in the city of Shelbyville, in the presence of Edward Small and George M. Goulding, two of the leading merchants of the city, in which Byers said: 'There is no disguising the fact, Ray, that the exodus movement of colored men to Indiana is a political movement of the Republican party, as I know it to be a fact. We intend to carry Indiana with the aid of the negro vote, and if the Republican party had taken my advice six years ago they would have set the movement on foot, and brought them here long ago. We intend to bring 8,000 of them into the State in time for them to vote this fall, and will place them in the close Congressional districts. While it is rather expensive, it is cheaper for the party than to be compelled to buy votes on the day of election, as we have always had to do.' I asked him if he was in a position to know whether it was an organized effort of the Republican managers to bring them into the State for political purposes, and he said he was, and then produced a letter with the name of a leading Republican of the State Central Committee printed upon it, but refused to read its contents."

Hughes East, of Indianapolis, identified papers written by himself and subscribed to by two colored emigrants from North Carolina, stating that the latter were induced to come to Indiana by representations of Perry and Williams, the North Carolina agitators, who told them Indiana was a Democratic State, and they wanted emigrants to vote the Republican ticket, because Democrats were using offices for fraud and corruption. Perry, in particular, said: "We want no Democrat negroes, none but strong-headed Republicans, to go to Indiana." East testified further that, in conversation with these and several other emigrants, they all expressed a desire to return to North Carolina.

Gen. M. D. Manson, State Auditor of Indiana, testified that some of the colored emigrants in Indianapolis seem to think that the Democratic State officials have a fund which they can and will use to send emigrants back to North Carolina, so as to get their votes out of the State. On the subject of labor demand, he said there was an abundance of undeveloped agricultural and mining resources in the State, but to develop these both additional capital and labor were needed, and not paupers.

A Dog Bathing-Master.

Our faithful friend Jet, a powerful dog, lived with us on the Navesink Highlands. One summer we had a bright little fellow who, although not in the least vicious, yet had a boy's propensity to destroy, and to injure, and to inflict pain. Master Willie loved Jet dearly, and yet he would persist in torturing the patient dog outrageously, striking hard blows, punching with sharp sticks, and pulling hair cruelly. One summer's afternoon Jet was lying on the front piazza, taking a nap, and Willie came out and assaulted him with a new carriage-whip, which had been left in the hall. Jet knew the child ought not to have the whip, so he went and called the nurse's attention, as he often did when the children were getting into mischief or danger. But the girl did not give heed, as she should have done, and Willie kept on following Jet from place to place, plying the lash vigorously. Finding he was left to deal with the case himself, Jet quietly laid the young one on the floor, carefully took a good grip in the gathers of his little frock, lifted him clear, and gave him a hearty, sound shaking. Then he took up the whip, trotted off to the barn with it, came back, stretched himself out in the shade, and finished his nap. The young gentleman did not interfere with him again, and ever afterward treated him with great consideration.

Nothing delighted the dog more than to go into the water with the young folk, and to see the bathing-suits brought out always put him in the highest spirits. The children called him "the boss of the bathing-ground," and so he was, as he made all hands do just as he pleased. He would take them in and bring them out again, as he thought fit, and there was no use in resisting him, as he could master half-a-dozen at once in the water. No one could go beyond certain bounds, either, under penalty of being brought back with more haste than ceremony. But, within the proper limits, he never tired of helping the bathers to have a good time, frolicking with them, carrying them on his back, towing them through the water, letting them dive off his shoulders, and playing leap-frog.—St. Nicholas.

A European War Thought to be Imminent.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.

There is a feeling of general anxiety among the different legations here over the threatening aspect of affairs in Europe. The dispatches printed this morning from London are regarded as exceedingly significant, since they would not have been made public except to excite feeling against Russia and in support of England. The belief among the legations is that Russia is looking to a cordial understanding with France, and that, as to the latter, the question of war with Germany is one now receiving very serious attention at the hands of those directing the affairs of the republic. They have completed the fortifications of Paris, and they are regarded as impregnable. Their army is ample in numbers, their war-material abundant, and their finances in excellent condition. The chief question about which they are hesitating is their ability to hurry on a war, and at the same time preserve the republic. As indicative of the near approach of trouble in Europe, all the legations have information of large sums being sent here for investment by men of prominence in the affairs of the Continent and by leaders in commercial affairs. Inquiries have also been received as to the probable capacity of our arms manufacture, and as to the surplus of our provisions.

The Pittsburgh Riots.

The authorities of Allegheny county, Pa., finding they could not make the State pay the losses to railroad companies and business men growing out of the Pittsburgh riots of 1877, have been negotiating with the claimants, and thus far the claims have been adjusted thus:

	Original Claim.	Compromise.
Pennsylvania R. R. Co.	$2,612,000.00	$1,600,000.00
Pullman Car Co	76,499.00	55,000.00

AUBURN COURIER.

THEO. REED, ROB. J. LOWRY } EDITORS.

ADOLPHE DE CASSAGNAC, father of Paul de Cassagnac, the celebrated Bonapartist Deputy and duelist, is dead.

SINCE Jan. 1, 1879, pig iron has steadily advanced from $15 and $18 a ton to $35 and $40, and the furnaces are unable to supply the demand.

Come into the garden, Maud,
Put on your new spring hat;
Come into the garden, Maud,
I'm here with my base-ball bat;
Our neighbor's kitten is wafted abroad,
With my club I'll land her in the road.

THE King of the Belgians has conferred the Leopold cross on Rosa Bonheur, the artist. She is the first lady receiving the distinction. The King of Spain also conferred on this distinguished painter an equally high order, never before granted to a lady.

PASSENGERS can now go from New York to San Francisco by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's line for $75. This "cut" is in consequence of the abrogation of the pooling contract with the Pacific railroads. The steamship company also offers to give special freight rates and make contracts for a year to come.

SAMUEL R. LAUREY, a colored lawyer, was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington, he being the fifth colored person who has attained to that privilege. Mr. Laurey is President of a colored academy at Huntsville, Ala. Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood made the motion which led to his admission.

ACCORDING to the last directory published, the population of Memphis is 40,927, as against 43,497 this time last year. The Appeal says that, although the population of the city has slightly decreased during the past year, its trade and commerce have greatly increased—receipts of cotton being 50,000 bales greater than last year, and 6,000 more than in 1877.

THE preparations for a raid on Indian Territory this spring are very formidable. The alleged discovery of silver in the Wichita mountains has increased the desire of the adventurers to seek their fortunes in the forbidden country, and it now looks as though enough desperate men would be found to make the movement a serious affair. Beside the parties organizing in Southern Kansas, several companies have been formed in Kansas City.

IN spite of "hard times" and depressing weather, the English publishers issued nearly 6,000 volumes last year, being 500 more than during the previous year. Of these more than 1,000 were theological works and 1,000 were novels. The intellectual activity of a people which produces more than three books on theology and three works of fiction every week day is past easy comprehension, especially when we consider that a dozen books of other sorts are being turned out the same day.

TO MR. R. G. INGERSOLL's complaint that it costs $12,000,000 per annum to maintain the preachers in the United States, the Central Baptist replies that the lawyers annually cost the people about $70,000,000, and the criminals $40,000,000, and intoxicating liquors $600,000,000. It also reminds the eloquent Colonel that it costs somebody about $20,000 a year—more than any minister gets for his services—to pay for lectures on "Skulls," "Mistakes of Moses," "Thomas Paine," and for pitching into the clergy generally.

THE New York Graphic has a picture representing a mountain range that shows the proportionate size of the wheat markets of the world. The largest mountain is entitled England, and the figures show that in 1879 that country imported 112,000,000 bushels of wheat; Germany comes next with 36,000,000 bushels of wheat; France follows with 28,000,000, and Belgium with 9,000,000. From New York were exported 62,751,905 bushels; Chicago comes next with 33,925,523; Baltimore with 32,152,612; Milwaukee with 21,145,768; Philadelphia with 17,673,542; St. Louis with 16,362,077, and Toledo with 13,550,602, and Detroit comes next with 12,185,403 bushels. After this comes Montreal with over 9,000,000 bushels; Boston with nearly 5,000,000; New Orleans with about 2,500,000. Cleveland and Portland with over 1,000,000 bushels each.

IT is the habit in Scotland, as in America, to sell insurance tickets with railroad tickets, when the traveler desires them. The cost of these insurance tickets, good for one day, is but a penny, and the company agrees to pay a certain sum in case of death within the twenty-four hours, or a certain sum weekly in case of injury. It is rather remarkable that there should not be a single insured person on that fated Dundee train, but so the insurance companies assert. This brings up a suggestion of improvement in the manner of giving tickets for this purpose. There should be some method by which the friends of the deceased could find out whether or not he had been insured. Almost every one on the train that went into the Tay might have been insured, yet there is no way of finding it out. Many of the bodies have been swept out to sea, and if they are ever found it is doubtful whether an insurance ticket on their persons would be decipherable.

MR. JOHN POTTS, of New York, having, by economy and strict attention to business, laid by $500, was tempted to reply to an advertisement promising $20,000 return for an investment of $1,000. He communicated with "Reliable," and found that the business consisted of a new and improved method of breaking a faro bank. Mr. Potts hesitated at first, but finally decided to try the experiment. He visited a gambling house with his partner, "Reliable," and played a mock game, with counters instead of cash, just to find out how it was done. He won $1,000, but it proved the feasibility of the plan. Next night he brought his $500 in cash, but for some reason "the thing didn't work" as it did on the previous evening, and, in an hour or two, his money was gone. He applied for a warrant, but at last accounts had been unable to identify his "Reliable" friend.

THE present state of things in Ireland, says the Chicago Tribune, presents some strange anomalies. One-third of the island is in the jaws of famine, and the people of the United States are publicly and privately contributing not less than $100,000 per week to assuage hunger and prevent starvation to death of the landlords' tenant farmers. And, while this inflow of American charity is going on to alleviate distress and avert death, there is an outflow per week of $1,000,000 worth of animal and vegetable food of Irish production to pay landlords' rents on the farms equitably and rightfully belonging to the occupiers. The Irish farmers are actually at this time selling $1,000,000 worth of food per week to pay such rents to merciless English landlords, while the benevolent people of America are sending over there $100,000 per week to keep these same farmers from eviction and out of the poor-house or paupers' graves! Such is the land-system of Ireland. Stop this outflow of $1,000,000 a week of Irish agricultural food products to pay absentee landlords for the privilege of living in their own country, and the Irish people would want no charity from this or any other country. They would have money themselves to lend or donate to the needy.

The Stupid Boy.

Never set a boy down for a stupid because he does not make a figure at school. Many of the most celebrated men who have ever lived have been set down by some conventional pedagogue as donkeys. One of the greatest astronomers of the age was restored to his father by the village schoolmaster with these encouraging words: "There's no use paying good money for his education. All he wants to do is to lie on the grass on his back and stare at the sky. I'm afraid his mind is wrong." Scientific men have often been flogged for falling into brown studies over their books, and many an artist of the future has come to present grief for drawing all over his copybook and surreptitiously painting the pictures of his geography. Your genius, unless musical, seldom proves himself one in his childhood, and your smug and self-sufficient piece of precocity, who takes all the medals, and is the show scholar of his school, often ends by showing no talent for anything beyond a yardstick. Sir Walter Scott was called stupid as a child, and it was not even considered to his credit that he was fond of "sic trash" as ballads, and could learn them by heart at any time. That boy, who really worries you by being so much unlike his bright brothers, may be the very one who will make you proud and happy some years hence. Take that for your comfort.

A Good Horse.

"Wind," says an old horseman, "is the grand secret of a good horse." Good lungs will cover a multitude of faults, while, on the other hand, perfection of shape and form are useless when the wind is out. The chest, therefore, in all cases, should be large and capacious. It may vary somewhat in shape, according to the service to which the horse is put. If he is apt to be kept for slow work and heavy drawing the chest may be nearly circular in form, because this shape is one for strength and bulk to receive and bear up against the pressure of the collar, while, at the same time, sufficient room is secured for the expansion of the lungs caused by slow, regular work. But, if the chest is circular, let it be at the same time deep, or else the lungs may be cramped. A horse with a shallow chest is worthless for any purpose. The rule then is, for a draught horse, a circular, but deep chest; but, as you pass through the different degrees of speed up to the racer and trotter, the chest will increase in depth, compared to its roundness, until, for the highest rate of speed, you must take a chest as deep as a greyhound, and, at the same time, not lacking in strength.

QUEEN VICTORIA's second son is an incurable fiddler.

FARM NOTES.

DO NOT allow your manure to burn or scald in the winter; turn it over occasionally and it will be prevented.

WITH all the pretensions of the cow to sobriety she generally insists on having a horn or two before breakfast.

VARIOUS plants affect milk. Horse radish has a tendency to prevent coagulation, and wood sorrel will hasten it.

AN advance of 1 cent a pound in the price of butter means nearly $10,000,000 to the total value of production of the country for one year.

TURNIPS are healthful for horses. They should be cut in slices, or what is better, pulped finely and mixed with a little meal and salt. Rutabagas are better than white turnips.

RYE straw is as valuable as the grain in Pennsylvania in the manufacture of paper. With the increased acreage of the season just closed (3,500,000 bushels) the yield is not equal to the demand.

A GREAT deal of superior tobacco was raised in the hilly portions of Ohio and Kentucky last season, and the cheap lands of those districts are rapidly coming into request for growing the weed. Some of the roughest hills produce the finest tobacco.

A CELLAR that is cool, dry and dark, and yet well ventilated, is the best place for preserving potatoes in large quantities. When smaller quantities are to be preserved there is nothing like dry sand. The same may be said of fruits and roots of all sorts.

PLANT tansy at the roots of your plum-trees, or hang branches of the plant on the limbs of the trees, and you will not be annoyed with curculio. An old and successful fruit-grower furnishes the above, and says it is the most successful curculio preventive he ever tried.

MR. J. G. EDWARDS, of England, remarks: "Any man who has seen a turnip deems himself qualified to advise the farmer, and though each man sings to a different tune the burden of the song is the same—that the farmer is in fault and needs setting right."

A CONTEMPORARY thinks if farmers would avoid suddenly cooling the body after great exertions, be careful not to go with wet clothing and wet feet, not to over-eat when in an exhausted condition, and would bathe daily, using much friction, they would have little or no rheumatism.

E. M. WASHBURNE, in speaking of the care of dairy cattle, says: "In the best dairies of North Holland there is but a very small amount of grain fed to the cows or young stock, and of all I have imported I have never had one that would eat grain without teaching, by mixing with hay or roots, or some root they were accustomed to eat."

THE first year a sheep's front teeth are eight in number, and all of equal size. The second year the two middle shed out, and are replaced by two much larger than the others. The third year two very small teeth appear on either side of the eighth. At the end of the fourth year there are six large teeth. The fifth year all the front teeth are large. The sixth year all begin to show signs of wear.

AN Illinois agricultural writer says: "The East and West railroad lines, hoping to get their share of the benefits of the 'boom' in business, have raised freight charges to nearly the old-time formidable proportions. In consequence of this a growl, low and sullen, has begun to make itself heard, and there are those who see the specter of the Granger figured on the dark clouds of a storm now apparently rising in the distant political horizon. With all its follies, and its inconsequential management, it is certain the Grange movement was the means of reforming great abuses in the matter of transportation; and it is possible that it or some similar organization may be needed to force the railroads again into respect for the constitution and obedience to the laws."

HOUSEHOLD ECONOMY.

THINGS TO REMEMBER.

That fish may be scaled much easier by dipping in boiling water about a minute.

That fish may as well be scaled if desired before packing down in salt, though in that case do not scald them.

Salt fish are quickest and best freshened by soaking in sour milk.

That milk which is turned or changed may be sweetened and rendered fit for use again by stirring in a little soda.

That salt will curdle new milk; hence, in preparing milk porridge, gravies, etc., the salt should not be added until the dish is prepared.

That fresh meat after beginning to sour, will sweeten if placed out of doors in the cool over night.

That clear boiling water will remove tea stains and many fruit stains. Pour the water through the stain and thus prevent its spreading over the fabric.

That ripe tomatoes will remove ink and other stains from white cloth; also from the hands

That a teaspoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will aid the whitening process.

That boiled starch is much improved by the addition of a little sperm, or a little salt, or both, or a little gum arabic dissolved.

That beeswax and salt will make your rusty flat irons as clean as glass. Tie a lump of wax in a rag and keep for that purpose. When the irons are hot, rub them first with the wax rag, and then scour with a paper or cloth sprinkled with salt.

That blue ointment and kerosene mixed in equal proportions, and applied to bedsteads, is an unfailing bedbug remedy, and that a coat of whitewash is ditto for the walls of a log house.

That kerosene will soften boots or shoes which have been hardened by water and render them as pliable as new.

That kerosene will make tin kettles bright as new. Saturate a woolen rag and rub with it. It will also remove stains from the clean varnished furniture.

That cool rain water and soda will remove machine grease from washable fabrics.

Every one of these receipts is unfailing. Cut out this slip and place it in a book for reference.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

THE cost of the Hoosac tunnel up to date is $19,523,579.

IN 1878 gold and silver product of Colorado amounted to $8,751,344; during the year just closed it was $25,235,483, which is rather a remarkable increase.

ANALYSIS of a piece of modern English calico: Cotton, 53 per cent.; China clay, 26; starch, 12; fatty matter, 2.5; chloride of magnesium, 2; chloride of zinc, 1.5; chloride calcium, 0.5; moisture, 2.5—100 per cent.

THE Czar of Russia keeps soul and body together with $25,000 a day; the Sultan of Turkey, with $18,000; the Emperor of Austria, with $10,000; the Emperor of Germany, with $8,200; the King of Italy, with $6,400; the King of the Belgians, with $1,643, and Queen Victoria, with $5,000.

THE public debt of France exceeds 26,000,000,000 of francs, on which 1,265,000,000 are paid annually as interest. Divided among 37,000,000 of Frenchmen, this debt, the most colossal in history, gives an average of 700 francs as principal for each inhabitant, and 34 francs interest per annum.

DURING the year 1879 the deaths in New Hampshire of persons who attained the age of 90 years or over were 124, divided by sex into 45 men and 79 women. The ratio was 1 in about 2,566 of the population of the State. The average age of the men was 92 years 7 months and 16 days, and that of the women 93 years 5 months and 16 days. In the whole number the average age was 93 years 1 month and 20 days.

THE following tabular statement will present a proximate idea of the growth of Christianity through all the centuries. The number of believers at the close of each century was as follows:

Century.	About.	Century.	About.
First	500,000	Tenth	50,000,000
Second	2,000,000	Eleventh	70,000,000

THE Congregational Church was organized in 1620, and is now of 259 years' standing in America. The Baptist Church was organized in 1632, and is now 240 years old in the United States. The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1706, and is now of 173 years' standing. The Roman Catholic Church was organized in 1633, and is now 246 years old in America. The Universalist Church was organized in 1785, and is now 94 years old. The first Free-will Baptist Church was organized in 1780.

Wonderful Calculating Boy.

When Bidder was 10 years old he answered in two minutes the following question: What is the interest of £4,444 for 4,444 days at 4½ per cent. per annum? The answer is £2,434 16s 5¼d. A few months later, when he was not 11 years old, he was asked, how long would a cistern 1 mile cube be filling if receiving from a river 120 gallons per minute without intermission? In two minutes he gave the correct answer, 14,300 years, 285 days, 12 hours, and 46 minutes. A year later he divided correctly, in less than a minute, 468,502,413,563 by 6,076. This has been tried with pen and paper, and, after getting an incorrect result in one and a quarter minutes, the mathematician went through the sum again, with correct result (51,629,838 and 5,875 over), in about the same time. At 12 years of age he answered, in less than a minute, the question, If a distance of 9¾ inches is passed over in 1 second of time, how many inches will be passed over in 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 55 seconds? Much more surprising, however, was his success, when 13 years old, in solving the question, What is the cube root of 897,339,273,974,002,153? He obtained the answer in two and one-half minutes, viz., 964,537. It is thought that not one arithmetician in a thousand would get out this answer correctly, at a first trial, in less than a quarter of an hour. No date is given to the following case: "The question was put by Sir William Herschel, at Slough, near Windsor, to Master Bidder, and answered in one minute: Light travels from the sun to the earth in 8 minutes, and, the sun being 98,000,000 of miles off (of course this is quite wrong, but sixty years ago it was near enough to the accepted value), if light would take 6 years and 4 months, traveling at the same rate, from the nearest fixed star, how far is that star from the earth, reckoning 365 days and 6 hours to each year, and 28 days to each month?" The correct answer was quickly given to this pleasing question, viz., 40,633,740,000,000 miles. On one occasion, we learn, the proposer of a question was not satisfied with Bidder's answer. The boy said the answer was correct, and requested the proposer to work his sum over again. During the operation Bidder said he felt certain he was right, for he had worked the question in another way, and before the proposer found that he was wrong and Bidder right the boy told the company that he had calculated the question by a third method.

Old Folks.

Do the young people ever think that they will be old, that they will soon feel that the grasshopper is a burden and fear in the way? Only a few short years ago that aged man and feeble woman were young, strong and full of life; their loving hearts were gushing with tenderness and care for the little ones who now stand in their places. Do not jostle that aged couple out of your pathway, but rather lift them with tender care over the rough, declining road. You may have forgotten how carefully they kept your tender feet from stumbling, and with what care they watched your advancing steps. But they have not forgotten, and the time will come when you will be forcibly reminded of it by the love you have for your own little ones. Will they ever hand you the same bitter cup to drink that you pour out for that aged father and stricken mother? Verily, "with what measure ye meet, it shall be measured to you again." Think of the anxious days and nights your mother has watched by your sick-bed; remember her loving tears, her patience and long-suffering with your fretfulness, and then let the blush of shame dye your brow, that you should be impatient or unkind to her, now that she is old. Old folks are such a trial! Yes, they know it; they feel it; and so will you be such a trial to your children in the days that will surely come—ay, and you will remember, too?

The Ruffianism of Old Dublin.

Tradition tells how Fighting Fitzgerald, an exquisite and duelist of the last century, dealt with the "bucks," a plague then infesting the streets of Dublin, and, indeed, the streets of every town in Ireland. These "bucks" were half-bred young fellows of some means and high animal spirits, whose sole occupation consisted in making town-life intolerable to quiet people. Parliament was more than once compelled to frame penal enactments with the view of restraining their peculiar ruffianism; but, as there was no properly-constituted police to enforce them, these statutes were of small effect.

Among the tricks of the Dublin buck was this: One of them would take his stand in the middle of a crossing on a dirty day, and, drawing his sword, thrust everybody who wanted to pass into the mud. It was a common thing to see half a dozen or more of these unpleasant sentries lining a leading thoroughfare all ready to afford each other support. Nor were they content with merely obstructing the passage. They knocked off hats, ripped up garments and pricked the limbs of the wearers with the points of their weapons, and broke ribald jests on them the while—to the vast amusement of the ragamuffins who used to collect in the vicinity. If any one turned on one of these bullies the rest would rush up and form a circle round him; then, seizing him by the collar and the arms, they would prick him about the legs until they considered him punished sufficiently.

Fitzgerald proposed to some of his brother exquisites and fire-eaters that they should clear the streets of these pests. It was just the sort of proposal to suit such daring spirits, and an association was immediately formed to carry it out. Like their leader, they were consummate swordsmen, and dandies of the first water—the dandy being in all essentials the antipodes of the buck—a distinction which people who write about the Ireland of the past are very apt to forget.

The association set to work most heartily, and in this way: Whenever a fine afternoon followed a showery morning they would sally forth in knots of four or five, each being followed by a lusty valet carrying an oak sapling. On reaching the haunts of the bucks the servants kept the rabble off while the exquisites did the work they had undertaken. For a couple of months few days passed without three or four affrays between the bucks and dandies, in which the former invariably came off second best. Ere long the mainstay of the bucks, the mob, turned against them too. This meant that defeat was sure to be followed by hooting and pelting with mud and stones. Then the pleasant pastime of blocking the thoroughfares in broad daylight was abandoned.

Served Him Right.

A Herkimer county (N. Y.) farmer asserts that he has been outrageously swindled by dealers in counterfeit money. He sent $100 to one of them, and received by express the customary box of sawdust. Then he went to New York, determined to attend personally to the business. He bargained for $1,000 in bad bills, and was allowed to examine the package, for which he paid $100; but when he got on the cars to return home with his purchase he looked into the bundle and found that it contained only worthless paper. An exchange had been effected before his very eyes. Not only had he lost $200, but also the opportunity of paying out the counterfeit money at a cattle sale, as he had intended.

Pistols as Wedding Presents.

Scene in New York. A gentleman enters a gunsmith's shop and asks to see a pistol.

"Here is a pretty family one."

"A family one! How is that?"

"Certainly. It has six chambers, you see. Two of the balls are for your wife, two for the destroyer of your domestic happiness and two for yourself. It is the latest style, sir, and all the rage. I have sold hundreds of them for wedding presents."—Paris Figaro.

MAGGIE MITCHELL, in writing to the Peoria (Ill.) Transcript, says: "I see by your paper and others in Peoria, that my age is being discussed quite freely. I am in no way ashamed of my age—it is 44 years. I was born in New York city, Sept. 10, 1836, and started in my professional career in the old Park Theater, in that city, in the winter of 1850."

CURIOUS AND INTERESTING.

VACCINATION.—Vaccination is becoming general in China. One of the most serious objections to it yet remaining is curious. Chinese mammas are unwilling to allow the arms of their daughters to be scratched with a lancet, because, unless a Chinese girl has a few marks on her face giving evidence that she has passed through small-pox, she is considered as lacking one of the chief qualifications of a marriageable maiden. The vaccination scar is still hardly deemed a sufficient promise of future immunity from the disease by the Benedicts of the Flowery Land.

GOOD COFFEE.—In proportion to the quantity consumed, so little coffee is imported into this country from Guatemala, Costa Rica, Java, Rio Janeiro and Mocha that it is safe to say not one-third of our coffee drinkers ever saw a cup of genuine coffee. Old Government Java and Mocha mixed in the proportion of one-third of the Arabian berry to two parts of Java is the "ton" among connoisseurs. This should be roasted and ground at home, and not a single berry be allowed to burn; then the coffee should be produced by straining, or better, filtering. Death is a mild form of punishment for a cook who boils a refreshment which is at once bread, meat, whisky, and honey. Milk, if used, should be rich cream, and the sugar assimilates more readily if cut into pure, snowy, exact squares.

THE SUN'S DISTANCE.—The sun is supposed to be 93,000,000 miles from the earth. A ray of light is estimated to travel from that body to the earth in eight and one-third minutes. This does not appear to be a very long time, but then we must recollect that light travels at the rate of 192,500 miles a second. A body traveling with the velocity of sound, which is only 1,125 feet per second, would require over fourteen years to reach the sun; and even a cannon ball which is sent from a gun with a velocity of 1,600 feet per second, if it should continue at the same uniform speed, would be ten years in performing the journey. The planet Neptune, the most distant one in the solar system, is, however, thirty times as far from the sun as the earth is, and therefore the light of the sun occupies over four hours in traveling to that body, and a cannon-ball from thence would take 300 years to reach the sun.

WHAT THE MICROSCOPE REVEALS.—Lewinbeck tells of an insect seen with a microscope of which only 27,000,000 would equal a mite. Insects of various kinds may be seen in the cavities of a grain of sand. Mold is a forest of beautiful trees, with branches, leaves and fruit. Butterflies are fully feathered. Hairs are hollow tubes. The surface of our bodies is covered with scales like a fish; a single grain of sand would cover 150 of those scales, and yet each scale would cover 500 pores. Through the narrow opening the perspiration forces itself like water through a sieve. The mites take 500 steps a second. Each drop of stagnant water contains a world of animated beings, swimming with as much liberty as whales in the sea. Each leaf has a colony of insects grazing on it like cows in a meadow.

THE AVERAGE AGES OF ANIMALS.—The average of cats is 15 years; of squirrels and hares, 7 or 8 years; rabbits, 7; a bear rarely exceeds 20 years; a dog lives 20 years, a wolf 20, a fox 14 to 16; lions are long lived, the one by the name of Pompey living to the age of 70. Elephants have been known to live to the age of 400 years. When Alexander the Great had conquered Porus, King of India, he took a great elephant which had fought valiantly for the King, and named him Ajax, dedicated him to the sun, and let him go with this inscription: "Alexander, the son of Jupiter, dedicated Ajax to the sun." The elephant was found with this inscription 350 years after. Pigs have been known to live to the age of 20, and the rhinoceros to 20; a horse has been known to live to the age of 62, but average 25 or 30; camels sometimes live to the age of 100; stags are very long lived; sheep seldom exceed the age of 10; cows live about 15 years. Cuvier considers it probable that whales sometimes live 1,000 years. The dolphin and porpoise attain the age of 30; an eagle died at Vienna at the age of 104; ravens have frequently reached the age of 100; swans have been known to live to the age of 300. Mr. Materton has the skeleton of a swan that attained the age of 200. Pelicans are long lived. A tortoise has been known to live to the age of 107 years.

BIBLE FACTS.—The learned Prince of Grenada, heir to the Spanish throne, was imprisoned in the Place of Skulls, Madrid. After thirty-three years in this living tomb he wrote in his Bible the following: In the Bible the word Lord is found 1,853 times, the word Jehovah 5,855 times, and the word reverend but once, and that in the 9th verse of the CXIth Psalm. The 8th verse of the CXVIIth Psalm is the middle verse of the Bible. The 9th verse of the VIIIth chapter of Esther is the longest verse; 35th verse, XIth chapter of St. John is the shortest. In the CVIIth Psalm four verses are alike, the 8th, 15th, 21st, and 31st. Each verse of the CXXXVIth Psalm ends alike. No names or words with more than six syllables are found in the Bible. The XXXVIIth chapter of Isaiah and XIXth chapter of 2d Kings are alike. The word girl occurs but once in the Bible, and that in the 3d verse and IIId chapter of Joel. There are found in both books of the Bible 3,586,483 letters, 773,693 words, 31,373 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books. The XXVIth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles is the finest chapter to read. The most beautiful chapter in the Bible is the XXIIId Psalm. The four most inspiring promises are John XIVth chapter and 2d verse, John VIth chapter and 37th verse, St. Matthew XIth chapter and 28th verse, and XXXVIIth Psalm, 4th verse. The 1st verse of the LXth chapter of Isaiah is the one for the new convert. All who flatter themselves with vain boastings of their perfectness should learn the VIth chapter of Matthew.

FRUIT HOUSE PRICES!

IMMENSE STOCK OF GOODS FOR 1880.

No Advance on Teas, Coffees, Syrups, Sugars or Tobaccos.

All of these goods, in consequence of the increased demand, have advanced in the east, but we were fortunate in laying in a full supply when the prices were way down and our customers shall have the benefit of our purchases at old prices.

TEAS! TEAS! TEAS!

The consumption of TEAS the last six months has been double to what it has been since the panic; this, coupled with the short tea crop, created a great speculation in them, so much so that some grades have advanced 20 to 30 cents per pound, but our method of purchasing is direct of the importers, thereby saving the profits of the speculator and jobber, and enables us to still continue to sell to our customers at the same low prices as last year.

More Exodus Evidence.

Before the senate exodus committee the examination of M. T. Lewman, sheriff at Greencastle, Ind., was concluded. He testified in reply to questions by Mr. Voorhees, that he met and had an interview with a colored man named Heath, who came in a mail car from Washington to Greencastle, over the Vandalia road. The mail route agent's name was Reynolds. Heath told the witness that the people on the car treated him kindly. Heath was trying to find a location for colored emigrants, and told the witness that his object in the first place was to get to Kansas, but at Washington, Adams, the secretary of the emigrant aid society, asked him to stop at Indianapolis. He had letters to Judge Martindale and Colonel Halloway, prominent Indiana republicans. One reason for the colored people leaving North Carolina was to better their condition; and another reason was that their friends in Washington desired as many of them as possible, to get out of North Carolina and into Indiana before the census was taken, about May 1, so as to decrease the representation of North Carolina and increase that of Indiana. Ten thousand intended to come. Heath supposed when he was making these statements that the witness was a republican. He said that the republicans had proposed to pay half the expenses of the trip. The witness could not remember the mention of any name but that of Adams. He met Heath at the depot when he came in on the train, and representing himself as a republican, got into a conversation with him. He told Heath the republicans wanted a good many negroes to come to Indiana; Heath said there was no doubt they could get all they wanted, but it would be necessary to pay half their expenses, because those that had horses would not leave home, and those without horses could not afford the expense. The next morning the witness met Mr. Bridges, a democrat, who said he had seen Heath and informed him he (Heath) had fallen into the hands of a democrat instead of a republican, the night before. Heath thereupon hurriedly left town. Some of the negroes desired to return home. Heath had handed the witness three slips of paper. At Mr. Voorhees' request the witness read what was on the slips, as follows: "Postmaster Langsdale and Mr. Clay (colored) at Greencastle, Putnam county, on the Terre Haute railroad. Provide for this gentleman. More are coming." On the back: "Holloway, P. M." "Union Depot mail office, Reynolds." "J. M. Adams, 1,338 V. street N. W."

It is necessary for a sheriff to dissimulate in order to obtain information from suspicious characters. The dissatisfaction in the county is not confined to democrats, but is felt by many republicans, especially among the laboring class. No objection would be made to self supporting emigrants. All the republican papers that the witness had read condemned the committee and approved of the exodus.

Thomas Mills (Republican), of Indianapolis, testified that he remarked to "the boys" when the North Carolina colored people first began to arrive at Indianapolis, "We want 20,000 bucks, and no women and children."

Mr. Voorhees—You wanted them to vote?

Witness—Yes, we wanted them to vote.

Mr. Voorhees—Well that's a square answer. You thought if you had them you could politically "slay" us?

Witness—Yes, we thought if we had them we could get away with you, everlastingly. [Laughter.]

Mr. Voorhees—But they brought a good many women and children with them

Witness—Yes, they overdid the thing in women and children, but we thought it would be a good thing to settle them around on cheap lands.

Mr. Voorhees—In close counties?

Witness—Well, yes, in close counties. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Voorhees—State whether these views which you have given so frankly are shared by your party in Indiana.

Witness replied that he thought they were to a great extent concurred in by individual members of the party, but he did not know of any party organization or party efforts to draw negroes to Indiana. He believed the colored people hadn't a fair chance to vote, or at least were likely to be "counted out" in North Carolina, and it was only a right to give them a chance in Indiana. Some of these immigrants still remain in Indianapolis, waiting for the season or farm labor to open, but all those who have gone to the rural districts have found work.

The following advertisments are taken from a San Francisco contemporary:

"The gentleman who sat down on a cream pie in a Market street car, is known to the lady who had just purchased it, and even though he may have no regard for the hungry orphans for whom it was destined, he is urged at once to remit $1.50 and the expense of this advertisment to the business office of this paper to save the exposure which will follow of his disgusting conduct."

Right underneath it this Janus of a journal evidently accepts the money of the other side, as the subjoined will testify:

"If the slightly intoxicated lady who allowed a gentleman to spoil a $10 pair of beaver pants by placing a lot of slush wrapped up in a paper on the seat he was about to occupy, does not immediatly remit that amount to the care of A. B. at this office, a full account of the affair will shortly be given to the press."

Hughes East, of Indianapolis, identified papers written by himself and subscribed to by two colored emigrants from North Carolina, stating the latter were induced to come to Indiana by the representations of Perry and Williams, the North Carolina agitators, who told them Indiana was a democratic state, and they wanted the emigrants to vote the republican ticket, because the democrats were using offices for fraud and corruption. Perry, in particular, said we want no democrat negroes—none but strong-hearted republicans—to go to Indiana. East testified farther, that in a convention with these and several other emigrants, they all expressed a desire to return to North Carolina. General M. D. Mason, a prominent democrat from Indianapolis, and state auditor of Indiana, was the next witness. He testified that some of the colored emigrants in Indianapolis seemed to think the democratic state officials have a fund which they can and will use to send emigrants back to North Carolina, so as to get their votes out of the state. On the subject of the labor demand, he said there was abundance of undeveloped agricultural and mining resources in the state, but to develop both additional capital and labor were needed, and not paupers such as had been dumped into the state from North Carolina.

Special Announcmnt.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have made arrangements with the publishers of the STATE SENTINEL which enable us to make the following very liberal offer:

To all persons who pay their subscription account to date, we will send the COURIER and WEEKLY SENTINEL one year for $2.50 in advance. In addition to this we will make each subscriber a present of "THE LAW OF THE FARM," by Jas. B. McCrellis, of the Indiana bar. This valuable phamphlet ought to be in the hands of every farmer in the state. The work embraces the following subjects:

1st. How to buy a farm.

2nd. How far the farm extends, or its proper boundaries.

3rd What the deed of a farm includes.

4th The farmer's rights in the road.

5th As to farm fences.

6th As to estray and trespassing animals.

7th The farmer's liabilities for his animals.

8th Of dogs—the farmer's liability for and protection against.

9th Of water rights and drainage.

10th Of trespassing on the farm.

11th The rights of adjoining proprietors to fruit and other trees on and near boundary lines.

The INDIANA WEEKLY STATE SENTINEL is an eight-page paper, (the same as the COURIER) and will contain a supplement of two additional pages about half of the time. It is the recognized organ of the democracy of Indiana, and will always be found full of news of a general character. Its editorials present strong argument in favor of economy and against class legislation, and its agricultural department is adapted to the wants of every farmer.

Remember that the $2.50 must be paid in advance, and the COURIER subscription account must be paid to date, in order to secure this liberal offer. tf.

WHAT MINISTER DID THIS?

Marrying a Widower of Forty-Five to a Child of Twelve.

Princess Annie, Somerset county, Md., Feb. 11.—The residents of this county are in an intense state of indignation and excitement over the discovery made to-day that Sidney Shores, a wealthy farmer, aged 45 years, residing near Danes Quarter, had secretly married his stepdaughter, a child of 12 years, who is also his first cousin. Shores is reputed to be worth nearly $100,000, and has lived in good style on a farm of several hundred acres near Dames for nearly fifteen years. He was always considered a man of rather wild habits, but has been in good standing in the county. On the 12th of last December his wife died, leaving one child, Gussie, a daughter by her former husband, Capt. Samuel Shores, an Uncle of Sidney. After his wife's death Sidney became still more irregular in his habits. This gave rise to many rumors reflecting on his character which have since been verified.

Shores lived alone with his young stepdaughter and his servants, and it was not until a month or two that any suspicion of his feelings toward the child were entertained by the neighbors. Gussie is a small brunette, of modest bearing, and in her manners and action there is nothing to indicate that she is more forward than children usually are at her age. At length several ladies, who had formerly been intimate with his wife, went to Shores and asked to be given charge of Gussie, but they were roughly refused, and ordered out of the house. A few days later, evidently fearing to provoke public comment, Shores sent the child to a school on Deals island, where she remained until last Thursday. On that day he went to the school and informed the teacher that he was going to take the child home. He had her clothing packed up and later in the day left in company with her. The following day he brought her to this place and applied to several clergymen to marry them, but was peremptorily refused. The child at the time expressed her willingness to take the step, but as she was evidently unaware of the nature of the relation desired by her stepfather, her statement had no effect in inducing the clergymen to perform the ceremony. Then Shores, who had previously obtained a marriage license, applied to a clergyman in Mount Vernon, who consented to marry them. After the marriage Shores returned to his home with his child wife, where he now lives. Shores has not been seen since the wedding, and his young bride has also been kept carefully secluded. The servants say that their master and Gussie do not see any one.

Last night it was proposed to organize a company to go to the house and take the child away by force, if necessary. The advice of the cooler residents in the neighborhood, however, prevailed, and the newly-married couple were undisturbed. Efforts are being made to have Shores arrested, although the authorities are at a loss to know on what ground to take him into custody. While the law has not been actually violated, the feeling excited is such that unless the authorities take speedy action the indignant farmers may take the law into their own hands, in which event it will undoubtedly go hard with Shores.

Shores is well connected in the state, and served in the war as a Union soldier. He was at Fort Sumter during the bombardment, and a story is current attributing to him a most remarkable act of bravery in connection with that memorable event. It is said that on the night before the fort capitulated, as he was standing in one of the rooms of the fort with several of his companions, a shell flew through an embrazure in the wall and rolled at his feet with the fuse slowly burning. There was a general scamper on all sides, the men running into the adjoining apartments to escape the explosion. In the rush one of them left open the door of one of the apartments on the inner side of the fort, and as they all stood back awaiting the explosion, which was momentarily expected, Shores saw a little girl step through the open door into the apartment where the burning shell was lying. The girl was a daughter of one of the soldiers, who had come to visit with her mother, and had been unable to leave the fort owing to the attack. She had escaped from the care of her mother, and was wandering about in a bewildered manner. As soon as she saw the burning shell she slowly approached it, when Shores sprang into the room, seized her, and bore her through the door into the adjoining apartment. Shores then turned, and, seizing the shell, ran to the opening in the wall and threw it out just as it exploded with terific force, shattering the heavy mason work, but without injuring the daring mad.

MASONIC EMBLEMS.

Discoveries Under the Egyptian Obelisk Described.

[New York Herald Cable Special.]

ALEXANDRIA, Jan. 22.—With respect to the Masonic discoveries under the Obelisk, it is a fact that on removing the pedestal of the obelisk there were found:

First.—A Masonic square of red syenite granite, the long section being eight feet six inches long, seventeen inches broad, twenty-five inches thick, and the shorter section measuring from the outer angle four feet three inches by twenty inches. The mason's square is near the northeasterly corner of the foundation, parallel with the easterly side of the foundation.

Second.—A pure white stone representing an apron, and situated under the end of the section.

Third.—Under the apron a perfect altar of red granite.

Fourth.—Toward the corner of the foundation opposite the angle of the mason's square—that is, toward the southeasterly corner of the foundation—is a red granite rough altar.

Fifth.—Between these two altars is a mason's spoon-shaped iron trowel, of ordinary size, totally oxydized.

All five emblems are in their proper position. They rest on a foundation of yellowish drab limestone. Surrounding the foundation on all sides, and forming part of it, are three steps, all of stone. The foundation, together with the steps, were found firmly together and very well preserved in iron cased in lead. Other stones in the foundation bear curious marks and cuttings, not hieroglyphics, which may be masonic, but none here are able to decide. All the stones in the foundation will be replaced in New York exactly as they were discovered.

Confirmation of the Truth of Their Discovery Under the Obelisk.

[Herald Alexandria (Egypt) Special.]

Dr. Franton, a highly instructed mason, has finished a careful examination of the foundations of the obelisk, and confirms Lieut.-Com. Gorringe's discovery of the masonic emblems, which established the relations of many ancient Egyptian monuments. Dr. Fanton declares that the Hiram version that masonry originated with the construction of Solomon's temple, is disproved by the revelations of the foundations of the obelisk.

The masonic emblem of life and the sun beyond doubt is identical of the Egyptian God Osiris. This proves that masonry originated with the construction of the Pyramids, or at least with a far remoter period than the construction of the foundation of the obelisk. The number of blocks comprising the foundation, as well as their position and arrangement, indicate that the ancients were familiar with the higher degrees of masonry—at least as high as the eighteenth degree. Many peculiar emblems not understood by Lieutenant Commodore Gorringe were fully explained by Dr. Fanton, from a masonic point of view.

This discovery furnishes a clew to other important discoveries, not only under the fallen obelisk, but also in other parts of Egypt, rendering probable a solution of the mystery of the construction of the pyramids.

Among the discoveries was found a perfect cube, and also emblems of all masonic foundations.

Lieut. Com. Gorringe, who is a member of a masonic fraternity, entirely approves Dr. Fanton's explanation, and gives this dispatch his entire approbation

A Quebec merchant has experimented successfully in shipping beef to England in the carcass. The animals are beheaded, their entrails are taken out, and the bodies pressed into a small compass and frozen. The hide is not removed until the voyage is over, and it is claimed that the meat is superior in appearance to other imported beef, and keeps longer.

A woman of brains suggests that girls no matter how wealthy their families, should be brought up to some occupation whereby they can earn an honest living in the hour of need. How many parents are bringing up their daughters in this way? By practice, if not by precept, every daughter of well-to-do parents is inculcated with the idea that her proud and inevitable destiny is to be some man's wife and be supported by him in easy idleness. And this very thing causes many a man who has been so unfortunate as to have become the life partner of such a daughter, to look back upon a wasted and misspent life.

Checkers.

Such a thing as a checker-board was never known in Mr. Grattan's house, says the Detroit Free Press; he and his aged partner had managed to pass the long evenings very pleasantly, and he supposed they were happy enough, until a friend from the east paid them a flying visit, and asserted over and over again that the game of checkers was not only the rage there, but it served to quicken the perceptive faculties, enlarge the mind, and render the brain more active. After giving the subject due thought, Mr. Grattan walked down town and purchased a checker board, and when evening came he surprised his good old wife by briging it in from the woodshed, and saying:

"Well, Martha, we'll have a game or two before we go to the social. I expect to beat you all to flinders, but you won't care."

"Of course not, and if I beat you, why, you won't care," she replied.

They sat down, and he claimed the first move. She at once objected, but when he began to grow red in the face she yielded and he led off. At the fourth move she took a man, chuckling as she raked him in.

"I don't see anything to grin at," [illegible] as he moved a man backward.

"Here! you can't move that way!" she cried out.

"I can't eh! Perhaps I never played checkers before you were born!"

She saw a chance to jump two more men, and gave in the point, but as she moved he cried out:

"Put them men right back there! I've concluded not to move backward, even if Hoyle does permit it."

She gave in again, and when he jumped a man her nose grew red, and she cried out—

"I didn't mean to move there; I was thinking of the social."

"Can't help the social, Martha, we must go by Hoyle."

In about two minutes she jumped two men and went into the king row, shouting, "crown him! crown him! I've got a king!"

"One would think by your childish actions that you never played a game before," he growled out.

"I know enough to beat you."

"You do, eh? Some folks are awful smart."

"And some folks ain't," she snapped out, as her king captured another man.

"What in thunder are you jumping that way for?"

"A king can jump any way."

"No he can't."

"Yes he can."

"Don't talk back to me, Martha Grattan; I was playing checkers when you was in your cradle."

"I don't care, I can jump two whichever way you move."

He looked down at the board, saw such was the case, and roared out: "You've moved twice to my once"

"I haven't."

"I'll take my oath you have! I can't play against any such blackleg practices."

"Who's a blackleg?"

"You not only cheated, but you tried to lie out of it!"

Board and checkers fell between them. He could get on his hat quicker than she could her bonnet, and that was the only reason why he got out of the house first. A Woodward grocer found him sitting on a basket of cranberries at the door as he was closing up for the night, and asked him if he was waiting for his wife to come along.

"Well, not exactly; I stopped here to feel in my pocket for the key to the barn. I shall sleep on the hay to-night, and see if it wont cure this cold in my head."

"Sir G. B. Green Bridges, Bart., Boultibrook, Wales," was a registry at the Occidental hotel, San Francisco. The man who thus wrote himself down was, according to the account from which this item is derived, of good looks and polite address. The wealth and fashion of San Francisco clusters on Nob Hill, and to Nob Hill Sir G. B. Green Brigdes, Bart, was cordially welcomed. He flourished for a month as a pet of the ladies and a boon companion of the gentlemen before anybody thought of consulting "Burke's peerage." This was finally done by a cynical newspaper reporter, whose suspicion was aroused by hearing him talk inaccurately about London club life. He finally confessed that his name was plain George Green, a music teacher from Canada. His excuse for this imposture was that he had been lured into it by the fulsome attentions of the ladies, his original intention, in registering as he did, being simply to get better accommodations at the hotel.

Bob Ingersoll on Stingy Men.

I despise a stingy man. I don't see how it is possible for a man to die worth $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 in a city full of want, when he meets almost every day the withered hands of beggary and the white lips of famine. How a man can withstand all that and hold in the clutch of his hand $20,000,000 or $30,000,000, is past my comprehension. I do not see how he can do it. I should not think he could do it any more than he could keep a pile of lumber when hundreds and thousands were drowning in the sea. Do you know, I have known men who would trust their wives with their hearts and homes, but not with their pocketbooks—not with a dollar. When I see a man of that kind I always think he knows which is most valuable. Think of making your wife a beggar! Think of her asking you every day for a dollar or two dollars, or to humbly beg for 50 cents! "What did you do with that two dollars I gave you?" Think of having a wife afraid of you! What kind of children do you expect to have with a beggar and a coward for a mother? Oh, I tell you, if you have but a dollar in the world, and you have got to spend it, spend it like a king; spend it as though it were a dry leaf and you the owner of unbounded forests. That's the way to spend it. I had rather be a beggar and spend my last dollar like a king, than to be a king and spend my money like a beggar. If it's got to go, let it go. Get the best you can for your family—and look as well as you can yourself. When you used to go courting how nice you looked! Ah, your eye was bright, your step was light, and you just put on the best you could. Do you know that it is insufferable egotism in you to suppose that a woman is going to love you always, looking as bad as you can. Think of it! Any woman on earth will be true to you forever when you do your level best.

"Going to Vote?" "Yes, I Be," and She Did.

[Boston Correspondence Milwaukee Sentinel.]

Some funny things have come to me from the late municipal election, a memorable one, since then women first cast a ballot in Massachusetts. Mrs. Henrietta T. Walcott, who is an officer of the association and a very active worker, of fine social position and a woman who has much executive ability, was selected to see that all the registered women in wards 11 and 12 voted. At 2 o'clock all but two or three had put in an appearance, and fearing that these might fail, she took a carriage and drove to their residences.

At the first house, a little bit of a place in an obscure street, she was informed that the lady she was in search of had just left the house, but would be back directly, and was invited to await her return. She found the house scrupulously clean; the parlor was ornamented with the usual pieces of hair work and preserved flowers, while portraits of Moody and Sankey occupied a place of honor on the wall. Presently the object of her search entered, a tiny little morsel of a woman, so short that when she sat down on the sofa her feet did not touch the floor. She was a cherry-faced little body, but with a decision of manner that was ludicrous in one so small. Mrs. Wolcott explained her errand and asked, "Are you going to vote?"
